

START

OAKLAND REPUBLICAN

JANUARY 7, 1879

TO

DECEMBER 27, 1879

MISSING: NONE

MdBE

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

OLD CHRISTMAS.

Prepare the cheer, the festive cheer,
Old Christmas! let us draw near;
His days are short, his nights are long,
Yet joy's the burden of his song.

With holly wreath his brow is bound,
And though his hair is white, his eyes
Twinkle with pleasure as he glances
To the children with their merry faces.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves,
The holly leaves on the holly leaves.

Dear, little old Grandpa, in past time
We hailed thee with a merry rhyme;
The pretty looks, the smiling face,
The shrill laugh of girls and boys.

"Don't that beat all? Why, the table looks like a picture, child! Why! I thought that was all gone; and some of mother's quince sauce! Poor Bill! how he did love quince sauce, and so did Benny."

"There's there's a luck log for you!"
he cried, beamingly. "Task,"
"heats the stars all hollow." Then he stood off, alternately contemplating the ruddy flames and the cheerful table.

"I do no what's the matter with me," he said. "Somehow I feel like a boy to-night. Seems if the fire never did look so pleasant. I can remember how me and Marcy—your Uncle Marcy, dead long ago—used to sit at this same fire-place—it was the kitchen then—and watch the sparks crowd together on the black jamb, and tell stories. Wonder what makes me think of it to-night?
Maybe I'm going to him."

"O, father!" and Lizzy was clinging to him, her pretty curly head shining against his old coat-sleeve. "You shan't talk that way, father. Just go on thinking you're a boy again, and hang up your stocking to-night, for the sake of old times."

"Will you put an apple and some nuts in the stocking for me, father? I don't want to go to bed without them." Lizzy's face was all smiles. "Well, I'll
see. Bless us if there isn't mother!" he almost shouted, as silver locks and a sweet face appeared at the door. "Why, old lady, I never was so glad to see anybody before. So Ann's better, is she? and you thought you'd keep Christmas with your old man? Bless your dear heart!"

Lizzy had taken off the gray silk bonnet and was looking over her shoulder
at her mother in the old arm-chair, before Mrs. Rolf noticed the extra splendor of the tea-table.

"It's for the minister, my dear."
We've got a five minister up stairs—caught him for Christmas. The deacon sent him, he's so full, and glad enough was I, though he didn't make up for your old lady. Why, here he is!"

The young man had entered softly, and now stood by the door, like one in a dream.

"Come in, sir. This is mother.
Didn't expect such good luck, for she went to see our sick girl. I—why, what's the matter, sir?"

The question was not untimely, for he stood by the door and had turned almost ghastly white, while the muscles of his mouth worked.

"Cold, ain't you, sir?" asked the farmer, going toward him. "Come up to the fire, Lizzy, turn him a cup of hot tea. I've noticed that ministers ain't generally a warm-blooded people
—not like us, I mean, who chop and hew, and plant and dig."

By this time the young man had nearly recovered his composure. He took his seat at the table, asked a blessing; and this time his voice sounded not only musical, but tremulous, as if there were tears very near it. But no tears came, and Lizzy, who sat behind the tea-urn and, I fear, thought of nothing but the minister, who, in his turn, seemed to have eyes only for that tender, placid face, of whose temples shone the silver curls of a beautiful old age, the face of the dear mother.

"Hope you've enjoyed your tea, sir,"
said the farmer, as they drew up to the fire, and Mother Rolf took her knitting needles from the little checkered bag
on the small stand in the corner.

"Bless me, it does me so much good to see mother here! I'm that lonesome when she's gone that I feel like a feather floating, I don't know where."
"Father is so used to me," murmured Mother Meadows, smiling, while the fire gave the bloom and the look of youth to her aged face.

"Well, yes, if forty years together makes folks used to each other. You see one of our children, Ann, is delicate, and mother has to go there sometimes; for I tell you, after all, there's no nurse like mother. The Lord blessed us in daughters, sir. We've got three."

"I did hope to have a son in my old age, to take care of things generally.
Or if they'd become something besides farmers, I wouldn't 'a' cared. It would
'a' set me up wonderful, I expect, to have a minister for a son-in-law. Perhaps he'd be a good deal for me. I'm not the one to blame the Lord for my own folly."

"My boys were fine boys, but I didn't know how to treat 'em. I was brought up pretty much alone, and didn't know boy nature. Bill and Benny were bright little fellows; handsome, too; like my old lady there; but I spoiled 'em by being overstrict."

"It makes me ache sometimes to think how I went on with those boys.
I tried to head him, but I broke him, sir.
He was quiet enough, but too fond of his way. The other was more gentle, and I had great hope of him. Mother, here, she used to try to soften my hard ways, but I had my own ideas about
governing, and would carry them out if I died for it. The stick first, the stick
last, and the stick always."

"There is a better way," said the visitor.

"No doubt of that, sir. Why, do you know when they boys was planting with me, the minute they'd begin to talk, I'd stop 'em. No talk while at work—that's my motto. No wonder they rebelled; no wonder they hated me."

"They didn't hate you father," came from the corner of the fire-place, with mild emphasis.

"I'm afraid they did, old lady, and I can't say I wonder they did. They loved each other, them two boys. If one was whipped, and that was generally Bill,
the other would stick to him through thick and thin. I've known little Benny to get on his knees to me for his ways, but I had my own ideas about
governing, and would carry them out if I died for it. The stick first, the stick
last, and the stick always."

"And Benny," asked the stranger,
"what became of him?"

"Ah, sir, Christmas is something sad to me. Benny was growing up to be our joy and pride—seventeen years old, sir, a fine, manly fellow—when he was brought home, five years ago today, by three men. In this room they brought him, sir, stark and dripping,
on this very night as it were, a weary,
weary Christmas that it was, with his dead body in the next room. As full of health and fun he was when he went out to skate with the little girl he loved to marry—and—and that's the way he come home. There was a soft place on the ice. She was just saved, poor thing! A good, good lad he was. He's gone to heaven. He never gave us source any trouble, from his baby-hood."

"You don't ask after the other one—Bill," said the old farmer, curiously.

There was no answer.

"Bill was the one I broke, and the boy got to hate me. Yes, he did, old lady, and I'm not going to blame him either. I see things with a clearer light
now. One day I beat him for telling me a falsehood, as I thought. He didn't think; I found that out afterward."

The old farmer shook his head sorrow-fully, and his pale blue eyes grew dim. "I'll never forget how he turned upon me at last. Says he: 'You'll be sorry for this some day, father. You've always been unkind and unjust to me, and I won't submit to it any longer.'"

"What! Child of mine to talk to me that way? Why, I don't know but what if I hadn't been sort of paralyzed
for a minute, and had got hold of him, I'd a killed him, I was that mad. I don't wonder you shake your head; but say an opinion—was it good for the soul. Mother, dear heart, she pleaded and prayed, but I vowed I'd beat him again for that bit of insolence."

"Well, sir, I never got the chance.
That happened at Christmas, too. Liz-zy was a baby then. Yes, that morning
I found a Christmas present from Bill—he'd spent all his earnings for months, Ben told me, to get it—but there wasn't no Bill," the old voice faltered.

"He left a letter—and in that he said—good-by—to all of us, even to old Sue, out in the stable. You'll excuse me," and the horny hands fumbled for a handkerchief. "I thought I could tell the story—but some—how—
I can't."

Mother Meadows had turned her face
away to hide the two slow tears falling from eyes that had often wept. Lizzy was looking out of the window, perhaps at the moon.

"There, I'm through now," said the old man, noisily, having said a great deal; "there ain't much more to tell.
We'd a given everything we owned,
that day, to have his blue eyes back.
Turkey went for nothing. Benny was broken-hearted. There, then, don't cry, old lady! You're home this time, and we've got good company to help make us merry."

"But there's a little more to tell,
young man. I must clear it all up now,
and don't think harder nor you can help
of me. The Lord's forgive me, I trust.
Bill went me about a year after, from the West; said he was doing well. I dare say 'twas a good enough letter,
but something in it raised my anger,
and though I meant to forgive him, I thought of how I might make him more sorry. I wrote him that his mother was dead—twas awful, wasn't it? I'll never forget myself for that. Don't try to stop me, old lady. I'll own up the whole, now, I've begun. I don't wonder you look at me, sir. I did think he'd write me another letter; and when I wrote to him again, a stranger sent me word that he'd gone—and there was what my cruel wife told me. I don't know my mind must have been crazed.
But it humbled me, sir, and who knows but God may require that poor boy's soul at my hands? I not only took his soul, but his mother, from him."

"Think I'll go up stairs," said the minister, from Bill—my boy!

"Ah, sir, you're sorry you came to stay with one who has done so wrong?"
"No, no; don't think of it! Here is my hand," and he hurried from the room. The little family dispersed in silence.

"Happy Christmas, sir!" cried the farmer; "Happy Christmas, old lady!
Just please to stop this way. Here's our stockings that the child put up."
Why? Lizzy, I believe, you heart-
n't nothing but children after all us farmers. The Lord's yours and mine, and one for the minister. How fat they are! I haven't laughed so hearty for twenty Christmas mornings; and he proceeded
to put out the contents.

"Doughnuts, old lady—and—here—
why, Lord help me, here's a pocketbook and a fifty dollar bill in it! And
here's a letter! Where's my specy?"
You read it mother."

"Dear father," began the old
lady.

"O, it's from our daughter in New York! There's where the money came
from—and—suddenly he turned pale,
as the first few lines were read.

"Our boy, old lady—that good-for-nothing
blessed rascal! No, mother—he came forward with shaking hands—I can't
be—good news, and on Christmas day!
Sent the money, did he? You heart-
n't nothing but children after all us
farmers. The Lord's yours and mine, and one for
the minister. How fat they are! I haven't laughed so hearty for twenty Christmas mornings; and he proceeded
to put out the contents."

"Doughnuts, old lady—and—here—
why, Lord help me, here's a pocket-
book and a fifty dollar bill in it! And
here's a letter! Where's my specy?"
You read it mother."

"Dear father," began the old
lady.

"O, it's from our daughter in New York! There's where the money came
from—and—suddenly he turned pale,
as the first few lines were read.

"Our boy, old lady—that good-for-nothing
blessed rascal! No, mother—he came
forward with shaking hands—I can't
be—good news, and on Christmas day!
Sent the money, did he? You heart-
n't nothing but children after all us
farmers. The Lord's yours and mine, and one for
the minister. How fat they are! I haven't laughed so hearty for twenty Christmas mornings; and he proceeded
to put out the contents."

"Doughnuts, old lady—and—here—
why, Lord help me, here's a pocket-
book and a fifty dollar bill in it! And
here's a letter! Where's my specy?"
You read it mother."

"Dear father," began the old
lady.

Our Young Folks.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

When Christmas morning comes, they say,
The whole world knows it's Christmas Day;
The very cattle in the stalls
And all the night the heavens shine,
And all the stars are bright and true,
With light of a light divine.

"Merry Christmas!" in their sleep;
And dream about the Christmas tree;
With their stockings filled to see
Swift come the hours of joy and cheer.
Of loving friends and kindred dear;
Of gifts and liberties in the air.

"Glorious to be so sweet and strong,
To hear the holy angels' song;
To see the peace and joyful love"
On earth be peace and joyful love!
And on the street, or hear within,
The Christmas carols begin.

"Waken, Christian children,
Up and let us sing,
With glad voice the praises
Of our newborn king."

"Come, me fear to seek Him,
Children though we be;
Once He said of children,
Let them come to me."

"Haste we then to welcome,
With a joyful cry,
Born for our joy,
Born for our joy."

"From 'Christmas Page,' St. Nicholas for January."

"I tell you what it is, Nell, you're a coward."

"No, Walter, no."
"But you are; all girls are. They're poor things."

Nell's heart swelled with resentment.
Haden't she ridden on the camel's back at the circus? Haden't she followed Walter through perilous immemorial
in autumn and herring seasons? Haden't she promised to follow him to the world's end if he would only let her?
And now to be accused of cowardice!

The color mounted to her cheeks and the tears to her eyes.

"I would never call you a coward,"
she said.

"But you couldn't, you know," said
Walter, with masculine contempt.
"The idea of your calling me a coward!
That would be too good a joke. Now stand aside."

"Let it go," pleaded Nell, "it is only a poor little mouse."

"No, sir-ee. They're nasty things.
They nibble all the edges off Margaret's sugar tarts. Death awaited it in the form of a pair of water. Walter took mouse gingerly by the tail.

"Now, if you are going to make a fuss, you shan't see it," he said with brazenly authoritative air.

Nell stood irresolute. Should she stay and see the poor little creature drown, or should she run and prove herself a coward?

"Now for it," cried Walter. "Get out of the way, then—two—three!"

Mouse gave a piteous squeak, and Nell at the same moment uttered a shriek so loud and shrill that Walter jumped almost out of his boots. In his fright, he let go his hold of the mouse,
and away it scuttled and was seen no more.

"You great baby," he cried, recovering himself, "see what you have done!"

Nell, with great alacrity, had skipped out of the milking bench and stood holding her skirts around her and trembling with nervousness. She couldn't feel feeling glad that the mouse was saved. Perhaps he was silently now telling the story of his miraculous escape to Mrs. Mouse and all the little mice; but then, on the other hand, Walter was angry. He was very angry; he could see that from the white-
ness of the face and the door of the chamber. He didn't say much; he never did when he was angry; but he looked
and Nell trembled.

"I didn't mean to," she sobbed.
"But it was so little, Walter, and so
fragile!"

"Phew!" said Walter, "I said you
were a coward."

"But I'm not," flashed Nell. "I wasn't afraid one bit; I was only sorry."

find a thing, not a single, solitary
thing."

Nell opened her eyes. This was a calamity indeed! Nothing in her stockings were to be empty Christmas morning, not a doll, not even an orange in the toe! She had hardly strength left to gasp out: "Why not?"

"O because," said Maud.
"Because?" echoed Nell.
"Because papa can't afford it," said Maud, glibly, "he is very poor you know."

"Now if Uncle Josiah were only to die," suggested Georgiana plaintively.
"But he wouldn't leave us this money," said Maud, "now that he has quarrelled with papa."

Georgiana sighed. "He might give us just a hundred dollars," she said.
"He wouldn't feel it, and it would make us so comfortable."

"Why don't we ask him for it?" said
Nell.

The girls laughed. "Why indeed,"
they said.

Nell was not much the wiser for this remark. She had often heard of this uncle. The girls always spoke of him in a half-whisper, and Nell had an indistinct notion that he was a kind of ogre who lived in a big house surrounded by his money bags, and was subject to terrible fits of temper.

"Why do you want him to die?" she inquired, after a pause.

"O we don't," cried Georgiana, hasty-ly, intensely shocked at this way of putting it. "We only said if he died the money would be ours, and we could have him alive," said Nell. "Now we can ask him to give us a hundred dollars."

"O, you baby," said Maud.
"He couldn't mind our asking him," continued Nell, "he wouldn't like to be the one to do it," said Maud, with determination.

"You are not brave," said Nell.
"Walter wouldn't mind." "You just ask him."

Nell was silent. At last she had found something Walter would be afraid to do, and yet for her part she considered it rather a simple undertaking.

"Suppose I were to ask Uncle Josiah," said Nell, "could Walter call me
a coward after that?"

"I should think not," said Maud,
with a short laugh.

Nell's determination was taken. She knew where her uncle lived. It was in a large house at the other end of the village.

"I am going out for a walk," she said, tying on her hood and mittens.
As she stepped most of her time out of doors no one inquired where she was going. It was a long walk through the village, and the day was cold.

Nell walked fast and sometimes ran to keep warm. At last she saw the house before her. How grand it looked,
how dismal!

Her heart began to beat fast as she ascended the steps. What would he do to her, what would he do? Would he have only one eye, and that in the middle of his forehead?

All the first-class ogres she had ever read of had only one eye, just like a flaming coil. She rang the bell; then waited.

She was greatly relieved to find that the door was opened by a smart servant
girl with a pleasant smile.

"I want to see Uncle Josiah," said
Nell.

"Dear, dear," said the girl, staring,
"are you his niece?"

"He is my uncle," repeated Nell, thinking it wiser to stick to her first statement and not being quite sure of her own relationship to this formidable individual now telling the story of his miraculous escape to Mrs. Mouse and all the little mice; but then, on the other hand,
Walter was angry. He was very angry; he could see that from the white-
ness of the face and the door of the chamber. He didn't say much; he never
did when he was angry; but he looked
and Nell trembled.

"I didn't mean to," she sobbed.
"But it was so little, Walter, and so
fragile!"

"Phew!" said Walter, "I said you
were a coward."

"Nell, and the other the same as yours."

"Who sent you here?"
"I came myself," said Nell, and then she went on to explain how the stockings were to be empty Christmas morning, and what the girls had said about his wealth and their poverty, and how surprised and pleased they would be if he would send them a hundred dollars.

Uncle Josiah had taken his seat again and listened, while Nell finding the warmth of the big fire pleasant, stood toasting her hands and telling her story.

"So they don't know where you are?"
he said, as she finished.

"Nell shook her head.
"Nell, you had better be trotting home again," he said pleasantly, "or they will be sending the town crier
after you."

This was terrible. To be sent home without the money after all, and yet
Nell dared not speak of it again.

She picked up her mittens and started for the door, but she had been taught to shake hands in saying good-by.

"Good-by, Uncle Josiah," she said,
holding out her hand.

Uncle Josiah took it and then, strange to say, held it.

"Let me see," he said, "you live at the other end of the village, don't you?"
A long walk for such a little body, and
dear me, dear me, it is snowing."

Sure enough the air was filled with large flakes and the grey sky had a settled, determined look, as though it had made up its mind to be stormy and unpleasant for some time to come.

"You can't go home to-night, that is very certain," said Uncle Josiah; and
then he and Nell stood and watched
the storm from the window, hand in hand.

Later a message was sent to Nell's
home, saying the little girl was safe
with her uncle, and would be taken care of until the storm was over.

"You are very pleasantly situated,"
said the message, "and you are very
pleasant for some time to come."

"You can't go home to-night, that is
very certain," said Uncle Josiah; and
then he and Nell stood and watched
the storm from the window, hand in
hand.

Later a message was sent to Nell's
home, saying the little girl was safe
with her uncle, and would be taken
care of until the storm was over.

"You are very pleasantly situated,"
said the message, "and you are very
pleasant for some time to come."

"You can't go home to-night, that is
very certain," said Uncle Josiah; and
then he and Nell stood and watched
the storm from the window, hand in
hand.

Later a message was sent to Nell's
home, saying the little girl was safe
with her uncle, and would be taken
care of until the storm was over.

"You are very pleasantly situated,"
said the message, "and you are very
pleasant for some time to come."

"You can't go home to-night, that is
very certain," said Uncle Josiah; and
then he and Nell stood and watched
the storm from the window, hand in
hand.

Later a message was sent to Nell's
home, saying the little girl was safe
with her uncle, and would be taken
care of until the storm was over.

"You are very pleasantly situated,"
said the message, "and you are very
pleasant for some time to come."

"You can't go home to-night, that is very certain," said Uncle Josiah

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Per copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 10 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JAN. 4, 1879.

We neglected to change the date on the first page of this issue. The date at the head of this column is correct.

The publishers of the Baltimore Sun Almanac will please accept our thanks for a copy. It has been enlarged from 48 to 72 pages, and is full of valuable information.

Congressman Hewitt, of New York, in the course of an interview
with a newspaper reporter, recently,
said he thought the principal issue
in the next presidential campaign would be that of an honest versus a corrupt administration of the government, and added that as far as he could see the present administration had been doing all it could to promote the former. John Sherman among them. As to Gen. Grant's chances for the Republican nomination in 1880, he regarded them as better than those of any other man's
to-day.

The Democratic members of the Blaine committee in and at the first opportunity that offers to request
Senator Blaine to appear before them and testify concerning his charges of fraud and outrage in the late Southern elections. The object of this move is twofold: First, to make a point against Mr. Blaine if he declines to comply; second, in case he testifies to show the supposed flimsy character of the evidence upon which he based his allegations. Mr. Blaine is not usually caught napping, and the Democrats will find he is better armed than they anticipate.

The first cargo of American wheat ever received in Barcelona, Spain, arrived there about the middle of November. It was immediately recognized on 'Change as equal to Black Sea and Hungarian wheat. The cargo consisted of 72,000 bushels, and sold for about $3 70 per 120 pounds.
This cargo was transported in an English steamer at a cost of $18,000,
and the same steamer was chartered to bring another cargo of wheat from New York. About twenty-five carriages in all were expected to arrive at Barcelona from the United States during the season, all in English steamers. The United States consul at Barcelona urgently recommends direct American steam communication with Spain as a means of developing new and important markets for our products and manufactures.

The Washington Post, which has not been addicted to taking roseate
views of the situation, sees enough
in the prospect to express the belief that we are just entering upon a period of unexampled prosperity.
The next sweep of development will take in the entire West and wake up the South. Good times will bring over millions of emigrants from the overcrowded countries of Europe, each one of whom will increase by thousands of dollars our national wealth.
With a growth of such rapidity as history knows nothing, with a National spirit of enterprise never before seen, and with an almost boundless continent waiting to be developed, it is safe to conclude that the golden era of our country is before and not behind us. In twenty years
we shall have increased our numbers to a hundred millions, and shall be able, if need be, to feed and clothe
the world. This is not an idle boast, but the logic of the history of our past growth. It only remains for us to appreciate our opportunity, to enact laws for the fostering of foreign trade, and for our internal necessities,
to stop croaking and keep at work.

The Hard Times Disappearing.
The general and hearty observance of Christmas, which obtained
throughout the country, is not only a cheering sign of renewed activity in all classes of business, but a most hopeful augury for the future.
"Christmas" affords a wonderfully accurate weather gauge of our national prosperity. When people spend their money at Christmas, not rashly and extravagantly, but freely,
it is evident that they are not afraid of exhausting their store; that they have more "where that came from";
that, in other words, they are no longer possessed by that almost insane fear of being reduced to beggary,

which has been such a striking characteristic even of people well to do since the panic of 1873, and which more than anything else has prevented the long expected revival of trade.
If people have anything to spend at all, they are very sure to spend it at Christmas, and as, in spite of the low prices of grain and other products of the farm, the holiday business this season, appears to have been larger than for several years past, it is reasonable to conclude that these signs of business activity are not fictitious, but represent a substantial increase of national prosperity.

The Nichols administration in Louisiana does not appear to be a success. When Kellogg went into office there was a bonded debt of over $23,000,000, and a floating debt of over $2,000,000. A compromise was effected with the creditors of the state, and the debt was scaled down
and funded in 7 per cent. consols.
As a result of the measures of Governor Kellogg's administration the debt was reduced to less than $15, 000,000, and taxation was reduced from 2 1/2 mills to 1 1/4 mills, and limited to that by a constitutional amendment. When he went out of office
the interest on the public debt had been paid and $300,000 remained in the hands of the Fiscal Agent. It has been a year and three months since Nichols got control, and the treasury is empty; there is no money to meet the January interest on the debt; the Fiscal Agent has a claim for over $300,000 of arrears of interest
advanced by him, and the state
bonded debt has been increased $2-000,000, and efforts are now being made to effect a loan of $900,000. Altogether the "wealth and intelligence of the state," which the Nichols government claims to represent, has not made a shining success of it so far.

The Democratic Party.

The Boston Herald (Democratic)
bemoans the Solid South, as most unfortunate for its party, and says:—
"The North is growing faster than the South. The Electoral College is now composed of two hundred and thirty-one members from the North,
and one hundred and thirty-eight from the South. Under the new apportionment, which will be made on the census of 1880, the North will be nearly, if not quite, twice as strong as the South in the Electoral College.
Under the circumstances, is it not foolish for the South to pursue a course which tends to array a Solid North against a Solid South? And is it not equally foolish for the Democratic party which extends through the North and South, to wink at a policy that is as sure to drive it out of power at the North as water is to run down hill? The more progressive of the Southern statesmen recognize the injury which force and fraud against the North are doing to their cause. They know well enough that a great majority of the people at the North demand and will have equal rights under the law and a pure ballot for all."

English Farming.

Take European farming, for instance, and contrast a simple fact or two with the same facts here. An English farmer rents his ground and pays from $4 to $100 per acre rent
every year. In order to realize anything he must put on from $5 to $10
worth of guano, manure or sulphates, and that, too, on every acre. When all things are considered, we do not believe he has any advantage over us, for where his chances are better in one thing ours are better than his in another. Yet English farmers actually get rich under all these disadvantages. True, his better and nearer market is offset by richer soil, nominal rent or cheap lands. Our Western farmer of the Missouri Valley, of all this region of Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and Missouri, has no need to manure his soil. How,
then, does the English farmer happen to succeed? Firstly, every square inch of ground is thoroughly firmed and made to produce. No extra steps are taken; no useless
labor is done. Second, such crops only are put in as pay best. Third,
in feeding, not one ounce is wasted.
All is carefully harvested, and carefully stored. Fourth, and chiefly, none but the best stock is kept. They don't go out and buy common stock, half grown. They go slowly but surely. They raise their own stock from the best blood. Finally, the English farmer takes some good paper, full of the latest farming knowledge, gathered from all sources.—
Western Farm Journal.

—Lieut. Thomas A. Fitzgerald, of N. W. Police Station, Balto., reports
a case of a severe attack of Neuralgia that came to his notice, which was promptly and effectually cured
by Keller's Roman Liniment.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 17, 1878.

The Acklin scandal which was hushed up for a little while has broken out afresh and threatens him
with a notoriety that any one solicitous for the preservation of their good name would naturally shrink
from. The publication of the evidence taken by a committee of the most prominent Democrats of Louisiana fixes a stigma on Acklin's reputation that may make him court seclusion and desist from the conspicuous role he has essayed in the House
on several occasions since Congress convened a month ago. It was the almost uniform feeling here that the Republican committee which gave this distinguished M. C. a clean bill (morally) of health, went a long distance out of its way; and unless they can disprove the allegations of ex-Gov. Penn and associates who investigated Acklin, its several members have laid themselves open to a much more serious charge by their course
in deliberately refusing to take cognizance of the shameless acts alleged against him, or ignoring them in their endorsement of the man's character. In this connection I may just say that the course of Federal officials at New Orleans in laboring to defeat Republican nominees is, according to rumor, likely to cost them
dear—nothing less than their official heads; and the feeling has grown so decided against this suicidal method of concealment, even at the White House, that the Collector at Charleston, S. C., who is alleged to be only an instrument of Massacre Butler, is said to be in peril from his many offenses in dismissing Republicans
from the Custom House and filling the vacancies thus created with the henchmen of that eminent shot gun statesman, whose fame chiefly rests on his exploits at Hamburg on a well remembered occasion. There are also so many complaints of the inefficiency of Fitzsimmons and other Democratic appointees of the reconstruction era, that their enforced retirement is among the rumors of the hour. The truth appears to be that lawlessness was rarely, if ever, more rampant in their jurisdiction than it has been under their administration,
the assurance of Gordon & Co. of a faithful execution of the laws under the men they induced the President to appoint, to the contrary notwithstanding.

UNDINE.

The Temperance Crusaders.

The Rev. J. McKendree Reilly delivered a sermon Sunday evening at the Eatow Street Methodist Church
from the text found in Hebrews, 11th
chapter and 24th verse—"By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment." Mr. Reilly said that his theme would be largely
"woman's faith," and stated that there were many wonderful exhibitions of a firm faith exhibited by woman not only in the Bible, but in our time. Amongst the recent great evidences of this was the work of the temperance crusaders. The women had gone on, from day to day, and year to year, praying and crusading
in the liquor saloons of the country, and were supported in their work by the firm faith they had in God, and that he would ultimately prosper their work. He spoke in the most eulogistic manner of the crusaders, and read some very interesting papers, giving accounts of the inception of the movement, and of the obstacles put in their way—amongst others the power of the law, and crowds of roughs with pistols, clubs
and knives, and gave an instance
when a saloon keeper set three terrible dogs upon the praying band.
Fortunately, however, the dogs did not attack any of the women, and they at last compelled the saloon keeper to shut up his place.

Mr. Reilly announced that in accordance with a request of the Women's Temperance Union, which recently met in this city, he based his discourse largely upon the temperance movement; and being an active worker and frequent speaker
in the cause, he made a forcible argument against the evils of intemperance. He characterized it as the most insidious of all the evils of the day, and likened it, as a despot to Pharaoh. Legislators and politicians seem to be entirely under its control
—that is, under the control of those who manufacture and sell liquors—
and would not come forward and advocate laws interfering with the traffic. The evil was not alone in what we now saw around us, but in the terrible effects it would work upon the rising generation. In spite, however, of all the obstacles placed in their way, the great faith of women had kept them ever at the work
and they had achieved great results.
They had not only reclaimed many from the vices of intemperance, but had brought them into the church,

and they were as good workers for the church as for the temperance cause.

Mr. Reilly referred to Ingersoll, stating that many considered it a terrible thing that he should have been able to give three lectures in this city, and obtain audiences, a thing which a few years ago would have been impossible. He did not look upon it in that light, but that as in times of danger men rose up to meet it, so when the devil showed his claws, Christians made extra efforts to counteract his workings.— Balto. American.

The bill for the reorganization of the United States Army confines the number of enlisted men to 25,000—
in a population amounting to at least 45,000,000. While this small number is an ample force for all the military purposes of our Government, it illustrates how much better off are the people of this country, than are those of European nations. Russia has a standing army (including Cossacks, Fins and irregular troops) of 1,300,- 000 for a population of 93,000,000.
The Austrian army exceeds 800,000
for a population of 36,000,000. France, whose army is in a transitive state,
can put 800,000 men into the field, out of a population of 37,000,000. Germany, with 43,000,000 inhabitants, has over 1,000,000 soldiers, without the Landsturm, and can number two millions and a half fighting men on a sudden call. Italy has 500,000 soldiers in a population of 27,000,000.
Of regular troops there are 97,000 in the British Islands, where the population is 43,500,000.

Miss Henderson, of Denver, who knows how the women vote in Wyoming, denies that suffrage is a failure. She says that the women vote in a nicely carpeted room of a hotel, where the judges are three bright and intelligent women and two pleasing men. There is no electioneering. They vote in twenty seconds, on the average. The men are quiet and do not spit on the sidewalk, along which women voters pass; mothers trundle their babies up to the polling places, vote and move on.

—If you have a friend with a Cough or Cold, tell him to try Dr.
Bull's Cough Syrup. He will thank you for your advice. The price is only 25 cents.

TELEGRAPHIC.

SUDDEN DEATH OF COL. EDWARD WILKINS.

CHESTER-TOWN, MD., Dec. 28.—
Col. Edward Wilkins, formerly collector of the port of Baltimore, who resided at his beautiful residence, Riverside, on Chester river, near this town, departed this life after a very brief illness on Saturday morning,
the 28th instant, at three o'clock.
Col. Wilkins, with his family and friends, partook of their Christmas dinner at his home, and he was cheerful and happy. On the next day he complained of a pain in his heart, and sent for his physician,
who did not observe any alarming symptoms. He awoke on Saturday morning after an apparently sound sleep, and in a few moments expired
in the presence of his eldest son, Mifflin, without hardly a groan. He is supposed to have had an affection of the heart. He was about sixty-five years of age.

MR. TILDEN TO TESTIFY.
WASHINGTON, December 27.—It is stated by some of the friends of Mr.
Samuel J. Tilden that he will be one of the first witnesses called before the Potter committee when the House instructs it to investigate the elpher telegrams, and that he expects to be wholly exonerated from all charges of wrong doing in connection with the electoral count in 1876.

He may appear voluntarily. His friends here will do all they can to assist in his exoneration, and the Democrats, who are opposed to him and wish to see him punished still further, are being appealed to by Mr. Tilden's friends not to press him too hard on the ground that New York is essential to Democratic success in 1880, and that if Democrats persist in trying to slaughter and disgrace Mr. Tilden, he may make Democratic success impossible in the next campaign. The investigation will be made as brief as possible.
Some prominent Democrats think it can be completed in two weeks.

ENGLAND'S DISTRESS.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The Daily News this morning says: "Instead of Christmas turning the tide of events or reviving the cotton trade at Blackburn, the markets have gradually dwindled, and this week there has been less employment than ever.
Six mills are at a standstill through bankruptcy, and others are definitely closed for three weeks. Those businesses in the cotton trade say the prospects of improvement are far from immediate. The Oldham

cotton trade strike, however, appears to be approaching the end, as there are large numbers of operatives returning to work at the reduction of wages. It is calculated that half a million spindles have been re-started during the past two weeks at the reduced rate."

A number of very alarming and sensational reports have been received here to-day and during the last few days respecting the industrial and financial condition of England.
Wages of miners and operatives in all trades have been reduced to what the men consider the lowest living point, but the masters say they cannot go on without a still further reduction, and can scarcely see their way to going on even with a reduction.

Gratuitousness exists also among the tenant farmers, who are finding it almost impossible to pay their rents and to keep out of debt. The stoppage of the export trade to America, and the great influx of American produce into England, increase the difficulties of the situation.
The people in England thrown out of work are less able to buy food and the farmers find themselves confronted in their own markets with cheaper American meat and grain.
The future is looked upon as gloomy
in the extreme.

THE BREATHITT COUNTY OUTLAWS.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 30.—The Louisville Courier Journal's special dispatch from Breathitt county, Kentucky, says: "The officers of the law have been much to blame for the blood that has been shed there since the close of the war. If the civil officers had taken as firm a stand
when the Strong and Amick difficulty broke out as they have now, it would have put a stop to the lawlessness. The others saw the law could be trumped upon with impunity and they commenced setting every petty dispute with knife and revolver.
This has been going on so long the law-breakers have become thoroughly imbued with the idea that the civil officers and governor intend putting down the strife at whatever cost before peace will reign. A number of grand juries have already made their appearance. Judge Randall and the newly-elected Judge Linton state that the panel is composed of men who will do their duty fearlessly. The sheriff, who has been so active, says the outlaws are extremely bitter against him, and when the troops leave he will march out with them. The prisoners in the jail are very bitter against the troops, frequently cursing their guard and saying, 'One day is not all ways.'"

A TRIPLE ELOPEMENT.

CONCORD, N. C., Dec. 30.—Great excitement was created in this county by an elopement this evening of three married colored men and three white girls of respectability. The men were brothers, named Johnson, Adolphus, and I. G. A. Townsend, and were proprietors of a store and livery stable. The names of the girls were Mollie Trebling, Annie O'Koy, and Minnie Southey. They were good looking. Miss Minnie was a school teacher in this county, and the elopement was arranged for to-day, it being her holiday. She drew her pay this morning.

The parties took the train at 6 o'clock for Washington, D. C., the girls being closely veiled. The elopement would not have been discovered
so soon had not Miss Mollie Trebling left a note to her affianced, Lawson Newton, a poor but worthy young man, in which she told him that she loved G. A. Townsend better than life itself, and that she could not live without him. Telegrams have been sent down the road
to stop the runaways, but it is feared they have crossed the border into Virginia.

THE BLAINE INVESTIGATION.

The following is Mr. Blaine's letter in full to the southern outrage committee:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23, 1878.
—Hon. H. M. Teller, United States Senate, Chairman Select Committee,
&c.—Dear Sir: I have this morning received your favor inclosing the following resolution adopted by your committee, viz: 'Resolved that the Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, the mover of the resolution, be requested to specify in writing the particular class of frauds, outrages and violence committed in the recent elections which the committee is expected to investigate, and to furnish such information, and evidence as may be in his possession and the names of the witnesses he may wish to be examined.'"

"It cannot, of course, be the purpose of your honorable committee to limit investigation to any particular class of frauds, outrages and violence committed in the recent elections that may be 'specified' by me. The resolution is the action of the Senate,
speaking almost unanimously, and it is not me to say what your committee is 'expected' to investigate beyond what is expressed in the resolution itself in very explicit terms

it would be gross assumption in me to 'specify' where the Senate itself has directed. But, anxious to indicate any details that may expedite the labors of the committee, I will call your attention specially to the tissue ballot frauds in South Carolina,
to the laws of that State which made free voting impossible in certain counties, to the practice in that State of breaking up all meetings held to oppose the democratic party
unless democratic speakers were allowed to take part in the discussions,
and to all the methods by which, in Sumter and other counties, a full and free election was prevented.

"In Louisiana I invite your attention to the murders in Tensas parish on election day, and to the frauds
committed in the same; to the frauds
and outrages upon the ballot in the city of New Orleans, and even while I write to the alleged assassination of two witnesses on their way to the United States court to testify against those who had robbed them of their rights on the day of election.

"I could make further specifications in these two States and in other Southern States, but I have not time. I am just leaving for New England, and am compelled to postpone fuller details until after my return. Among the witnesses I would name are Jas. B. Campbell, E. W.
M. Mackey and C. G. Memminger, of South Carolina; Gov. Nichols, his agent, Col. Z. Carey, ex-Chief Justice Ludeling, of Louisiana; Hon. Reuben Davis of Mississippi; J. Cole Davis, of Helena, Ark., and the editor of the Avalanche, a democratic paper published in Memphis, Tenn. But I beg especially to refer you to a large mass of valuable information in the office of the Attorney General of the United States, already called for by the Senate, and soon, I presume, to be laid before your committee. This is official in its character, and in many cases has the weight and value of legal evidence, not requiring further examination of witnesses to authenticate
and confirm it.

"In offering the resolution in the Senate I did not assume the part of public prosecutor, but especially declined any such service. The invocation of your honorable committee,
however, is one which I cannot disregard, and on the resubmission of Congress I shall from time to time lay such facts before you and make such suggestions as may seem to constitute a full and fair compliance with all the requirements of your resolution. With great respect, your obedient servant,

J. G. BLAINE."

WASHINGTON, December 30.—The action of the Democratic members of the Blaine Committee to-day made it manifest that they are not inclined to cooperate with the majority in the latter's efforts to make a thorough and searching investigation into the alleged frauds and outrages committed in some of the Southern States during the last elections. Both Messrs. Bailey and Garland, the only members of the minority present at this morning's meeting, resorted to every device to prevent a consummation of the Republican programme to begin the inquiry immediately. They first interposed the legal objection to the use of the money which the Acting Attorney General in an opinion had declared was available, on the ground that the First Comptroller had previously decided that it was appropriated for another purpose,

a decision which the committee at its last meeting had approved and pronounced correct. Having been overruled by the majority on this point, Messrs. Bailey and Garland next endeavored to defer the beginning of the investigation until after the meeting of Congress, Mr. Bailey pleading the urgency of his engagements here, personal and official, and Mr. Garland averring that his duties on the Committee on Territories and the McGarragh case precluded him from devoting any portion of the holidays to the proposed inquiry. Mr. Garland's motion that the sub-committee should start for New Orleans on January 9 was lost by a strict party vote. It was then decided that the sub-committee, consisting of Senators Teller, Cameron, Kirkwood, Bailey and Garland, should depart for New Orleans on Thursday next. The Republican members were anxious to leave tonight, but upon Senator Garland's statement that if granted until Thursday he would be enabled to complete a report he was preparing,
they consented to wait until that time.

Before adjourning, the committee,
on motion of Senator Garland, adopted a resolution calling upon the President and the Attorney General
for all information in their possession concerning alleged election outrages
in the several States. In anticipation of such a request, copies of all reports,
letters and other papers now on file
in the Department of Justice have been prepared and will be transmitted to the committee at once.

LOCAL NEWS.

The County Commissioners will meet Monday next.

—W. O. Ison returned to Everett, Pa., on Tuesday.

—The thermometer Monday morning registered 20° below zero.

—Everybody should hear Dr. Hass' lecture, Wednesday evening next.

—The ice harvest has been gathered in Oakland, and is the largest and best put up for years.

Dr. McComas suggests that parents keep their children from school during the prevalence of diphtheria.

The Garrett Literary Society will meet this (Saturday) evening at the residence of Mr. Chas. Sineell, at 7 o'clock.

—Married—At Mr. D. Rinehart's, on Jan. 1st, 1879, by Rev. B. Ison, Mr. John Yelloly to Miss Belle Rinehart, both of Garrett county.

—The resignation of Dr. W. G. Burns, as School Commissioner for Garrett county, has been accepted by the Judges of the circuit court.

—Messrs. Willie Davis and Arthur Townsend returned to Morgantown Saturday last. Mr. Charles Davis was detained at home by sickness.

—J. Wheeler Combs, Esq., has opened a law office one door east of Sturgis' drug store. Mr. Combs will give special attention to collections.

—Diphtheria is prevailing to a considerable extent in Oakland. Three cases have proved fatal within the last ten days. It is now thought to be under control.

—Father Gallen, lately stationed in Oakland, will attend the missions between Laurel and Washington city. Rev. Joseph Trousdale will act as pastor of St. Peter's, Oakland.

—The Oakland cornet band visited West Union on New Year's day, returning by the Red House, where they attended a hop given by Mr. George Ward on New Year's night.

—The rolling mill of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, at Cumberland, will resume work on Monday, next, and sixty-seven men have been ordered to report for duty.

—Married—At the Ev. Lutheran parsonage, on Dec. 25th, by Rev. O. C. Miller, Mr. Louis S. Stemple, of Aurora, to Miss Mollie E. McCrum, of Oakland.

—Married—At the residence of Mr. Henry Beckman, on Dec. 25th, by Rev. O. C. Miller, Mr. John W. Beckman, to Miss Harriet S. Wilson, both of Garrett county.

—Services during the Week of Prayer will begin in the Ev. Luth. Church, with the celebration of the Lord's Supper, at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, subject, "Christian Union." Services preparatory to the administration of the Sacrament on Saturday eve, at 7 o'clock. All are invited to unite in this service.

—Thursday morning of last week the wife of Barney Engle, living near Frostburg, went out to milk her cow, leaving her two-year old son playing in a room in the house. Returning shortly afterward she discovered that the child had fallen against the hot stove and received burns from which he died a short time afterward.

—In a case before a justice in Somerset county, Maryland, last week, judgment was rendered against Peter Smith, who claimed damages for impounding and keeping for four weeks four stray cattle, the property of W. T. Ford. Smith had descriptive advertisements of the property posted in several places in the neighborhood, but the justice gave judgment against him on the ground that the cattle had not been advertised in one of the county papers when taken up, as required by law. A little advertising would have saved Mr. Smith's case.

—On the morning of the 26th of December, in Grafton, Mrs. Emeline Grow was found sitting in a chair, dead, with a bullet hole through her head and a jug of whiskey by her side. Benjamin Nuzum, who lives at Peterman, one mile from Grafton, has been arrested, charged with the murder. Nuzum has been keeping company with the woman for over a year. Her husband testified that it was on account of this familiarity that he left her; he (Nuzum) was with her nearly every night and that frequently she staid out all night with him. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Emeline Grow came to her death at the hands of Benjamin Nuzum.

—Contest for a Gold-Headed Cane. The contest for the gold-headed cane, between Tuni Carr, of Oakland, and Thomas Flemming, of Rowelsburg, at the Catholic fair, which was held in Leago's Hall, Oakland, last week, resulted in favor of Mr. Carr, the vote standing: Carr, 226; Flemming, 214. Each vote represented 25 cents.

The Oakland Cornet Band.

The members of the Oakland cornet band will accept our thanks for a serenade during the small hours of New Year's morning. The boys are beginning to play remarkably well, and if they continue to improve in the next six months as in the past, we will have a band in our next campaign that will be a credit to our town and county. Long may they "toot."

Election of Officers.

Officers of Alta Lodge No. 574, Knights of Honor, of Oakland, were elected Thursday evening of last week as follows:

Past Dictator—A. G. Sturgis.
Dictator—S. Lawton.
V. Dictator—M. L. Scott.
A. Dictator—D. Little.
Reporter—W. H. Tower.
F. Reporter—L. C. Salmaker.
Treasurer—Chas. Sineell.
Chaplain—Rev. John M. Davis.
Guide—John Compton.
Guardian—J. A. Hayden.
Sentinel—John O. Michael.
Trustees—John M. Davis, Tom Carr and Chas. Sineell.

Medical Examiners—Drs. J. Lee McComas and E. H. Bartlett.
W. H. Tower was elected representative to Grand Lodge, and Dr. J. Lee McComas Alternate.

A Rice Treat.

Dr. De Hass, late U. S. Consul at Jerusalem, will deliver his popular lecture, entitled "Round the World in less than Eighty Days!" in the M. E. Church, on Wednesday evening, January 8th, at 7 o'clock. This lecture comprises a bird's eye view of Europe and Rome, and her monuments; Constantinople and the Sublime Porte; Turkey and the Ottoman Empire; Egypt and her Grand Temples; Suez Canal and Red Sea; Mecca and Mohammedanism; India and the remains of the Mogul Dynasty; China and the Celestial Empire; The Thousand Islands of Japan; and back to New York in less than Eighty Days.

Admission, 25 cents.
Tickets can be had at the stores or at the door.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
This capital lecture was one of the most eloquent and stirring ever delivered in New York. —Jersey Messenger.

We have never heard a more eloquent or interesting lecturer than Dr. De Hass. —N. Y. Advance.

Those who want to hear a lecture both amusing and instructive, should hear Dr. De Hass. —Burlington Gaz.
The lecture of Dr. De Hass was immensely interesting. It was his best illuminated. —Dubuque Times.

Dr. De Hass' lectures here have been splendid successes. —Wheeling Intelligence.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending January 2:

Richard Graham and wife to Hartz Bear, a tract of land containing 10 acres; $50.

T. E. Fairall and wife, to John E. Gnagey, their interest in lots 2, 3 and 4 on the west side of Main street, in the town of Accident, also lots 3, 4 and 5 on the east side of said street in said town; $5.

Sarah A. Fairall and others, to John P. Spiker, a part of a tract of land called "Accident," containing 104 acres; also lot 3253, containing 64 acres; $3,250.

Ias. M. Schley, Trustee, to John Moon, Lots 1508 and 1509, being part of a tract called "White Plains," $500.

Thos. Browning and wife, to Wm. A. and John S. Browning, Military Lots 1286, 1287 and 1289, and part of a tract of land called "Scotches," and 5 acres of land called "Home," $1,000.

Edmund Jamison, late Sheriff, to T. J. Sliger, Military Lot 2554; consideration not named.

Gilmore S. Hamill and wife, to John B. Wilson, a certain tract of land lying and being in Garrett county; $200.

Truman E. Fairall and wife, to Daniel Hinebaugh, their interest in Military Lots 3331, 3340, 3344 and 3322; $5.

Another Railroad.

A new organization, entitled the Cumberland, Moorfield and Petersburg railroad company, was chartered in the West Virginia courts on last Thursday. The incorporators are Col. Joshua Robinson, C. W. Dailey, G. H. Harrison and J. L. Barlick, of Mineral county, West Virginia; John F. Yammeter, of Hardy county, West Virginia, and J. H. Percy, J. F. Harrison and J. H. Ways, of Cumberland. The capital stock is $2,000,000, divided into 20,000 shares at $100 per share. The route is laid down in the charter. It is from Sta. Clairsville, in Mineral county, West Virginia, opposite Cumberland, following the North Branch of the Potomac river to Willey's Ford, and thence by the most practicable course to Patterson's Creek; following that stream to Headville; thence following Beaver run to Mill creek; following that stream to Mill creek; thence following the South Branch of the Potomac to Petersburg, Grant county, West Virginia. The ultimate purposes of the incorporation and details concerning construction, etc., have not been made public. —Cumberland News.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of December:

Joseph Buck and Alice Biddinger.
Jos. Bauman and Mary Margroff.
Samuel E. Boyer and Ettie M. Hinebaugh.
George D. White and Elizabeth Davis.
John W. Beckman and Harriet S. Wilson.
Lewis S. Stemple and Mollie E. McCrum.
David M. Moore and Josie Sinclair.
John Yelloly and Belle Rinehart.

SWANTON, MD., Dec. 23, 1878.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Will you allow me space in the columns of your paper for a few items which I gathered during a visit to the northern end of our county, in company with my friend "Dick?"

The first object that engaged our attention was the new church at Johnston. It is a neat and substantial building, and I believe one of the finest churches in the northern part of the county. This is creditable to the good people of Johnston and vicinity. A revival meeting has been in progress there for the past three or four weeks, conducted by Rev. Baumgardner, ally assisted by Revs. De Witt, Judge and H. E. Friend, Feruson, Bishoff and Lowdermilk. Much good has been accomplished, and a large number added to the church.

Our next visit was to the Alder Hill School, which is conducted by Mr. J. Dell, the "boss" teacher of the county, (that is, of the district schools.) We found his school room tastefully decorated, and rendered quite comfortable by a ten horse power wood stove. Mr. Dell, besides being a good teacher, is an experienced fireman. When we took our departure he had on 60 pounds of steam and blowing off at the safety valve.

At Friendsville we found apples and cider of the best quality, and they were dealt out to us with a prodigal hand. We called on "Uncle Dan," the great mineralogist of Friendsville, and had a conversation with him concerning the mineral wealth that is hidden in these granite hills on either side of the mad Youghiogheny. Dan thinks that there are "millions in it."

Space will not allow of further details of the trip, which we enjoyed very much, and we consider this brief notice due to the hospitality and friendship of the people along the route.

TOURIST.

WELLSVILLE, O., Dec. 27, 1878.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—The weather here during this week bids fair to rival that of your own high altitude. On Christmas, the mercury remained almost at zero all day; and this, together with a biting wind, proved a pretty effectual damper on some of the festivities.

The few inches of snow on the ground is not sufficient to make good sleighing, as the roads were exceedingly rough when the snow fell. Much wet weather during the preceding weeks caused the roads, when frozen, to seem as if paved with many cornered rocks.

An excellent vein of iron ore has been discovered within a few miles of Wellsville. A small per cent. of gold and silver are found with it; but I presume not enough to repay mining for them alone.

Mr. Johnathan Mink, of this vicinity, had a valuable horse stolen a few weeks ago. He traced it to a livery stable in Pittsburgh, where the thief had tried to dispose of it; but failing in that, and fearing detection, left the animal and set out for parts unknown.

A lady residing in this neighborhood, can boast of quite a little adventure. Hearing some noise in the house one night, she snatched up the poker and started for the locality from whence the sounds proceeded.

Arriving there she beheld two gentlemen (?) helping themselves to some of her effects. Instead of fainting at the sight, our heroine caused them to feel the combined weight of iron and arm. The thieves rushed out of the house, but in passing a line full of clothes, one of them made a grab which proved successful enough to reduce the week's ironing considerably. Next day one of the near neighbors was seen with his head bandaged, having fallen from a train in motion. You must not think, however, that this is a fair sample of our community, for such occurrences are the exception rather than the rule.

If I do not trespass upon your columns, you may expect

More anon.

KATE.

MCARTHUR, O., Dec. 25th, 1878.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—We are having cold weather here with enough snow to make tolerably good sleighing. The thermometer for the past two days has been from 6° to 4° below zero, and weather clear. We have had an open winter; did not commence to feed our cattle until the 18th inst. Stock of all kinds looks well, and prices are low; but since resumption has become a fixed fact and a dollar of paper is worth a dollar in gold, prices are improving. Two weeks ago wheat would only bring 85 cents, and now it is worth from 90 cents to $1, and there is no other cause known only that confidence is restored.

The Herald has been giving me fits, with the dirty rebel sheet of our town to help him, by saying I have tried to slander the citizens of Oakland, which is false; for I have often and still say, Oakland has as refined, orderly and kind a set of inhabitants, taken as a "mass," as I am acquainted with. There are, of course, a few exceptions.

J. B. RANDALL.

GEN. BRADLEY JOHNSON'S MILITIA SCHEME.

A Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial states that when the Army reorganization bill comes up for consideration there will be submitted an amendment calling for the organization of a national militia to take the place of the State militia in its present imperfect discipline. The proposition comes from the South, and is said to have been suggested by the ex-Confederate General Bradley T. Johnson. The scheme is to provide for the organization and equipment of a militia force of one thousand men from each congressional district, who shall be constituted into brigades, divisions and corps, according to States, the regimental organization to be made by the regiments the brigade organization by the Governor and the division organization by the President from the regular army. Each man enlisted to serve five years and be subject to parade duty at the orders of the division, brigade, regimental and company commanders; the enlisted man to receive one dollar per day pay for time spent in drill and annual encampments.

HOW DRINKERS' WIVES MIGHT GET RICH.—Barkeepers in this city pay, on an average, $2 per gallon for whiskey. One gallon contains an average of sixty-five drinks, and at ten cents a drink the poor man pays $6.50 per gallon for his whiskey. In other words, he pays $2 for the whiskey and $4.50 to a man for handing it over the bar. Make your wife your karkeeper. Lend her two dollars to buy a gallon of whiskey for a beginning, and every time you want a drink go to her and pay ten cents for it. By the time you have drunk a gallon she will have $6.50, or enough money to refund the $2 borrowed of you, to pay for another gallon of liquor, and have a balance of $2.50. She will be able to conduct future operations on her own capital, and when you become an inebriate, unable to support yourself, shunned and despised by all respectable persons, your wife will have enough money to keep you until you get ready to fill a drunkard's grave. —C. T. Campbell's Lecture in Mayfield Ky.

ITALIAN METHOD WITH DIPHTHERIA.—The two methods of treating diphtheria, with chloride of potash and hydrate of chloral, have been combined by Dr. Cesar Ciattaglia of Rome, and, as he claims, with remarkable success. He dissolves a drachm of hydrate of chloral in five drachms of glycerine, and applies it to the false membranes three or four times a day, by means of a camel's hair brush. Of the chloride of potash he gives from two and a half to four drachms a day, dissolved in four and a half ounces of water, to children of from three to six years, and an ounce to adults. With these medicines he always combines a tonic and restorative diet.

DIED.

In Oakland, Thursday, Dec. 26th, 1878, of diphtheria, Phoebe Almida, daughter of Isiah and Mary B. Haun, aged 3 years, 8 months and 25 days.

At the same place, Friday, Dec. 27th, 1878, of the same disease, Effie Myrtle, daughter of L. R. and Harriet J. Johnson, aged 2 years, 8 mos. and 2 days.

At the same place, Sunday, Dec. 29th, 1878, of the same disease, Margery Belle Gauer, in the 19th year of her age.

The above deaths all occurred in the same house.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

A VALUABLE Little Farm for Sale.

50 Acres of Good Land, improved with dwelling house, and about 10 acres in cultivation.
This farm lies near the Railroad, 2½ miles east from Oakland, in a good, well wooded soil, well suited for Gardening Purposes, with a beautiful spring of pure water. It will sell at a good bargain.
For terms, &c., enquire at this office.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT COUNTY, MD., in re: L. C. Salmaker, Debtor.
Ordered, this 21st day of December, 1878, that L. C. Salmaker give notice to his creditors, endorsees and parties, that the FIRST MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said L. C. Salmaker to appear in the Circuit Court for Garrett county, to answer such claims as may be presented against him, and that a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the town of Oakland for three months prior to the said first Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test—
W. H. TOWER, Clerk.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Dec. 18th, 1878.
Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland.

On Monday, Jan. 6th, 1879, at which time the supervisors for the ensuing year will be appointed. Supervisors of the present year will make their returns at this meeting.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

THE BALTIMORE AMERICAN.

773. 1878.

Over One Hundred Years Old.

THE DAILY AMERICAN.

By Mail, Postage Paid:

One Year $9.00
Six months 4.50
Three months 2.25
One month .75

THE WEEKLY AMERICAN.

Reduction in Price:

ONLY $1.00 A YEAR!
The Cheapest and Best Family Journal Published.

CLUB INDUCEMENTS.

Read the following, and go to work to secure one of the valuable Premiums offered:

Table of Premiums and Terms:

No.	Name of Premium	Price of Premium	No. of Subs.
1.	Weekly American, 6 mos.	$3.00	10
2.	Weekly American, 1 year	5.00	15
3.	Daily American, 6 months	4.00	25
4.	Daily American, 1 year	8.00	40
5.	C. C. Fulton's Europe'n Lits	1.25	15
6.	Pocket Book	.75	5
7.	Flour and meal (assorted)	.50	10
8.	Compass pocket	.50	10
9.	Box of Water Colors	.50	10
10.	Almanac	.25	25
11.	Praying Knife	.50	10
12.	Praying Knife	.50	10
13.	Praying Knife	.50	10
14.	Praying Knife	.50	10
15.	Praying Knife	.50	10
16.	Praying Knife	.50	10
17.	Praying Knife	.50	10
18.	Praying Knife	.50	10
19.	Praying Knife	.50	10
20.	Praying Knife	.50	10
21.	Praying Knife	.50	10
22.	Praying Knife	.50	10
23.	Praying Knife	.50	10
24.	Praying Knife	.50	10
25.	Praying Knife	.50	10
26.	Praying Knife	.50	10
27.	Praying Knife	.50	10
28.	Praying Knife	.50	10
29.	Praying Knife	.50	10
30.	Praying Knife	.50	10
31.	Praying Knife	.50	10
32.	Praying Knife	.50	10
33.	Praying Knife	.50	10
34.	Praying Knife	.50	10
35.	Praying Knife	.50	10
36.	Praying Knife	.50	10
37.	Praying Knife	.50	10
38.	Praying Knife	.50	10
39.	Praying Knife	.50	10
40.	Praying Knife	.50	10
41.	Praying Knife	.50	10
42.	Praying Knife	.50	10
43.	Praying Knife	.50	10
44.	Praying Knife	.50	10
45.	Praying Knife	.50	10
46.	Praying Knife	.50	10
47.	Praying Knife	.50	10
48.	Praying Knife	.50	10
49.	Praying Knife	.50	10
50.	Praying Knife	.50	10
51.	Praying Knife	.50	10
52.	Praying Knife	.50	10
53.	Praying Knife	.50	10
54.	Praying Knife	.50	10
55.	Praying Knife	.50	10
56.	Praying Knife	.50	10
57.	Praying Knife	.50	10
58.	Praying Knife	.50	10
59.	Praying Knife	.50	10
60.	Praying Knife	.50	10
61.	Praying Knife	.50	10
62.	Praying Knife	.50	10
63.	Praying Knife	.50	10
64.	Praying Knife	.50	10
65.	Praying Knife	.50	10
66.	Praying Knife	.50	10
67.	Praying Knife	.50	10
68.	Praying Knife	.50	10
69.	Praying Knife	.50	10
70.	Praying Knife	.50	10
71.	Praying Knife	.50	10
72.	Praying Knife	.50	10
73.	Praying Knife	.50	10
74.	Praying Knife	.50	10
75.	Praying Knife	.50	10
76.	Praying Knife	.50	10
77.	Praying Knife	.50	10
78.	Praying Knife	.50	10
79.	Praying Knife	.50	10
80.	Praying Knife	.50	10
81.	Praying Knife	.50	10
82.	Praying Knife	.50	10
83.	Praying Knife	.50	10
84.	Praying Knife	.50	10
85.	Praying Knife	.50	10
86.	Praying Knife	.50	10
87.	Praying Knife	.50	10
88.	Praying Knife	.50	10
89.	Praying Knife	.50	10
90.	Praying Knife	.50	10
91.	Praying Knife	.50	10
92.	Praying Knife	.50	10
93.	Praying Knife	.50	10
94.	Praying Knife	.50	10
95.	Praying Knife	.50	10
96.	Praying Knife	.50	10
97.	Praying Knife	.50	10
98.	Praying Knife	.50	10
99.	Praying Knife	.50	10
100.	Praying Knife	.50	10

Any article desired, not in the above list, will be sent on terms proportionate with its price.

Specimen copies sent to any address. It is not necessary for all the names in a club to come from one office, nor is it necessary to send all the names at one time. Remittances should be made by draft, Postal Note or registered letter.

Special Club Rates.

The Weekly American, with any of the following named Journals, will be sent one year, to persons desiring at the prices given in the first column of figures:

VARIETIES.

—Is warfare?
—Motto for a toper—Mind your eye.
—Priceless—Goods that are marked down.
—The Congressional Record is as bright as ever.—Free Press.
—“Too much impudence breeds familiarity” is the way the Japanese put it.
—The mail clerk of the Philadelphia Ledger is also a female clerk.—Chicago Journal.
—A New York paper advises its readers not to leave their graves out doors over night.
—Is a dog worth what he will fetch or what he will bring?—Baltimore Evening Saturday.
—Sitting Bull's recipe for removing dandruff from scalps begins: First get your scalp!
—Targart calls his pig Barks, because he is always swilling.—Boston Transcript.
—There is no poetry in the light fantastic too that wears a corn.—New Orleans Picayune.
—Delaware and Virginia are the only two States that have officially adopted the whipping post.
—Ship building in the Portland, Me., district has declined from 15,576 tons in 1874 to 4,273 in 1878.
—A slice of Limburger cheese worn on the upper lip is pronounced a sure cure for a hooked nose.
—Among young ladies who are learning to skate this winter the interest in fall styles will be revived.
—The best seats at the theater of war are generally on the front tier.—Boston Commonwealth.
—Carnet playing in church, according to the Philadelphia Chronicle, is worshipping the Lord in a horn.
—No man ever worshipped a brazen image who had once tussled with a life insurance agent.—St. Louis Spirit.
—Don't run on an errand, little boy—you might injure it with the nails in your boots.—Danville Sentinel.
—One of the funny things that do actually happen once in a while occurred at Westfield, Mass., only a few days ago. A policeman was trying to prevent the boys skating on the canal. The ice was new and just about strong enough to bear the weight of a boy comfortably, but it wouldn't stand the weight of a man's pressure. A second. So the boys skated up and down the middle of the canal, and lo and behold, the policeman, who was on the tow-path and made the fire turn blue with his impotent wrath.
—Huck-Eye.
—A New Jersey clergyman refuses to make a return of his marriages to the State, claiming to be responsible only to God.
—“Be careful how you punctuate the stove,” is the latest. It means not to put too much coal on.—Pittsburgh Telegraph.
—The Texas Legislature has passed an act requiring all railway trains to stop not less than five minutes at any station.
—“Once more upon the breeches,” as the old gentleman remarked, slinging his discolored offspring over his knee.—Duck.
—Persons who write anonymous letters for publication should send their real names to the publishers.—New Orleans Picayune.
—The police of Berlin on the 1st of last August notified the kings of Spain and Italy that an international plot was afoot to kill them.
—Austria has thus far spent about $70,000,000 to go into and hold a territory worth about as much as one back county in Michigan.
—The filthy and degrading habit of opium-smoking is taking root in Albany, Ore., and young girls are being induced to test the poisonous drug.
—When you are told that a man spent several years on the bench, it is well enough to inquire if he was a judge or cobbler.—Boston Transcript.
—In South America they have begun to shoot ex-presidents and ex-presidents are so thick down there they can often kill half a dozen at a shot.
—An Eastern paper remarks that the fate of Mr. Stewart involves the question, “Where do we go when we die?” with great additional perplexity.
—William Hassett, of Newton, Mass., has been sued for the cost of his own grave-stone, which he ordered a year ago in anticipation of an early death.
—One reason why the office doesn't seek the man in this country is because it can't fly over the heads of the hungry crowd standing around it.—Free Press.
—The total endowment of the public schools of the United States is $8,000,000, and it is estimated that the average daily attendance is 4,500,000.
—Beginning with a production of four pounds of tea in 1840, India now exports 40,000,000 pounds, and all the islands of the Indian Archipelago are cultivating the plant.
—The man who was “bent on matrimony” straightened up afterwards.—Merriden Recorder. And was probably fooled to the top of his bent.—N. Y. Evening Mail.
—Fast draweth nigh the new-horn year, when good resolves burn fiery and every youth says to himself, “Look here, I'll keep a diary.”—Wheeling (Va.) Leader.
—An engineer in Denver was crushed under his wrecked locomotive, and could not be readily taken out. He endured the agony two hours, and then cut his throat with his pocket knife.
—Custom compels an Iceland to kiss every woman he meets. This accounts for the absence of well-traveled roads in that country and the existence of trails and “cross-roads” through the woods.
—Man may be the noblest work of creation, but he doesn't think about it and he doesn't look it, when, on bearing his name called in the street, he turns and finds that it is only somebody calling his dog.
—George Van Vleet, who lives near Wilmington, Del., is said to have in his possession the original secession ordinance of the State of South Carolina. He brought it at a public sale of Confederate rubbish after the war was over.

—“What shall I leave you when I die?” said an insipid fellow to a young lady whose patience he had already exhausted. “Needn't wait till you die,” said she; “you can leave something now if you will.” “What shall I leave?” he asked. “Leave yourself,” she replied. He left.
—A Georgian has married three times in the space of six weeks. He has had them forty-six years.—S. News. Is this the latest wedding costume? And gracious graciousness! how many more wives is he going to wear out during that old pair of socks? Will the generous North or the Society for Clothing the Heathen send him another pair?—Courier-Journal.
—And now the long winter evenings are coming when, with chairs drawn near together, we shall sit in close communion, and we will just about entering into glow build fair fire-fancies of the future time, dream out dreams of the yet-to-be, and hold that everlasting yarn for the children's stockings.
—A manufactory of paper bricks has been opened somewhere in Wisconsin. The bricks are said to be exceedingly durable and moisture proof. They are also larger than the clay article. Paper is now also used for making barrels. Straw pulp is run into a mold made in the shape of a half barrel, cut vertically. The ends are of paper, but are protected by wood. The barrels are lighter and two-thirds cheaper than those of wood, and flour will not sift out of them while in transit. The staves are three-eighths of an inch thick.
—“Ah, by George,” groaned young Mr. Lethered, sinking wearily into an office chair, “ah, by George, my head aches fearfully.” “Possible?” asked his employer, old Mr. Hardfax, with a look of curious interest and sympathy. “Possible? Something must have got into it.” And then for a long time nobody said anything, and the room seemed to grow about fifteen degrees colder.—Huck-Eye.
—One of the funny things that do actually happen once in a while occurred at Westfield, Mass., only a few days ago. A policeman was trying to prevent the boys skating on the canal. The ice was new and just about strong enough to bear the weight of a boy comfortably, but it wouldn't stand the weight of a man's pressure. A second. So the boys skated up and down the middle of the canal, and lo and behold, the policeman, who was on the tow-path and made the fire turn blue with his impotent wrath.
—Huck-Eye.
—Fruit Flavorings.
In a former paper I showed that among the many ingenious inventions of chemical experts was the art of making false essences of fruits which so closely resembled the genuine extract of the fruit itself that they were enabled to deceive the very elect. I will now make a few more extracts from a book I have already quoted from, and which will serve to convince the most skeptical that with possibly a very few honorable exceptions, the fruit “extracts,” “essences” and “flavorings,” as now bought and sold, are as counterfeit as coins, which are all alloyed with the most vile and poisonous materials.
To produce the innocent and delicious essence of the strawberry the artificial extract maker adds to a 100 parts of alcohol two of butyrate of amy, three of acetate of amy, five of formate of ethyl, five of butyrate of ethyl, one silicate of methyl and two of glycerin. Thousands of grocers are selling to-day for the essence of the peach, which to me is a more delightful fruit even than the strawberry, what is entirely composed of animal and mineral matter after the form following: Two parts of aldehyde, five of acetate of ethyl, five formate of ethyl, five butyrate of ethyl, five valerate of ethyl, five caprylate of ethyl, two silicate of methyl, five of glycerin and one of essence of persicot.
The same book which contains the foregoing forms for compounding artificial principal strawberry and peach essences, lays down the materials and proportions also, for fabricating the essences of melon, raspberry, gooseberry, blackberry, cherry, wild cherry, plum, apricot, apple, orange and grape.
In the printed directions it is expressly laid down that “in making these essences it is important that the materials be pure, especially the fruit oil.” It will be observed that glycerin is present in nearly all the above forms. This we are told is “useful in blending and harmonizing the different odors.”
It is also stated in the book I copy from—to which are sometimes added certain acid and natural essences.—Accordingly, in the above formula for making the essence of peach, is one part of the essence of persicot. This is the natural essence of the peach—one hundredth part of the real thing compounded with thirty-four parts of ingredients which are entirely spurious and foreign!
All of the foregoing may be viewed as various mixtures of the ethers of the ethyl and amy series, modified by the addition of various other, tincture of orris, volatile oils, etc., etc., to bring about a resemblance to the odor and taste of natural, innocent and health-providing fruits of the orchard, the field and the garden.
If all these various ingredients and compounds were entirely harmless it would still be a great fraud; because men and women are eating and drinking entirely different materials from what they are told they are eating.
I am not myself chemist enough to determine as to how far these concoctions are injurious to the system.
I would like to see an elaborate system of experiments tried on the men who invented and who still compound them—taking care, of course, that “the materials be pure”—“especially the fruit oil.” When, for the good of science, it is determined as to the effects of these compounds when made of “pure material”—then let another set of experiments be entered upon to settle as to the effect on the health, when the materials are not pure—“especially the fruit oil.”
It is the false and fabricated character of these fruit “extracts” and “es-ences” which causes many of the unaccountable miseries which happen in flavorings, and many of those “queer” and “strange” tastes which the housekeeper notices in her cake, pastries and other dessert dainties.

But it is not only in cake and pastries, in creams, ices and beverages where these doctored and fraudulent fruit essences are used.
JELLIES OF COMMERCE.
The jellies of commerce are for the most part flavored with those artificial and factitious compounds. Very little of the jelly which is sold in the market is in any sense genuine. Currant jelly, for instance, is made of animal gelatine, or apple, or perhaps both, and then flavored with these ethers and chemicals. When this was lately stated to the writer in the hearing of a man who has long been engaged in manufacturing jellies, he admitted that he had helped to make hundreds and hundreds of barrels of currant jelly, and he never of a part of currant used in the manufacture!
There are perfectly pure currant jellies manufactured, no doubt; but it is probable that what is stated above as the normal existence—women more or less educated spending youth and middle age as governesses, but laying by nothing, and retiring to a lonely and destitute old age; and old maids surviving toward perfection, both in full sympathy, ringing out a full chord of love and trust—is certainly the most divine state upon this earth. But how often is the actual state one of bitterness and hate, misunderstandings, and distrust, selfishness ready to grind down all the finer feelings in order to gain its own end, unforgiving harshness, niggardly spite, a perfect hell of evil passions, the more furious for being chained up in the small space of two hours and unable to expend themselves in a wider horizon! There are some women to whom marriage is only a secondary consideration; and for these the highest and truest of life, and the pleasures, happiness and advantage of the children are placed far above the wants and wishes of the husband. Women of this description are equally happy as Sisters of Charity, as domestic goddesses, as fond aunts ready to spoil the whole tribe of nephews and nieces, who know where to fly from the stern discipline of father or mother to caresses, kisses and sugar-plums. Again, some of the most exceptional and highest and truest dispositions would suffer terribly in the wear and tear of life, would write under the selfishness of man, and possibly sink altogether under the load of petty worries and inevitable anxieties that the present occupants of the husband and children entail.
Granted even that marriage is the true outlet for women's energies, are we not sometimes the better and the true for what we have, rather than for what we have not? It is said that every woman has had one offer of marriage in the course of her life. If she has not accepted it, from folly or from mistaken motives, or from any other cause, is she not to be pitied, rather than despised, all the rest of her days, and call herself incomplete, or abnormal, or wretched?
The very happiest persons are those who, having abjured enjoyment for themselves, throw all their energies into the lives of others, possessing thus an endless wide range of interest and affection. The involuntary celibates, better recentered from the upper and better educated portions of society, are certainly more to be pitied, rather than more wretched, than to see a girl pining away, listless and dissatisfied, hoping against hope, for the husband that cometh not, and refusing to throw herself heart and soul into any engrossing occupation. She is that unhappy, the only possession that she values as a snare to entrap men, is waning hourly; the very fretting she indulges in is hastening the process. No wonder that a deluge of lamentations about the difficulty of girls getting married, and the absolute necessity there is for women to find husbands in order that they may “suckle fools and chronicle small-boys.” It is a pity that some of our maidens and frivolous girls will develop into scolding shrews and insane useless mothers than that the mere fact of their remaining single should mar and ruin their whole life.
It is very seldom that one hears old bachelors complaining of their loneliness, their blighted lives, or the sense of desolation that undermines their constitution. Yet elderly men troubled with gout, and somewhat pining away in manhood, the waiters in the club, no doubt had once some romance, some absorbing love or crushing sorrow that has caused them to remain single. But men know well enough that the mere act of matrimonially snaking one's life, and doggedly setting to at any task that is available, cures the heartache, and is the best mode of turning tribulation into rejoicing.
There is a place for every thing in nature. Women are gradually themselves finding scope for their faculties, and fresh outlets for their activity. If single men are not unhappy, why should single women be? The mind, absorbed in its own infinitesimal perplexities and affairs, forgets that the same shines over all the earth; that the same impulses and passions and desires nerve all mankind; that history repeats itself, and is but one continued record of failure, disappointments, and desperate struggles after right. From the serene heights of a looker-on the single soul may share the pains and comfort the sorrows of the weary, the heart-stricken, and the erring. In Providence there is a great charm. The single person may roam where he lists, may range to the end of the earth

The Unmarried Ones.

Statistics inform us that, in the countries about which we can gather accurate information, the number of women married exceeds that of men by 2 to 3 per cent. This is the necessary superabundance; but owing to the vicious state of modern society, and many other causes, the real proportion of surplus—consequently necessarily single—women is thirty per cent. At first sight this seems an alarming number condemned to lead a career of vice or life of celibacy; for most people consider that to be unmarried means a miserable, or at least incomplete, existence. A thoughtful writer, speaking on this subject, has said: “There are hundreds of thousands of women, scattered through all ranks, who have to earn their own living,” and who are compelled to lead an incomplete existence of their own. Thousands of girls are working in mills; “in great cities thousands are toiling in the ill-paid métiers of seamstresses and needle-women. Higher in the social scale we find two classes of similar abnormal existences—women more or less educated spending youth and middle age as governesses, but laying by nothing, and retiring to a lonely and destitute old age; and old maids surviving toward perfection, both in full sympathy, ringing out a full chord of love and trust—is certainly the most divine state upon this earth. But how often is the actual state one of bitterness and hate, misunderstandings, and distrust, selfishness ready to grind down all the finer feelings in order to gain its own end, unforgiving harshness, niggardly spite, a perfect hell of evil passions, the more furious for being chained up in the small space of two hours and unable to expend themselves in a wider horizon! There are some women to whom marriage is only a secondary consideration; and for these the highest and truest of life, and the pleasures, happiness and advantage of the children are placed far above the wants and wishes of the husband. Women of this description are equally happy as Sisters of Charity, as domestic goddesses, as fond aunts ready to spoil the whole tribe of nephews and nieces, who know where to fly from the stern discipline of father or mother to caresses, kisses and sugar-plums. Again, some of the most exceptional and highest and truest dispositions would suffer terribly in the wear and tear of life, would write under the selfishness of man, and possibly sink altogether under the load of petty worries and inevitable anxieties that the present occupants of the husband and children entail.
Granted even that marriage is the true outlet for women's energies, are we not sometimes the better and the true for what we have, rather than for what we have not? It is said that every woman has had one offer of marriage in the course of her life. If she has not accepted it, from folly or from mistaken motives, or from any other cause, is she not to be pitied, rather than despised, all the rest of her days, and call herself incomplete, or abnormal, or wretched?
The very happiest persons are those who, having abjured enjoyment for themselves, throw all their energies into the lives of others, possessing thus an endless wide range of interest and affection. The involuntary celibates, better recentered from the upper and better educated portions of society, are certainly more to be pitied, rather than more wretched, than to see a girl pining away, listless and dissatisfied, hoping against hope, for the husband that cometh not, and refusing to throw herself heart and soul into any engrossing occupation. She is that unhappy, the only possession that she values as a snare to entrap men, is waning hourly; the very fretting she indulges in is hastening the process. No wonder that a deluge of lamentations about the difficulty of girls getting married, and the absolute necessity there is for women to find husbands in order that they may “suckle fools and chronicle small-boys.” It is a pity that some of our maidens and frivolous girls will develop into scolding shrews and insane useless mothers than that the mere fact of their remaining single should mar and ruin their whole life.
It is very seldom that one hears old bachelors complaining of their loneliness, their blighted lives, or the sense of desolation that undermines their constitution. Yet elderly men troubled with gout, and somewhat pining away in manhood, the waiters in the club, no doubt had once some romance, some absorbing love or crushing sorrow that has caused them to remain single. But men know well enough that the mere act of matrimonially snaking one's life, and doggedly setting to at any task that is available, cures the heartache, and is the best mode of turning tribulation into rejoicing.
There is a place for every thing in nature. Women are gradually themselves finding scope for their faculties, and fresh outlets for their activity. If single men are not unhappy, why should single women be? The mind, absorbed in its own infinitesimal perplexities and affairs, forgets that the same shines over all the earth; that the same impulses and passions and desires nerve all mankind; that history repeats itself, and is but one continued record of failure, disappointments, and desperate struggles after right. From the serene heights of a looker-on the single soul may share the pains and comfort the sorrows of the weary, the heart-stricken, and the erring. In Providence there is a great charm. The single person may roam where he lists, may range to the end of the earth without fear of having his heart-strings plucked at, or feeling himself dragged back by family ties and duties. For him there are no harrowing death-beds, no bitter watchings and anxieties, no agonizing fear of ruin for the sake of those cherished ones dependent on him. Calm and confident, he knows that fate cannot harm him; for it is only through our affections that we are vulnerable. He knows what he has surrendered, but he does not regret it; his privations have been keenly felt, but they have brought him a great possession—the peace of contentment, an abiding and satisfying joy.—Harper's Bazar.

How a Man Goes to Bed.
Speaking of how a man goes to bed, an exchange says: “There's where a man has the advantage. He can undress in a cold room, and have his bed warm before a woman has got her hair plucked out under her shoe pulled off. That's how it looks in print, and this is how it is really: ‘I'm going to bed my dear. It's half-past ten.’ No reply. ‘Now, John, you're always late in the morning. Do go to bed.’ Yes, in a minute, he replies, as he turns the paper inside out and begins a lengthy article headed ‘The Louisiana Muddle.’ Fifteen minutes later she calls from the bedroom: ‘John, come to bed, and don't forget to turn the gas out.’ That's how it looks in print, and this is how it is really: ‘The bill being big enough now,’ she creeps between the cold sheets, while John reads placidly on, his feet across the piano stool and a cigar in his mouth. By and by he rises, yawns, stretches himself, throws the paper on the floor, and, seizing the shaker, proceeds to that vigorous exercise, shaking the coal-stove. Just at this stage a not very pleasant voice inquires: ‘For pity's sake, ain't you ready for bed yet?’ ‘Yes, yes, I'm coming! Why don't you go to sleep and let a fellow alone?’ Then he discovers that there is coal needed. When that is supplied, and the other side of the door is closed, he warms his feet. Next, he slowly begins to undress, and as he stands scratching himself, and absently gazing on the last garment dangling over the back of the chair, he remembers that the clock is not wound yet. When this is attended to he waits a drink of water, and away he promenades to the kitchen. Of course, when he returns his skin resembles that of a picked chicken, and once more he seats himself before the fire for a last ‘warm-up.’ As the clock strikes twelve he turns on the gas, and with a flop of the bed-clothes and a few spasmodic shivers he subsides. No, not yet he forgets to see if the front of cold war, and then quietly inquires: ‘Good gracious! if that man ain't enough to try the patience of Job!’ Setting her teeth hard, she awaits the final flop, with the accompanying blast of cold war, and then quietly inquires: ‘Are you settled for the night?’ To which he replies by muttering: ‘If you ain't the provokingest woman!’”
The Last of the Modocs.
Isaac H. Bromley writes from the Indian Territory:
“Leaving the barbaric glitter and filth of the camps of the Nez Percés with the lazy haves in their tents, the fate, and the sooner their Government rations with the traders, the medicine men beating the lodge-poles and making their doleful mummy, we started on our return, intending to visit some of the Modocs, and then quietly inquiring: ‘Are you settled for the night?’ To which he replies by muttering: ‘If you ain't the provokingest woman!’”
In a dropping weather, and with a cold growing throat of drizzling nothing up.”
The Cologne Gazette reports a new edition of the infernal machine of the murderer Thomas. As Zuege, in Upper Silesia, a letter directed to a man named Pelka, to be delivered into his own hands, was given up to his wife. Being very large and thick, and fastened with tape, it excited her curiosity. On putting one of the ends of the tape for the purpose of opening the letter, there was a frightful explosion. Fran Pelka was thrown down and severely injured, and all the windows in the house were broken. As far as has been discovered from the fragments afterward picked up, it appears that the letter contained some explosive substance, either dynamite or nitro-glycerine, and a cap and needle for its ignition, with which the tape could be fastened. The author of the crime has not yet been caught, but whoever he is has not given up his intention to destroy Pelka, for he has written a letter to the latter's employer, threatening to repeat the attempt on his life if he is not at once dismissed.
It is stated that such business depression as exists in the island of Jamaica has not been known for seventy-five years. A London failure ruined several plantations, and they have been abandoned. The crops of this year are reported to be good, and better times are expected.
A curious ancient Mexican library has been found in the ruins of a vast palace at Xavi, near Chiapas, in Southern Mexico. The writings are inscribed on terra-cotta tablets half an inch thick, and are supposed to be sacred records, but the language in which they are written is not accurately known.

westward with the far-away look of home-sickness and longing, and he said: “Yes, I like to go back; my sister there, my friends there.”
“I was much interested in this chief, Bogus Charley. Other Indians complained or begged, were sullen or haughty; either posed or growled. This man, with felt hat, blue shirt, and overalls, without beard or feather or a touch of color, an utterly unheroic person in appearance, with no effort at a display or attempt to excite sympathy or admiration, seemed to me great; great in the simplicity of his talk, his studied eloquence, his profound natural pathos, his dignity without haughtiness and grace without affectation, and greatest of all in the philosophic resignation with which he accepted his fate with hardly a murmur or complaint. As he stood there on a little eminence overlooking the corn-field, his arms folded and his lithe figure lashed against the sky, not looking at us as we drove away, it was not difficult to picture in him a heroic Last of the Modocs. He had said little, but the tone and manner of what he did say so impressed me that for a while I did feel as though this man represented an aggrieved and despoiled race, and that I, as a representative of the race that had wronged him, had something to be sorry for. I presume I idealized him. One night as we were in the picture, and that I shall retain. But what an anomalous name! ‘Bogus Charley’! Well, let him be Bogus, and go back to the squalor of his cabin. The picture in my memory of the Last of the Modocs, they have transfused with a glow from the sunset. Bogus Charley is a fact, and a clod of course. My Indian is a poem.”
Luck.
There is no such thing as luck in this world. The idea is preposterous. The man who depends upon it will never amount to anything; will be a mere cypher. One night as we were in the picture, and that I shall retain. But what an anomalous name! ‘Bogus Charley’! Well, let him be Bogus, and go back to the squalor of his cabin. The picture in my memory of the Last of the Modocs, they have transfused with a glow from the sunset. Bogus Charley is a fact, and a clod of course. My Indian is a poem.”
Success is not luck—not in the least. It did not come by chance, but by the natural result of long and strenuous effort. There was no waiting, no idle hoping. The probabilities were seized and the possibilities worked out to the utmost fraction. While the foolish dreamers were idle the successful man was up and doing. He knew that doomsday would come as soon as luck. Better luck is not a distant idea, all superstitions. If the affairs of To world were dependent upon it, reasoning powers would never have been given; knowledge would not have been bestowed; the brainless faculties of beasts of the field would have been all sufficient. We would only have had to wait. Luck would have brought all we needed—that is to the fortunate—and for those cursed by “bad luck,” there would have been no struggling against fate, and the sooner their Government rations with the traders, the medicine men beating the lodge-poles and making their doleful mummy, we started on our return, intending to visit some of the Modocs, and then quietly inquiring: ‘Are you settled for the night?’ To which he replies by muttering: ‘If you ain't the provokingest woman!’”
It is all moonshine of the thinnest quality.
Young man, all the luck you can find will be wrought out by brain and muscle—by effort and daring and unending will; by plunging into the stream; by climbing the mountain; by “padding your own canoe”; by nerve; by pushing one's brain forward; by kicking hope out of doors; by resisting the temptation to sloth; by turning a deaf ear to idle dreams. Fools alone trust to any other means of acquiring reputation and fortune.
Verily believers (and followers of their belief) in luck, will find themselves in the situation of Cowper's people:
“Who spent their lives In dropping luckless words, And growing stout of drizzling nothing up.”
THE Cologne Gazette reports a new edition of the infernal machine of the murderer Thomas. As Zuege, in Upper Silesia, a letter directed to a man named Pelka, to be delivered into his own hands, was given up to his wife. Being very large and thick, and fastened with tape, it excited her curiosity. On putting one of the ends of the tape for the purpose of opening the letter, there was a frightful explosion. Fran Pelka was thrown down and severely injured, and all the windows in the house were broken. As far as has been discovered from the fragments afterward picked up, it appears that the letter contained some explosive substance, either dynamite or nitro-glycerine, and a cap and needle for its ignition, with which the tape could be fastened. The author of the crime has not yet been caught, but whoever he is has not given up his intention to destroy Pelka, for he has written a letter to the latter's employer, threatening to repeat the attempt on his life if he is not at once dismissed.
It is stated that such business depression as exists in the island of Jamaica has not been known for seventy-five years. A London failure ruined several plantations, and they have been abandoned. The crops of this year are reported to be good, and better times are expected.
A curious ancient Mexican library has been found in the ruins of a vast palace at Xavi, near Chiapas, in Southern Mexico. The writings are inscribed on terra-cotta tablets half an inch thick, and are supposed to be sacred records, but the language in which they are written is not accurately known.

Six new railroads are being built in Iowa.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1879.

NUMBER 46.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Medical Instruments, Grains, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second and Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAN,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third and Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Third and Oak Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Trunks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Robinson's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Robinson's Hotel.

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak and Second Streets.

GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCLAM,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. M. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., op. Bailey's Park.

MILLS.

CRIST AND SINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.

OAKLAND WOOLLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

WM. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building,
at Auctioneer.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Shouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McClam's office.

MASONS.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First street.

LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars, Alder St.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars, and Tobacco, French Candy, Paints, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence next door to Express office.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

WILL practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.,
collections promptly attended to. d28-3

EDMUND S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
UPPER IN OFFICE'S BUILDING,
Lawyer Floor.

Particular attention given to transacting negotiation of bank bills and collection of debts. Terms negotiated. j24-15

J. W. MITCHELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jas. 2nd.

THO. J. PHOENIX, A. B. GOSDER,
P. DEDICORD & GOSDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 2nd.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the
EYE and EAR, including those of the Nose and
Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap21-15

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had to his usual large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction. ap21

VALUABLE MILL PROPERTY

AT OAKLAND

FOR SALE.

The subscriber offers at private sale, a Valuable Mill, situated on the Youngsboro river,
in the town of Oakland, and now doing a successful business. In connection with its power falling water power, it has a good and almost new 2 Horse Power Engine to which a Saw Mill can be attached. Its location renders it the most desirable for general milling purposes of any in the country.
There are also five acres of land, well adapted
for building lots, attached, which will be sold together or separate at the option of the purchaser. Also a Two and a half story FRAME DWELLING HOUSE, in good order
and pleasantly situated, with all necessary
outbuildings attached; either of which will be sold separately or together. Price VERY LOW, and terms easy.

For further particulars, address,
W. A. DAILY,
832 1/2 Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

850 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

One More and One Less.

A prince imprisoned and sentenced to death had his sentence commuted to confinement for a number of days. A number of carrier pigeons were placed in a cage into which he could not look, but from which, each morning at sunrise, he could take one. When the last pigeon should be sent to his waiting friends he should be released and allowed to follow it. With increasing anxiety each succeeding morning he put in his hand hoping for the last pigeon. We are prisoners of hope. Each year is dismissed to the eternities with billings of approaching release. A goodly company of friends are waiting each messenger, and waiting for the last. With what joy the believer can approach the end! If this last year is to be the last, and we are to go with it, how gladly we can arrange our cell before leaving it; how gladly catch the sound of the grating key as it is turned in the lock for our release! One more messenger has been sent; one less is to be sent.

Passing from the old to the new year is an event that awakens shimmering memories, and loosens the resting pangs of fancy. True, it is no more than the transition from any one day to its successor, or from any one moment to its successor, yet it has power to move the heart and stir the thought which it does not share with any other period. Years are God's creations. Man only recognizes and numbers them. God ordains the years, and the months, and the days. All other divisions of time are our inventions. In the sweep of our earth round its orbit there is a certain natural measurement of duration. The earth has made her cells upon all her neighbors, and returns for a new round of attention. The seasons have been completed, and are being renewed. The year is born in the thought of God; it is marked by his great plan. "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs and for seasons, and for days, and for years." (Gen. 1, 11.) There is a completeness about the year that characterizes no other division of time. This, then, is the natural time for us to review our lives, take an account of the journey already passed, and estimate that part of the journey just before us. This is a day of time for recall. Now we can count the vacancies in the ranks, and arrange to fill them.

The old year lays its rich lessons of experience. Even a horse remembers a dangerous place in the road. We certainly can do no less than learn by what we have enjoyed and suffered. The year has gone with its accomplished facts. It is a bound volume. We can read it but we cannot tear out its pages. Many a man would give his entire fortune for the ability to blot out single pages of past history. There are the blots. Nobody can erase them. All we can do is to avoid their repetition, and so make our future better. God, who can make all things new, and cause old things to pass away, may blot out all the handwriting against us. We may write with a steady hand the remaining pages in our copy-books. This world is a school. We are here not because we are perfect, but to be made perfect. The last pages will measure our skill, and show much we have learned. 1878 may thus teach us, and give us courage for all the future. As we stand on the threshold of 1879, it is possible and wise for us to leave all our sins. We do not need them for this coming year. They cannot help us. They only lead us down, and weaken us. They derange our system; they hinder us; they deform us; they take the beauty out of our faces, the peace out of our hearts, the unity out of our lives, the power out of our prayers, the victory out of our faith, and the heaven out of our characters.

There is a sure release from all our sins in Christ Jesus. He can unhook this dead weight from our souls, and allow us to bound along life's highway singing the songs of the redeemed. He is the end of the law. The law is satisfied in him, and therefore has no more claim against us. We did owe ten thousand talents and had nothing to pay. But Jesus redeemed us and sets us free. We can not take up the anchor of past sins. We cannot drag them. We can only cut them away. We do not want them any more. We have no use for them. We can drop them, let go of them, and take Christ Jesus as our all and in all. We can take him, not in any theory or scheme of our own, but in the facts of the New Testament promises. He saves to the utmost all them that come unto God

by him. If the past year is freighted with unpleasant or ungodly memories, hand it all over to the Saviour.
As you read these simple words let go of the past, and take hold upon Jesus.

He that is able to forgive your past sins can also save you from the consequences of your past sins. Jacob had shown a very hard, selfish, dishonest nature. He had lied to his blind old father, cheated his generous brother, and defrauded his father-in-law. All his past accumulated sins had been laid upon him. Esau was at hand with an avenging host. Jacob, in sore distress, called on God and clung to Jehovah, and Jehovah blessed him,
and delivered him from the foe he had created, and the penalties he had deserved. Cast yourself down at Jesus' feet and let him do his way within you and concerning you, and he will give you deliverance from the past,
peace in the present, and certain hope for the future.

The year 1879 shall bring great changes. Death shall come to many homes. Vast multitudes shall be called to their account. Will I be one? Sixty thousand mortals will sink into drunkards' graves in this land. Will any of my friends be in the list? Fortunes will be scattered.
Will I be among the losers? And I ready for any fate? These are questions worth asking. Time is asking them, and eternity must soon answer
them.

The year also brings joy and gladness. Many a couple will meet before the marriage altar. Many a home will rejoice over the coming of messengers from the worlds above. Many a man will rejoice on account of fortune gained or rescued. Thus the year will be full of blessings and comforts. Infinite love is always seeking opportunities for the bestow-ment of good gifts. Whenever a soul nurtures a character that can be trusted without being harmed, then God is glad to trust and bless. "O that there were such an heart in thee that thou wouldst hear my words!" is the will of infinite love over each individual in all lines of use and action.
The treasury of God is full, and giving does not impoverish him. All we need is to hold our hearts in such subjection to his will, that he can say of us as he did of Abraham: "I know Abraham, that he will order
his house after me."

There are principles and duties
to be bestowed during the next twelve months in the spiritual kingdom. They are offered as prizes.
Obedience, courage, faith, works of righteousness, the Christly spirit of sacrifice, are the branches of spiritual science in which the candidates will be examined. The examination may be a trial, and the trial may be severe, but the prize is beyond all computation. Let us strive earnestly for the best gifts. —N. Y. Christian Advocate.

The Opinion of an Outsider.

There is no city in the world where election frauds are practiced so openly and with such impunity as in Baltimore. The judges and clerks at the various voting places are appointed by a board of supervisors,
and are sworn for a term of one year.
The law requires that one judge at each precinct shall not be of the same political party as the other two,
and that the clerks shall not be of the same political party. This provision was intended to give the minority party representation on the election boards, but the supervisors first evaded it by appointing totally unfit persons, who claimed to be Republicans, but were repudiated by the local organizations, and for the last two years no attempt has been made to keep up even the pretence of complying with the law. In the words which would be carried by the Republicans at a fair election, it is no uncommon thing to see the most according ring repeaters and ballot box
stuffers figuring as Republican judges and clerks.

The law requires the supervisors
to publish the names of the judges
one week before the election; but neither the residence nor the occupation of the persons selected to hold the election is given; and inasmuch as the changes made between the date of publication and the day of election are not advertised, the honest voters have no notice whatever of the appointment of these vicious "dead beats" until they see them in charge of the ballot boxes. A liberal stock of whiskey is laid in, and it often happens that the judges drop into a condition of mandlin inbecility long before the polls are closed.

The fraudulent ballots, however, are generally put into the box early in the morning, before the wits of the experts have become muddled by their frequent potations.

The most flagrant frauds were committed at the elections in 1877,
when there was practically no opposition to the ring candidates. Few people went to the polls; nevertheless, an enormously heavy vote was returned simply because the men who had, by cheating at the Democratic primaries, gained control of the party machinery, thought it necessary to keep up an impression that they were bringing out the vote. At some of the precincts the voters who passed in the ballots through the windows were counted by those outside, and wherever this was done it was found that the vote returned was more than double that actually cast.

At the last Congressional election
the presence of the United States
supervisors and deputy marshals prevented the wholesale ballot-box stuffing that is always practiced at the municipal and State elections;
nevertheless, the investigation made by the Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court developed the fact that in three precincts of the Seventeenth ward the number of ballots found in the boxes exceeded the number of voters by 700. These ballots were for the most part out in the boxes before the voting began,
and the fraud seems to have been systematized as to make each precinct contribute a certain quota of votes over and above those actually cast.

Baltimore is a Democratic city, and in any contest that appeals to partisan feeling, there will be an honest Democratic majority ranging from 5,000 to 7,000. But there are five wards which are naturally Republican, and it is to retain supremacy in these that the enormous cheating is done by the local politicians and petty office holders, who feel under obligation "to carry their own wards," in order to retain their places and their influence in the party. The reputable Democrats, and especially those of Southern birth,
have for a long time been utterly disgusted at this condition of affairs,
but instead of exerting themselves to procure the indictment and punishment of the rascals who perpetrate these frauds from year to year, they sullenly remain away from the polls while industrious repeaters persuade them and vote on their names.

The revelations made by the Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court have at last stirred the leading men of the anti-ring section of the party to action, and their first step has been to bring such a pressure to bear upon Governor Carroll as to compel him to reconstitute the Board of Election Supervisors and to appoint men whose standing in the community is a sufficient guaranty that they will not select the judges and clerks of election from the criminal classes. Most of the bosses of the Ring are now holding lucrative offices, and are looking forward to a re-election next year. It is hinted that this new movement in the interest of fair elections has been taken with a view of heading them off and giving them notice in advance that if they secure a re-nomination by fraud at the primaries they cannot re-elect themselves by fraud at the polls. —Philadelphia Press.

Speech of Judge Garfield.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—Hon. James A.
Garfield, of Ohio, delivered a speech
before the Honest Money League today, of which the following is a synopsis: Mr. Garfield said resumption would be maintained, first, because national honesty, good government and the prosperity of all our people demand it; second, because we are able to maintain it. He reviewed our recent financial history,
and said a depreciated and fluctuating currency has been the chief cause of our recent disasters. The recovery from such disasters has come in only one way—by economy, reduction of credits, and a return to the basis of real money. The revival has begun. A favorable balance of trade has made resumption comparatively easy, and, having come, it will stay. The coin reserve in the treasury is amply sufficient. The Secretary of the Treasury has both authority and ability to increase it.
People will have no motive to demand any great amount of coin,
because paper at par is more convenient than gold or silver. The banks are bound by law and by their own interest to add in maintaining resumption. The amount of bonds

now held abroad is too small to enable foreign creditors to drain us of our coin. If necessary we can sell to Europe more than enough of our 4 per cent. bonds to balance the amount of 6 per cents. that she could send home.
However, all danger is not yet passed, and resumption can be defeated in either of two ways—first, by a great and unexpected calamity, such as a war or a general failure of our crops, which would turn the balance of trade against us; second, by hostile legislation in Congress. The probability of the former occurrences is too remote to merit consideration, and the vigilance and intelligence of our people must avert the latter danger. Mr. Garfield did not believe that resumption would be gainassailed by direct legislation, but thought the real danger lay in indirect assaults which may be made in various ways. If the expenditures of government should be increased by large appropriations for various schemes urged upon Congress, and a deficit in the revenues be thus produced, Congress would be tempted rather than to levy additional taxes to issue more greenbacks and carry expansion to a point at which resumption would brake down. A rigorous economy and a persistent maintenance of a revenue sufficient to meet current expenses,
and for the sinking fund, will be our safeguards in this direction. The most dangerous indirect assault upon resumption is the attempt to abolish national banks and substitute greenbacks for bank notes. Should this attempt succeed it will inevitably result in the suspension of specie payments. Mr. Garfield declared any attempt by Congress to adjust the volume of currency to the wants of trade by arbitrary legislation is doomed to certain and disastrous failure. The abolition of national banks means destruction of the indispensable self-adjusting principle of our currency system. To make resumption sure we should insist that our present currency and coinage laws should remain for the present unchanged, though later on the coinage law may need modification. In closing Mr. Garfield said successful resumption would add greatly in bringing "clearing weather" into the murky sky of our politics. Through the period of which resumption marks the close our constitution has been on trial for its life, and, reviewing this period, we have the right to say the fitness of our institutions has been vindicated and our confidence
in their stability strengthened.

There is a strong point urged in favor of the election of Senator Bayard to the Presidency. His State is small. He could appoint all his "sisters, cousins and sons" to office
and provide every Democrat in Delaware with a good place and then leave something for outsiders. Not so with the President who hails from a populous State like Ohio or New York.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sale and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old and Reliable "SEWING MACHINE."
The price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the attachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people far beyond that ever yet attained by any other machine at any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are leaving the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "SEWING MACHINE." Knowing from experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can outsell
all other Machines, where the superior quality and low price is made known. This splendid Machine
combines all the improvements. Is far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a Serviceable Sewing Machine. In
every particular, that will outlast
any Machine, and at a price far down
below any other. It is thoroughly warranted for five years. Kept in order free of charge. And sent to any part of the Country for examination
by the customer before payment of the bill. We can predict equally as large a demand for them in this section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured
should write direct to the Factory.
And enterprising persons wishing to seize the chance should apply for so desirable an agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper.
Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor., Broadway and Clinton Place, New York.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDIN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE DEATH OF THE OLD YEAR.

Full, knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are warily sighing;
Till ye the church bells and all about,
And round softly and speak low.

For the old Year lies a-dying,
Old Year you must not die,
You come to no so readily,
You lived with us so steadily,
Old Year you shall not die.

He little still he doth not move;
He will not see the dawn of day,
He hath no other life above,
He gave me a friend, and a true, true love.

And the New Year will take 'em away,
Old Year, you must not die;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old Year you shall not die.

He doth his bumpers to the brim;
A soldier you we shall not see,
But though his eyes be to the sky,
And though his feet speak ill of him,

How a friend to me,
Old Year you shall not die;
We did go hand and hand with you;
He had a mind to be with you,
Old Year, if you must die.

He was full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are over,
To see him die, before the year,
His son and his dear old wife past-bate,

But he'll be dead before,
Every one for his own,
The night is a sorry end and, my friend,
And the New Year will take 'em away,
Old Year, if you must die.

How hard he breathes! over the snow,
The shadow flicker to and fro,
The cricket chirps, the light burns low;
The nearly twelve o'clock.

Speak out before you die,
What it is you think for you;
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin,
His eyes are to the sky,
Step from the earth and let him in
That standeth there alone.

And watch as he goes,
There's a new face on the door, my friend,
And a new face on the door,
A new face on the door.

—Affred Thompson.

DAISY WILDE'S NEW YEAR.

"THERE! it is finished at last," said Daisy Wilde, with a weary sigh, as she put aside the beautiful pearl silk dress, and pressed her hands to her throbbing temples. "It is finished at last, Effie, and we will have something new for our New Year's dinner."

"I am glad it is done," returned Effie, looking up anxiously into her sister's face. "I was afraid you would work yourself sick over that great pile of shining stuff. Why, how pale you are! I know your head aches fearfully. O, Daisy! I would rather go without a New Year's dinner all my life than have you suffer so." And the child twined her arms around her sister's neck and kissed her tenderly.

"It is only a slight headache," said Daisy, attempting to smile. "It will soon be over. I think it was very good of Miss Stark to let me do this work and earn some money. Mrs. Haworth, the rich lady who lives in Lexington Avenue, is to receive her New Year's calls in this morning. There, Effie, you see, now we must rise over so early in the morning, and be bright and happy all day."

A few moments later the child was singly ensconced in the bed in the corner of the room, but long after her eyes were closed in sleep, Daisy sat by the fire, dreaming. She was an exceedingly lovely creature, this Daisy Wilde. She looked very fair, fragile and girlish as she sat there, musing, for twenty years had passed over her life with gentle fingers, bringing out new beauties in spite of all the cares and sorrows that had beset her in the last three years of the twenty. She was pale, poor thing! The bright roses, that in former days had relieved the pearly clearness of her complexion, no longer bloomed on the velvet cheeks; but the big brown eyes retained their old-time brilliancy, except that they now shone with a soft and luster, as if mollified by suffering.

She remembered a time when she had lived in a grand mansion, surrounded by every luxury that money could procure; when she had worn gorgeous silks, and received New Year's calls, and was petted and admired by everybody. There was one among her numerous admirers whom she remembered more distinctly—more fondly, than all others—handsome, noble-hearted Paul Marston. Paul was a poor young man, working on a small salary in the Custom-House, while Daisy was the indulged child of wealthy parents; but notwithstanding the wide difference in their stations the two had met and loved. The young man's fair, open integrity, strong intellect and bright, genial powers of fascination completely won the heart that was too pure and honest to succumb to the transparent charms of wealth and fashion.

Wildie, whose notions touching the organization of society were purely aristocratic, refused to favor the suit. When Daisy pleaded, however, he relented so far as to propose a condition. Paul Marston should go away, and stay five years, without corresponding or communicating in any way, with his daughter. If, at the end of that time, he had succeeded in amassing a respectable fortune, he could return and claim Daisy's hand without further opposition.

There was no alternative, and so the lovers had separated. Paul going to California to seek his fortune. A year and a half had elapsed by and then had come Mr. Wilde's failure. He had speculated heavily and lost. He was a ruined man. His home, his furniture, everything was taken from him. The rich family was suddenly hurled in the depths of poverty. Unable to bear up under the shock, Mr. Wilde had sickened and died, and a month later his wife, who had long been in delicate health, was laid beside him in the cemetery.

This Daisy and her little ten-years-old sister were left friendless and homeless in a cold, unfeeling world—left entirely upon their own resources, with no one to go to for support or protection. In this trying ordeal Daisy had managed to provide for herself and Effie by teaching music till she was overtaken by a slow fever, when her pupils had all left her. Recovering from her illness she had resorted to the needle for support, and working hard day and night continued to fight the wolf from the door. They lived in the attic of a crazy old tenement house, but woman's tact made the single room almost cozy.

Miss Stark, the fashionable dress-maker who lived near, had kindly furnished for Daisy's nimble fingers when none could be found elsewhere, and so she passed her time with the result thereof that she finally trusted the girl with the costly pearl silk which the elegant Mrs. Haworth was to wear on New Year's Day. The dress was finished now, and Daisy could be paid liberally for her work when Miss Stark called for it in the morning, and then she would buy something real nice for Effie's New Year's dinner.

So she sat and dreamed, and even allowed herself to wonder where Paul Marston was on that particular night. It was nearly time for him to return now; but, alas! he would not find her waiting to welcome him home with open arms. Perhaps, in his manly generosity, he would search for her, but she was firm in her resolution not to be found. She could never be his wife now. She loved him too sincerely, too unselfishly, to let him throw himself away on a penniless orphan, when many a rich heiress would have been glad to accept his hand in marriage.

That was what Daisy Wilde thought, and the church bells all over the city were ringing in the New Year when she finally laid her weary head beside her sister's and fell asleep.

She was awakened by a scream—a short, shrill cry, so sudden and startling, that she instantly sat up in bed, with her great brown eyes open to their widest extent. It was broad daylight; the first slanting beams of the morning sun were struggling through the dingy attic window; a cheerful fire glowed brightly and comfortably. But Daisy observed none of these things. The first object that met her startled gaze was Effie standing in the middle of the room, her face as pale as death, and her eyes wearing a wild, scared look.

"Why, Effie, child, what is the matter?" demanded Daisy, in alarm. "What made you scream so?"

"I—I couldn't help it," gasped the child, with an expression of intense agony. "O, sister, what shall I do? I have ruined it!"

"Ruined what?"

"The dress!" and she pointed to where Mrs. Haworth's pearl silk lay in shining folds on a corner of the chair.

Daisy needed no further explanation. A sudden choking sensation, and her heart seemed to stand still. From cheeks and lips every vestige of color fled, and for a single moment she lay as if her senses were deserting her. She saw what had happened. Effie had risen early, happy in the thought that she would make the fire and prepare the simple breakfast, while her tired sister slept. The dress had been laid on the table; Effie had removed it in order to prepare the morning meal, placing it carefully on the chairs. A live spark, leaping from the crackling fire, had fallen upon it, burning a large hole through and through its rich folds, and ruining it utterly.

"O, Effie—Effie!" broke from Daisy's white lips.

And then she saw Effie down on her knees by the bedside, sobbing as if her heart would break, and begging pitiously to be forgiven. The sight aroused her. She choked down her feelings, and, though the pallor of her face betrayed her, she said quite calmly:

"There, Effie, don't cry so. What can't be cured must be endured, you know, and tears won't help us out of our trouble. Besides, it was not your fault, at all, so don't feel so badly about it. I am sure I can do over mine. See, my dinner to-day, and a just heaven will not let us suffer for food to eat. Cheer up, darling!"

But Effie continued to cry and wring her hands. "I can't cheer up," she wailed. "I wanted you to be happy to-day, and now you will be so sad and pale; and Miss Stark will be awful angry, and Mrs. Haworth will send us to jail!"

By this time Daisy had risen and hastily dressed, and she turned and caught her little sister in her arms.

"Don't, Effie," she pleaded. "It is your distress that grieves me more than anything else. I shall not wait for Miss Stark to come, but will take the ruined dress to Miss Haworth myself, and tell her the whole truth. By that means Miss Stark will be exonerated from all blame, and perhaps the rich lady will not have us arrested."

Daisy laid her hand on her sister's head, and gave her resolution no time to cool. Hastily donning her cloak and hood, and wrapping the ruined dress in an old newspaper, she kissed Effie's wet cheek, and bravely set out to perform her unpleasant duty.

It was a hard task, and Daisy felt a frightened chill creep into her very heart at the thought of encountering Mrs. Haworth's wrath; yet she did not falter or turn back, but hurried breathlessly on, half fearful that her courage would fail her before her mission was performed. It was a gloomiest New Year's Day. The sun shone from a cloudless sky, the bells in all the neighboring steeples pealed forth their glad chiming, and the people passing to and fro all wore bright, cheerful faces. It seemed to Daisy that everybody was happy but her, and that nobody in the wide world cared to trouble themselves about that miserable reding-pain away down in her unloved heart.

She was all out of breath when at last she stood on the wide marble steps of the Haworth mansion and rang the door-bell.

"I want to see Mrs. Haworth," she said to the servant who opened the door, and she brushed past him without waiting to be refused admittance.

She was ushered into the grand drawing-room, where the arrangements had all been completed for the reception of New Year's callers. She sank down on one of a luxurious sofa, and waited in trembling anxiety the mistress of the mansion to appear.

In a few moments a rustling of silk heralded the coming of the expected terror, and a tall, handsome lady, in a trailing white wrapper, entered the drawing-room. Her fine dark eyes evinced considerable surprise as she looked into the pale, girlish face of her visitor, but there was nothing unkind in her questioning glance.

"Are you Mrs. Haworth?" asked Daisy, faintly.

The lady replied in the affirmative, as she reclined with regal grace in a deep arm-chair, and folded her white, jeweled hands on her lap.

Daisy immediately swallowed the lump in her throat, and bravely told her simple story—told it all, from beginning to end, and without attempting to conceal a single item of the truth. At the same time she opened the bundle, displaying the elegant pearl silk, and showing how utterly it was spoiled. At first a slight frown disturbed the placidity of Mrs. Haworth's brow, but it cleared away in an instant, and she gazed long and curiously into the soft brown eyes raised so pleadingly to hers.

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" she coolly asked.

"I don't know," replied Daisy, her voice beginning to tremble a little. "We are very poor, Effie and I, but I will work hard and pay you little by little, and maybe some time—"

But here Mrs. Haworth interrupted and astonished her by breaking into a peep of laughter.

"Why, you innocent little goose! exclaimed the lady; "to imagine that I would accept money from you. I am rich, and have other dresses that will carry a picture of a lady who has about this little accident. Whenever you want work sent to me, and if you need money for your present wants, say but the word and you shall have it."

A flash of pride came into the brown eyes, as Daisy rose to her fullest height, and drew her cloak around her slight figure.

"You are very good," she said earnestly. "I have not told me who you are. Your face doesn't seem like a stranger's; I thought at first that I must have met you some time in the past; but I now know who it is. My brother carries a picture of a lady who has your face and eyes. Will you tell me your name?"

"Daisy Wilde," replied the girl, modestly.

"Daisy Wilde!" ejaculated a voice that caused both women to start. "Who uttered that name? Who brings news of Daisy Wilde?"

The floor began to rock and surge beneath Daisy's feet, and a low, hoarse cry, that fell, mainly figure—they could belong to only one person, and that person was Paul Marston! He had entered unobserved, and now stood in the doorway, that streamed in through the long window.

Another moment and he had recognized the little cloaked figure.

"O, Daisy! it is indeed you? Thank God—thank God! I have found you at last!"

And she was conscious of being folded close, close in that loving embrace, while her poor, tired head found a resting place on the broad, protecting bosom that had pillowed her weary head for so long. "I have been for so long!" said Paul, in the fullness of his joy. "I returned from California nearly a year ago, and have been hunting for you ever since. I am glad to see you, and I am glad to have my time was up, and came home a rich man!"

Daisy suddenly struggled free from his embrace.

"Paul Marston, this must not be. I must let you go. I have not yet freed you from your engagement. I am only a poor working girl now, and you're a rich man!"

But he caught her in his arms again, and closed her eyes with his kisses. "Don't tell me of your happiness now; I have waited so long for it," he said, tenderly. "I know you are poor, and I am glad of it. There, don't cry; let me introduce you to my sister, Mrs. Haworth."

Mrs. Haworth ordered her carriage, and went after Effie; for it was decided they should not live another hour in the old tenement house.

And, after all, it was a happy, happy New Year for orphan sisters.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

How to Carve a Holiday Turkey.

It makes no difference whether you buy turkey, goose, duck or chicken—the result will be the same. In other words these remarks will be so shaped as to apply to all manner of fowl whatsoever.

It is better to buy the fowl and pay for it, but this advice is not intended to prejudice any one from obtaining their chickens in the usual manner. Having secured the fowl and baked or roasted it, it becomes the duty of the head of the family to prepare it for eating.

Some people use forty-penny nails to spike the chicken down to a plank, and then do the carving with a buck-saw, but there are other and more convenient ways. Place the fowl on the kitchen table. Attach a chain to either leg, and make fast to the legs of the table, or to eye-bolts driven into the wall. A third chain should pass from the neck of the fowl to the opposite end of the table. The view is then in that condition commonly known as "where he can't wriggle." If ropes are used instead of chains, they should not be less than an inch in diameter and of the best hemp.

It is now a question of how you want the fowl carved. If company is expected to dinner it should be carved in a way to leave the fowl to the family and the house to the company. If it is for the family alone the wishbone should be given to the baby, while the head of the family should take the neck and be thankful that he has been spared to live another year. A fowl carved up like clock-work if one only knows where to begin. As every man has his weak point, so hath a fowl, and there is no use spending over half an hour looking for it when the balance of dinner is waiting. Some men spit on their hands before picking up the carving-iron. They might as well spit on the fowl. If carved with a knife but little preparation is needed. The carver should remove coat and vest and secure a firm grasp for his feet, and muscle and faith should do the rest. There are carvers who seem to imagine that if they can get under a fowl's wing the question is as good as settled—for the fowl. Such carvers have not studied anatomy, either human or animal. You might as well expect to stop a woman's tongue by breaking one of her fingers. Nearly all the fowls have about sixty different bones in their make-up, and you have doubtless seen many which appeared to be all bone. These sixty bones are the brick-work as it were, for the remainder of the fowl to be erected on, and Nature makes no mistake. If you strike the right bone in carving, the whole brick-work gives way in a heap and the carving is the work of only five minutes. If you don't you may saw away and jump up and down and blast the man who sold it to you as long as the table can stand under it. The man who takes an axe to dissect a well-cooked fowl is resorting to brute force needlessly, and instances have been known where the ax has been used to blast the man who sold it to you as long as the table can stand under it. The man who takes an axe to dissect a well-cooked fowl is resorting to brute force needlessly, and instances have been known where the ax has been used to blast the man who sold it to you as long as the table can stand under it. The man who takes an axe to dissect a well-cooked fowl is resorting to brute force needlessly, and instances have been known where the ax has been used to blast the man who sold it to you as long as the table can stand under it.

The fowl should be approached kindly and without any outward evidences of trepidation, but a resort to undue violence is to be discouraged and frowned upon by all spectators. The shadow of a vulnerable point of a rhinoceros is under the fore leg, but it does not necessarily follow that the chicken should be attacked there. On the contrary, the experienced carver will avoid that locality altogether and begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone. Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which fills the breast of fowls, and if rightly prepared it will not obstruct the free use of the knife and the carver should be careful not to begin just below the breastbone.

Anguish sometimes fills the breast of a human being, but it is stilling which

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

The midnight's holy hour—no silence now
Is breaking, like a gentle spirit, o'er
The still and peaceful world. Hark! on the
The bell's deep tones are swelling. 'Tis the
Of the departed year.

No funeral train
Is sweeping past; yet on the stream and wood,
With undimmed light, the moonbeams rest.
Like a pale, spotless shroud, their air is stirred,
As by a mourner's sigh, and on yonder cloud,
That lingers still and peacefully through heaven,
The spirits of the seasons seem to stand.
Young spring, bright summer, autumn's solemn
And winter with his aged looks and breathe
The far wind-whispers wild and wooing wait,
A melancholy dirge for the dead year.
Gone from the earth forever.

Tis a time
For memory and for tears. Within the deep,
Still remembered, the light, a spectral dim,
Whose tones are like the wailing voice of Time,
Heard from the tomb of ages past, the cold
And solemn finger to the beautiful
And left no shadow of their loveless
On the dead waste of life. That spectral light
The cold light of love and joy and love,
And, beaming mournfully above the pale
Sweet, turns that summer there, scatterers dead
Flowers
O'er what has passed to nothingness.

The year
Has gone, and, with it, many a precious thought
Of happy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
In shadows in each heart. In its swift course,
It wove the specter of the beautiful
And they are dead. It had its joy and pain,
Gave us strong life, and the beautiful form
To fall and rise again, and the beautiful
The bright and happy, and the beautiful
Of the dead waste of life. That spectral light
The cold light of love and joy and love,
And, beaming mournfully above the pale
Sweet, turns that summer there, scatterers dead
Flowers
O'er what has passed to nothingness.

Remorseless Time!
Faint spirit of the ages and scathed—wilt
power
Can stay him in his silent course, or melt
His form back to pity? On still
He presses, and forever, the proud hand,
The tender of the ages, that can
Through heaven's unchangeable depths, or brave
The fury of the elements, where
And he has plunged in the thunder's house, Pursue his broad wings at nightfall, and seek dust
To rest upon his mountain-crest—but Time
Knows not the secret of sleep or rest.
And night's dark darkness has no chin to beat His midnight drum. He has no hand to
For earth, like the troubled waters over the head
Of dreaming souls, or rises and sinks
Like bubbles on the water's dory deck.
Spring plumes from the ocean, and so back
To their mother's arms, where they were born,
To heaven their hand and blackened cliffs, and low
Their bell heads to the plain new empires rise,
Gathering the strength of hoary centuries,
And rush down the mountain's side, and
Starting the nations, and the very stars,
Yon bright and burning blaze of gold,
And, like the sun, beloved of their train,
Shoot from the clouds, and scatter and
To darkness in the trackless void, yet Time
Time the hand of the ages, where Back, stern, all-potent, and passes on
And the world's wrecks that strew his path,
And the world's wrecks that strew his path,
Upon the fearful can he was wrought.

A NEW YEAR'S CALL.

Maxwell's lines are bonnie
Where early falls the dew,
And there that Annie Laurie
Gave me her promise true,
Which never forgot will be,
And for Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die.

It was my favorite song. I looked up from the desk where I was writing
as the fresh, young voice rang loud and clear on the summer air, and drawing
the window curtains a little aside peeped out at a young girl in my neighbor's garden.

A young girl as pretty, as blooming,
as pure-looking girl as I have ever seen.
—I thought of the delicate white ness of their beauty—that had stolen from their own tresses to climb the grape-arbor, by the side of which, to pluck the fairest and sweetest, for a moment
she sang the song of the summer sun.

Then for another moment or two she dipped lither and thither among the other flowers, the sun making gold of her flowing hair, until some one called
her. "Millicent!" from the house, and trilling the last line again. "I'd lay me down and die!" like a meadow lark, she vanished from my sight.

My neighbor didn't know I was his neighbor, though I was perfectly aware he was my neighbor's neighbor. I will explain. The cottage in Apple-land, of which I was occupying the second floor, belonged to an old friend of mine who had gone abroad. Knowing that I was anxious to secure a secluded country home for a month or two of the summer so that I might finish and revise—well no matter what, but a work,
I flatter myself, of some importance,
he had kindly offered me the use of the rooms as long as I chose to remain.

Entirely satisfied with my object in going to my friend's cottage, and that was thoroughly understood by the old housekeeper, who never made her appearance excepting at meal time, and who had mentioned my arrival to no
one in the neighborhood.

After dark I used to let myself out at a side gate effectively screened from view by a group of grand old apple trees, and stroll about for an hour or two and then let myself in again without anyone being the wiser.

Not a difficult proceeding, however,
I must admit, as my neighbor's house
and my friend's house were about half a mile from the village on one side,
with about two miles of dense woodland on the other.

They had originally been built for twin sisters who, marrying, refused to be utterly separated from each other,
so only a low fence divided the front
lawns and back gardens.

My neighbor, as I had discovered by peeping at him on sundry occasions,
was an elderly, stout gentleman, with keen, dark eyes, shaggy eyebrows, decidedly florid complexion, stubby nose, stubby beard, stubby hands and a projecting chin and upper lip. His household consisted of his wife, a motherlylooking old lady, as stout as himself, a cock as stout as his wife, a motherly-
man and gardener as stout as the cock,
a rough-coated, awkward dog, answering to the name of "Bub," and a shaggy pony called "Sis."

Well, here I had been domiciled for two weeks, writing away as far dear life—as totally lost to the world as though I had never existed, until the morning when I heard the meadow lark singing "Annie Laurie."

Who could she be? She didn't resemble my neighbor or my neighbor's wife in the least. I resolved to find out, if possible, and so the next morning I said, carelessly, to the old housekeeper, when she brought up my toast and coffee, "Have the elderly couple next door any children?"

"No, sir," was the reply, "not a chick or child, which I don't mean they haven't chickens, sir, for they have,
only as the saying is, Never have had,
and never will have, I suppose, at their time of life, unless by a miracle, though they're awful fond of 'em. Seems to me as folks that are awful fond of 'em young ones never has 'em; p'raps that's the reason they're so fond of 'em!"

"Not knowing what a worry and care
they are falling into ponds, and out of trees, and down stairs, and getting the cholera morbus with eating unripe fruit?"

"And the young lady," I interrupted, dipping a crust into my coffee and nodding toward my neighbor's garden,
"whom I heard singing yesterday was—?"

"Their niece, sir, and is to have all the money when she comes of age if she don't displease her uncle. You see, sir, Miss Millicent's mother lived next door, and her aunt, her mother's twin sister, lived here. They were the two youngest sisters you ever knew, and died within a few days of each other, one leaving a daughter, Miss Millicent, and the other a son, Mr. Chester, and Mr.
Gardner, now our neighbor, was their eldest brother, though he looked no more like them than you do, and he's the guardian, and Miss Millicent's to marry his cousin, and he's expected here on a visit this very day."

I couldn't tell for the life of me why
I spill my coffee on the snowy-white tablecloth and choke myself with the last fragment of toast, but I do, and the old woman looks at me, and thumps me upon the back with all the force of which she is capable, and says, prosaically, "Good gracious! sir, you turned quite black in the face. Don't do it again, sir, for what a deal you dead in the house and everything been so mysterious, and me p'raps accused of the murder." With which pleasing remark she hurries away to answer a ring at the front door-bell, and then returns, telling me as she removes the dishes that the cousin has come. The driver made a mistake and stopped at our door instead of Mr. Gardner's. And a very nice-appearing young man he is, too, and one of those who look as though they would make good husbands and excellent providers, and she glances askance at my papers, pens and ink, for
as I had already discovered the worthy old soul shared her views on the subject, and she gravely doubted
the capability of writers and artists and people of that ilk in regard to beir-
taking care of themselves, and had no doubt at all as to their utter incapability
of taking care of their property.

Breakfast over I went to work again
—that is, I tried to go to work, but my efforts were in vain. "Annie Laurie!"
kept ringing in my head and so I jumbled
my historical facts and the words of the sweet Scotch song together in such wild confusion that at last I gave up in despair, and pushing my writing material away I determined to refresh
my eye and brain by taking a look at my neighbor's beautiful garden.

As I peeped between the blinds Bab came tearing out like mad, and ran round
the grape-arbor three times, snapped at a grasshopper, jumped over the low fence into the meadow, made some communication to Sis, who was grazing there, and got back in time to snatch a morsel of food from the table
upon which she came sauntering up the garden walk.

Millicent and the cousin, a tall, slim,
sharp-faced, passably good-looking young fellow with his hair curiously parted in the middle, a blue necktie
and a faultless summer suit.

I gazed in the mirror at my own obstinate, curly, brown crop that refused to be parted anywhere—my excavated neck and my well-worn blue flannel, and I began to hate him.
Millicent walked beside him, her fair
head drooping and a smile upon her lips. She was dressed in white and had a pink rose clinging to her curls,
and one in her bosom, and a bunch of half-opened buds at her belt, and she looked another from the vine and fastened it with her own pretty hands into the button-hole of her cousin's immaculate coat.

From that moment I hated him and from that moment my work ceased to progress, and I took to walking up and down my rooms in the daytime and strolling about the garden half the night.

In a few days they seemed like mouths to me—"Mr. Chester," the housekeeper called him, went away
again.

I blessed the driver, the horses, the very carriage that took him back to town, for I—yes I have guessed it, I suppose—was wildly in love with my neighbor's fair-haired niece.

Well, one night I was swinging in the hammock that hung in the midst of the group of old apple trees, swinging and thinking of her, when I gradually ceased swinging and thinking and wandered into the land of nod dreams.
And a voice, a sweet familiar voice,
followed me there, and I heard it say,
"But, auntie, I do not love my cousin;
and should a woman marry a man she does not love?"

"No, by heavens! No!" I shouted, springing from the hammock, still half asleep.

Two shrieks, a scampering, a loud back and my neighbor's garden was deserted.

Early the next morning I heard Mr.
Gardner badly and angrily questioning the meek old housekeeper.

"Wished to remain in hiding did
he?" he shouted—"oh! so as to write undisturbed?" And then, sarcastically,
"A very pretty story, but slightly improbable, and a very pretty young man
listening—the spy—to the conversation of two ladies, and rudely joining in nearly out of their senses. Where is he, this retiring young fellow? This exclusive author? By heaven! if he does not come out to me I will go in to him!"

I rushed down stairs and confronted him at his own gate, my eyes flashing
and my voice trembling with passion.

"I am no listener, no spy," I said.
"I was sleeping in my hammock and was suddenly awakened by a very complacent Annie Laurie—that is Millicent—
I mean your niece, asked her companion. In the confusion of the moment I answered the question as en-phatically as it was asked. If I have frightened and offended the young lady
I humbly ask her pardon, but I warn you, sir, to call me no more approbrious names."

Millicent came out on the porch and glanced at me shyly. "He doesn't look very wicked, uncle," she said in a low voice, with a gleam of mischief in her eyes, "and I firmly believe what he says and freely forgive him for the fright he gave me."

I bowed and turned away, and a moment after I heard a rippling laugh,
and then in a few moments more the verse of the song she had sung when first she gladdened my tired eyes:
"Maxwell's lines are bonnie
Where early falls the dew,
And there that Annie Laurie
Gave me her promise true,
Which never forgot will be,
And for Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die."

him until the last note died away. "I
have a call to make here," I said then.
"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "are you
sure. This is no end of swell."

I ascended the steps, walked with-
out a word past the colored servant
who opened the door, straight into the parlor.

She had just risen from the piano,
and with a cry of joy she flew to my
arms.

"The uncle, the aunt, and the cousin
were there."

"Dear uncle," she said, turning her
lovely face toward him, while my arms
still enfolded her, "release me from my promise, I beg you. I have tried
to wait patiently, but he has found me,
and we love each other, and come what
may will never, never be parted again.
Wish us a happy New Year. Dear aunt,
dear cousin, speak for us."

"God bless me!" said the uncle.
"Ours was a love match, Robert,"
whispered the aunt, "and I hope you
may be very happy."

"I hope you may be very happy."
"God bless me!" repeated Uncle
Gardner again, "and God bless you,
my dear, and the young man, too, for
that matter, although he has interfered
so seriously with my cherished plans.
But if you've fully made up your minds
not to part again, 'come what may,'
why there's no more to be said except
that I wish you both a happy New Year!"—Free Press.

Remembering Major Andre.
Among the places that Dean Stanley
mapped out to visit in his recent trip
to this country was the spot where
Major Andre was hanged and buried.
Near Tappan, Rockland County.
The remains of Major Andre were dis-
interred on August 9, 1821, under
the direction of Mr. Buchanan, the British Consul. It was intended to have a public demonstration, but Mr.
Buchanan ascertained that men in New York City had plotted to seize the body
and sink it in the Hudson River. He therefore drove from New York to Tappan in a carriage, taking with him
a costly sarcophagus.

When Major Andre's body was buried, in 1780, two young cedar trees
were set out, one at the head and the other at the foot of the grave. He was buried in a plain pine coffin, and the
roots of the cedar trees were discovered, forty-one years afterward, to have grown over and around it. They had to be removed to get at the coffin
and its dust. Both of the cedar trees
were taken to England and cut up into small boxes and faithful monuments and reliefs by the friends of Major Andre.
The body was taken first to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Denarest, in Tappan, and next morning to New York City, whence it was shipped to England and interred in Westminster
Abbey.

Since then the exact spot where the coffin rested for forty-one years has become a matter of dispute. For many years after the revolution the land was owned by Gerrit Smith, grandfather of
the famous abolitionist. Subsequently
Dr. Bartow purchased the property.
The historical spot had then become
famous, and many persons visited it.
They stole Dr. Bartow's bones, and he had the boulders that had been left
to mark the spot removed to the edge
of the roadway, 100 feet distant, and
planted two cherry trees, one on each side of the road entrance, and said
that there was the spot where Major Andre's body had lain.

But all traces of the original grave
were not lost. Six men yet live who saw the disinterment of the remains in 1821. Mr. Henry W. Field, who was then the sixty-eighth anniversary of the death of Major Andre, wrote to these
six living witnesses, and asked them to meet him in Tappan and try to locate
the burial place. Those who met him
were David D. Brover, 83 years of age;
John H. Outwater, 75; and John J.
Griffiths, 72. Mr. Griffiths was 15
years of age when he stood at the grave,
saw the disinterment, and, and
bowed the remains to the house of the
Rev. Mr. Denarest. He lives at 712
Greenwich street, New York. The
three old men were familiar with every
foot of ground around the neighborhood of the grave. They had played
there as children, and without hesitation they agreed within a few feet.
Their affidavits were taken, and a stake
was driven in the spot chosen by them.
This identification was in consequence
of Dean Stanley's visit.

In company with Cyrus W. Field
and two other friends, Dean Stanley
crossed the Hudson River from Tarry-
town to Nyack, and drove in a carriage
to Tappan. The Rev. Mr. Blauvelt,
the Dutch Reformed minister, conducted the party to the place where
Major Andre met his death. Dean
Stanley was surprised to learn that
nothing remained to mark the spot
where Major Andre was buried, and
that the precise location even had become a matter of dispute. Mr. Field
said at once that he would erect a new monument at his own expense, if the
plot of ground and right of way leading to it from the highway could be secured. A few days afterward, Mr.
Field wrote as follows to an officer of
the Rockland County Historical Society:

DEAR SIR: I am perfectly willing to erect
a monument on Andre Hill, and the Dean of the property who will write an inscription, if the people who own the land will make a grant of about twenty feet square for that purpose. I remain very truly yours, C. W. FIELD,
145 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Oct. 16, 1878.

Negotiations were at once begun
with James Bartow, the owner of the property where the remains of Major Andre were buried. Mr. Bartow will give a deed of the plot and the right of way leading to it. Just before Dean
Stanley departed for Europe he wrote
the inscription, and Mr. Field is to enclose the plot and have the monument
erected.—N. Y. Sun.

The famous rifle marksman, Dr.
Carver, who is in New Haven with his
team of American elk, has just returned from a successful tour through
the South. He will go to California
soon, and in January will sail for Europe, taking his elk team with him.
With his wonderful skill with the rifle,
and his peculiar turnout, he will be likely to create a sensation in the foreign capitals.

"Maxwell's lines are bonnie,
Where early falls the dew,
And there that Annie Laurie
Gave me her promise true,
Which never forgot will be,
And for Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die."

I grasped my friend's arm and held
him until the last note died away. "I
have a call to make here," I said then.
"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "are you
sure. This is no end of swell."

I ascended the steps, walked with-
out a word past the colored servant
who opened the door, straight into the
parlor.

She had just risen from the piano,
and with a cry of joy she flew to my
arms.

"The uncle, the aunt, and the cousin
were there."

"Dear uncle," she said, turning her
lovely face toward him, while my arms
still enfolded her, "release me from
my promise, I beg you. I have tried
to wait patiently, but he has found me,
and we love each other, and come what
may will never, never be parted again.
Wish us a happy New Year. Dear aunt,
dear cousin, speak for us."

"God bless me!" said the uncle.
"Ours was a love match, Robert,"
whispered the aunt, "and I hope you
may be very happy."

"I hope you may be very happy."
"God bless me!" repeated Uncle
Gardner again, "and God bless you,
my dear, and the young man, too, for
that matter, although he has interfered
so seriously with my cherished plans.
But if you've fully made up your minds
not to part again, 'come what may,'
why there's no more to be said except
that I wish you both a happy New Year!"—Free Press.

Remembering Major Andre.
Among the places that Dean Stanley
mapped out to visit in his recent trip
to this country was the spot where
Major Andre was hanged and buried.
Near Tappan, Rockland County.
The remains of Major Andre were dis-
interred on August 9, 1821, under
the direction of Mr. Buchanan, the British Consul. It was intended to
have a public demonstration, but Mr.
Buchanan ascertained that men in New York City had plotted to seize the body
and sink it in the Hudson River. He therefore drove from New York to Tappan in a carriage, taking with him
a costly sarcophagus.

When Major Andre's body was
buried, in 1780, two young cedar trees
were set out, one at the head and the other at the foot of the grave. He was buried in a plain pine coffin, and the
roots of the cedar trees were discovered, forty-one years afterward, to
have grown over and around it. They had to be removed to get at the coffin
and its dust. Both of the cedar trees
were taken to England and cut up into
small boxes and faithful monuments and
reliefs by the friends of Major Andre.
The body was taken first to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Denarest, in Tappan, and next morning to New York City, whence it was shipped to England and interred in Westminster
Abbey.

Since then the exact spot where the
coffin rested for forty-one years has become a matter of dispute. For many years after the revolution the land was
owned by Gerrit Smith, grandfather of
the famous abolitionist. Subsequently
Dr. Bartow purchased the property.
The historical spot had then become
famous, and many persons visited it.
They stole Dr. Bartow's bones, and he
had the boulders that had been left
to mark the spot removed to the edge
of the roadway, 100 feet distant, and
planted two cherry trees, one on each
side of the road entrance, and said
that there was the spot where Major
Andre's body had lain.

But all traces of the original grave
were not lost. Six men yet live who saw the disinterment of the remains in 1821. Mr. Henry W. Field, who was then the sixty-eighth anniversary of the death of Major Andre, wrote to these
six living witnesses, and asked them to
meet him in Tappan and try to locate
the burial place. Those who met him
were David D. Brover, 83 years of age;
John H. Outwater, 75; and John J.
Griffiths, 72. Mr. Griffiths was 15
years of age when he stood at the grave,
saw the disinterment, and, and
bowed the remains to the house of the
Rev. Mr. Denarest. He lives at 712
Greenwich street, New York. The
three old men were familiar with every
foot of ground around the neighborhood of the grave. They had played
there as children, and without hesitation they agreed within a few feet.
Their affidavits were taken, and a stake
was driven in the spot chosen by them.
This identification was in consequence
of Dean Stanley's visit.

In company with Cyrus W. Field
and two other friends, Dean Stanley
crossed the Hudson River from Tarry-
town to Nyack, and drove in a carriage
to Tappan. The Rev. Mr. Blauvelt,
the Dutch Reformed minister, conducted the party to the place where
Major Andre met his death. Dean
Stanley was surprised to learn that
nothing remained to mark the spot
where Major Andre was buried, and
that the precise location even had become a matter of dispute. Mr. Field
said at once that he would erect a new
monument at his own expense, if the
plot of ground and right of way leading to it from the highway could be
secured. A few days afterward, Mr.
Field wrote as follows to an officer of
the Rockland County Historical So-
ciety:

DEAR SIR: I am perfectly willing to erect
a monument on Andre Hill, and the Dean of
the property who will write an inscription, if the people who own the land will make a grant of
about twenty feet square for that purpose. I
remain very truly yours, C. W. FIELD,
145 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Oct. 16, 1878.

Negotiations were at once begun
with James Bartow, the owner of the
property where the remains of Major Andre were buried. Mr. Bartow will give a deed of the plot and the right of way leading to it. Just before Dean
Stanley departed for Europe he wrote
the inscription, and Mr. Field is to
enclose the plot and have the monument
erected.—N. Y. Sun.

The famous rifle marksman, Dr.
Carver, who is in New Haven with his
team of American elk, has just returned from a successful tour through
the South. He will go to California
soon, and in January will sail for Europe, taking his elk team with him.
With his wonderful skill with the rifle,
and his peculiar turnout, he will be
likely to create a sensation in the foreign capitals.

"Maxwell's lines are bonnie,
Where early falls the dew,
And there that Annie Laurie
Gave me her promise true,
Which never forgot will be,
And for Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die."

I grasped my friend's arm and held
him until the last note died away. "I
have a call to make here," I said then.
"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "are you
sure. This is no end of swell."

I ascended the steps, walked with-
out a word past the colored servant
who opened the door, straight into the
parlor.

She had just risen from the piano,
and with a cry of joy she flew to my
arms.

"The uncle, the aunt, and the cousin
were there."

"Dear uncle," she said, turning her
lovely face toward him, while my arms
still enfolded her, "release me from
my promise, I beg you. I have tried
to wait patiently, but he has found me,
and we love each other, and come what
may will never, never be parted again.
Wish us a happy New Year. Dear aunt,
dear cousin, speak for us."

"God bless me!" said the uncle.
"Ours was a love match, Robert,"
whispered the aunt, "and I hope you
may be very happy."

"I hope you may be very happy."
"God bless me!" repeated Uncle
Gardner again, "and God bless you,
my dear, and the young man, too, for
that matter, although he has interfered
so seriously with my cherished plans.
But if you've fully made up your minds
not to part again, 'come what may,'
why there's no more to be said except
that I wish you both a happy New Year!"—Free Press.

Remembering Major Andre.
Among the places that Dean Stanley
mapped out to visit in his recent trip
to this country was the spot where
Major Andre was hanged and buried.
Near Tappan, Rockland County.
The remains of Major Andre were dis-
interred on August 9, 1821, under
the direction of Mr. Buchanan, the British Consul. It was intended to
have a public demonstration, but Mr.
Buchanan ascertained that men in New York City had plotted to seize the body
and sink it in the Hudson River. He therefore drove from New York to Tappan in a carriage, taking with him
a costly sarcophagus.

When Major Andre's body was
buried, in 1780, two young cedar trees
were set out, one at the head and the other at the foot of the grave. He was buried in a plain pine coffin, and the
roots of the cedar trees were discovered, forty-one years afterward, to
have grown over and around it. They had to be removed to get at the coffin
and its dust. Both of the cedar trees
were taken to England and cut up into
small boxes and faithful monuments and
reliefs by the friends of Major Andre.
The body was taken first to the residence of the Rev. Mr. Denarest, in Tappan, and next morning to New York City, whence it was shipped to England and interred in Westminster
Abbey.

Since then the exact spot where the
coffin rested for forty-one years has become a matter of dispute. For many years after the revolution the land was
owned by Gerrit Smith, grandfather of
the famous abolitionist. Subsequently
Dr. Bartow purchased the property.
The historical spot had then become
famous, and many persons visited it.
They stole Dr. Bartow's bones, and he
had the boulders that had been left
to mark the spot removed to the edge
of the roadway, 100 feet distant, and
planted two cherry trees, one on each
side of the road entrance, and said
that there was the spot where Major
Andre's body had lain.

But all traces of the original grave
were not lost. Six men yet live who saw the disinterment of the remains in 1821. Mr. Henry W. Field, who was then the sixty-eighth anniversary of the death of Major Andre, wrote to these
six living witnesses, and asked them to
meet him in Tappan and try to locate
the burial place. Those who met him
were David D. Brover, 83 years of age;
John H. Outwater, 75; and John J.
Griffiths, 72. Mr. Griffiths was 15
years of age when he stood at the grave,
saw the disinterment, and, and
bowed the remains to the house of the
Rev. Mr. Denarest. He lives at 712
Greenwich street, New York. The
three old men were familiar with every
foot of ground around the neighborhood of the grave. They had played
there as children, and without hesitation they agreed within a few feet.
Their affidavits were taken, and a stake
was driven in the spot chosen by them.
This identification was in consequence
of Dean Stanley's visit.

In company with Cyrus W. Field
and two other friends, Dean Stanley
crossed the Hudson River from Tarry-
town to Nyack, and drove in a carriage
to Tappan. The Rev. Mr. Blauvelt,
the Dutch Reformed minister, conducted the party to the place where
Major Andre met his death. Dean
Stanley was surprised to learn that
nothing remained to mark the spot
where Major Andre was buried, and
that the precise location even had become a matter of dispute. Mr. Field
said at once that he would erect a new
monument at his own expense, if the
plot of ground and right of way leading to it from the highway could be
secured. A few days afterward, Mr.
Field wrote as follows to an officer of
the Rockland County Historical So-
ciety:

DEAR SIR: I am perfectly willing to erect
a monument on Andre Hill, and the Dean of
the property who will write an inscription, if the people who own the land will make a grant of
about twenty feet square for that purpose. I
remain very truly yours, C. W. FIELD,
145 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Oct. 16, 1878.

Negotiations were at once begun
with James Bartow, the owner of the
property where the remains of Major Andre were buried. Mr. Bartow will give a deed of the plot and the right of way leading to it. Just before Dean
Stanley departed for Europe he wrote
the inscription, and Mr. Field is to
enclose the plot and have the monument
erected.—N. Y. Sun.

The famous rifle marksman, Dr.
Carver, who is in New Haven with his
team of American elk, has just returned from a successful tour through
the South. He will go to California
soon, and in January will sail for Europe, taking his elk team with him.
With his wonderful skill with the rifle,
and his peculiar turnout, he will be
likely to create a sensation in the foreign capitals.

"Maxwell's lines are bonnie,
Where early falls the dew,
And there that Annie Laurie
Gave me her promise true,
Which never forgot will be,
And for Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die."

I grasped my friend's arm and held
him until the last note died away. "I
have a call to make here," I said then.
"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "are you
sure. This is no end of swell."

I ascended the steps, walked with-
out a word past the colored servant
who opened the door, straight into the
parlor.

She had just risen from the piano,
and with a cry of joy she flew to my
arms.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, $1 00
Three months, $0 75
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines,
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JAN. 11, 1879.

Hon. Morton McMichael, senior editor and proprietor of the Philadelphia North American, and ex-mayor of that city, died Monday evening of heart disease.

The attention of our readers is called to the prospectus of the Baltimore Sun, in this issue. The Sun is an ably conducted newspaper, and we recommend it to any of our readers who wish to take a first class city paper.

England is beginning to talk of a protective tariff, and in the Bristol Chamber of Commerce recently a resolution was offered declaring in favor of such a tariff. It was defeated by a vote of 14 to 11—not much to spare.

It seems now almost certain that Hon. William T. Hamilton will be nominated for Governor by the Democrats. Nearly every Democratic paper in Maryland has spoken
in his favor, and for several days past
there has been unusual activity
among the politicians, and a number of rumors are afloat that Arthur P.
Gorman and George Colton, "bosses"
of the "Ring," have dropped Thomas and now cry aloud for Hamilton.

Try Farming, Young Man.

As we have entered upon the new year many persons have been making new resolutions and promising themselves what they will do or be in the future. Many young men at this point meet with difficulty in the choice of a profession or avocation for life. It is also a lamentable fact that in the selection of a business or occupation, that farming is usually the last considered. The various professions are carefully taken up and considered, and frequently taken up without the necessary adaptability. Hence we see many failures and drudges in professional life. Another class of young men think they must engage in business; and with limited capital and no experience,
they secure a place and start in opposition to men of experience and means. As a result statistics show that 90 percent of those who engage in the mercantile business fail.
Such persons not only lose what they have, but also injure others and cripple the business. Many persons with limited means could buy a few acres of land and by industry and economy, in a few years provide comfortable homes.

The Practical Farmer relates an instance of a nice boy from the country, who, having come into possession of a few thousand dollars, visited an uncle in the city, an old merchant, to get his advice about investing his capital in business. "Go back to the country, young man,"
said the merchant, "and invest your money in land. Buy a farm, settle down on it and do a safe business. I have been in business here nearly 40 years, and have accumulated a fortune; but it has been done by fearful risk, heavy responsibility, constant toil, and worrying anxieties. A dozen times I have been on the verge of bankruptcy, and twice I have been sorely tempted to take my own life.
Of ten men who commenced business here when I did, only one has succeeded. The rest all failed, one after another, some dragging their families to poverty and disgrace. Take my advice. Keep away from the city and its delusive business avenues. Quiet contentment on a moderate competency in the country is the best fortune I could wish you."

Col. Forney tells in the Progress of a bright colored man who called at his office to see him the other day and who told him that he was a graduate of the Howard University, in the District of Columbia. He said he was living in Georgia now. Being asked by the Colonel if he was prosperous and if he was permitted to vote in peace down there, he answered that he was prosperous and contented. "I don't vote very much,"
he said, "but that will come all in good time. If only the Democrats continue to treat us as well as they do now and let us complete our education and pay us our wages, they are mighty gains over the days of slavery, are they not?"

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 6, 1879.

"A good name is to be chosen rather than great riches." But the contest waged between rivals for political place and power are rarely productive of any but a soiled reputation to the principals in the fights, though of the same party. The struggle for the Senatorial succession to Mr. Ingalls, in the Kansas Legislature, is proving, unhappily, to one of the candidates, no exception to the general rule. Mr. Ingalls set out to succeed himself, and thereby invited a scrutiny of his official course that seems likely to retire him prematurely and permanently from politics if only a tithe of the charges
made against him at home and here, can be substantiated. A letter has been published, signed by Mr. Ingalls, in which the Senator threatens a Kansas postmaster with summary dismissal unless he comes up to the terms upon which he received his appointment, to wit: The payment of a stipulated sum monthly, which,
it is further charged, was to go to a fund for the good and behoof of Ingalls. No contradiction has yet been made so far as is publicly known.
This is only one of many damaging allegations heard here of a similarly crooked import; and they have served to confirm the prevalent impression that Mr. Ingalls was privy to the "job" that was put up on ex-Senator Pomeroy a few years ago whereby he was defeated as candidate for U. S. Senator. It seems that the charge of bribery then sprung on him and used with such effect as to defeat him during the first heat of the resulting demoralization, has been so generally dismissed in Kansas as to give him a good prospect of succeeding Ingalls.

The intense cold of the last four days is almost unprecedented in this latitude. The Potomac is hermetically sealed for more than thirty miles down the river.

The appearance of Davis' charges against the Helena (Ark.) Bourbons and the murder of United States witnesses since the appointment of the Teller committee, have made the demand for a searching inquiry and for the prompt punishment of the
as assassins and the men who have defied the election laws more than ever general outside Democratic circles.

Whatever public opinion may be as to the merits of the Schurz-Sheridan controversy, it seems the general opinion that there are yet some Livingston's remaining in the service of the Indian Bureau, however honest the Secretary's efforts to purge the service of such dishonest scoundrels.

UNDINE.

The Russian Problem.

The recent news from Russia shows that there is a very momentous problem working itself out there. It may be briefly stated as the conflict between education and despotism. The Government, the most absolute acanarchy in Europe, has discovered that the Universities, by being centres of light, are centres also of political unrest. When men are educated sufficiently to know their superior liberties enjoyed by other races and at other times they can no longer remain contented with absolute personal government. In March, 1861, the Czar, by emancipating the serfs, laid the foundation of the modern Russia.
Many millions of men who had been annexed to the soil became small landowners and freemen. Then the school houses began to spring up.
The children of the peasants learned to read and write. This was eighteen years ago. The boys who were seven years old at the time of the emancipation are now men of twenty-five.
A large proportion of the men under thirty know how to read and write.
The physical strength of the country,
its young blood and fighting force, is thus educated by emancipation and by the schools to yearn for something of self-government, for some voice at least in the control of affairs. This the Government will not listen to.
Even to talk of such a thing is not far from a crime, and in no place do ideas of personal liberty grow so rapidly as in Universities and schools. It is impossible for Russian youths to read of the Greek Republics and the magnificent breed of men
they produced; the Roman Republic and all its glories; of the Cromwell
and the French, and of the American Republic, without making comparisons with the beaming despotism
under which they live. Such ideas
when once caught have a fascination.
They set men on fire so that they welcome oppression, persecution, and even death to maintain them. Such a spirit is abroad in Russia now. It takes in some places an extreme socialistic form, known as Nihilism. In other places it takes the more moderate form of a mere demand for some voice in the Government, some Constitutional limitations to the uncer-eignty of the Czar. This, however, the Government calls Nihilism, giving to the least desire for reform the worst possible name. And in that police ridden land the telegrams and the press are all under espionage, and every dispatch that comes from Russia comes tainted with governmental manipulation and must be received with suspicion. The Russian Government has discovered that in educating its people it has raised up an enormous antagonism to an enemy.

One or the other of them must go down. There is an irrepressible conflict. It only remains to be seen which will yield. Is the Government strong enough to break down the schools and Universities now that the millions have tasted the sweets
of intellectual development? A military despotism may seem strong
when it is a mere shell, for the army
which supports it may be disaffected
and may dissolve away at the moment of trial. The young soldiers of the Russian army have been educated. Will they help to crush the schools? The problem is one that enlists in the strongest way the sympathies of all who have been raised in the enjoyment of education and liberty.—Balto. Gazette.

The Political Outlook in Maryland.

To anyone who is in the habit of watching our local politics, it is quite evident that there is more than an ordinary commotion in the political hive just now. The election, which is to take place next Fall, is on several accounts invested with greater interest than usual.

There is no denying the fact, that the situation is a complicated one, as far as the Democratic party is concerned. There are several elements that conspire to make it so. The Clerkships and the combinations concerning them, which have been and are forming, carry with them an element of discord and confusion which renders it somewhat difficult to make accurate calculations.

The question of the governorship
will doubtless be determined by another question, and that question is as to the successor of Mr. Whyte in the United States Senate. The Senatorship is the stake for which the two leading politicians of the State are playing, and all the other officers, and the combinations which may be formed to obtain them, will depend more or less upon this.

It is true that Mr. Gorman has not yet publicly entered the lists against Mr. Whyte, but the latter gentleman is fully alive to the movements of this wily antagonist, and knows that sooner or later they will have to meet face to face in deadly political conflict. The scheming and plotting to which such a situation of affairs naturally gives rise are evident enough in this city, and it does not require any very close observer to discover that very unusual interest is just now manifested in certain quarters in Baltimore in both local and State politics.

It is stated that Mr. Gorman has made advances to Mr. Hamilton, and that the other side are also trying to make friends with the latter, but it is thought that as yet Mr. Hamilton is not directly involved.

The recent changes in the Board of Election Supervisors have a significance of their own, and have set even the initiated to thinking. There is no doubt that in the appointment of Mr. John W. Davis and Mr. Finley H. Burns, Gov. Carroll has taken a step in the right direction,
but though these appointments mean reform, they mean something else besides. That they have a definite bearing upon the political situation,
few persons are inclined to doubt,
but just exactly what they may mean, matters after a short time are bound to have a rapid development,
and it will therefore not be very long before we shall get some clearer
ideas on these subjects.—Baltimorean.

A Short Lecture on Temperance.

If you went and sat on a horse's nest it would be stimulating beyond a doubt, but by no means strengthening. It would put life into a man and make him frantically active for a while, but as to the nourishment got from it I very much doubt whether it would be in proportion to the stimulation. But what does that stimulation which comes from the abuse of whiskey and brandy mean? We shall find the answer which science gives in the results of experiments made by two eminent observers, Dr. Paikes and Count Wallowitz. These men conducted their inquiries on a young and healthy adult man. They counted the beats of the heart, first at regular intervals during what were called water-periods; that is to say, periods
when the subject under investigation
drank nothing but water, and next,
they counted the beats of his heart
during successive periods in which alcohol was taken in increasing quantities. They found the average number of heart beats in twenty four hours while the man drank
water was 106,000; in the earlier

alcoholic periods, 127,000; in the later alcoholic periods 131,000. The heart was doing a great deal more work with alcohol than without it. At first sight it would seem almost im-credible that such an excess of work could be put upon the heart, but it is perfectly credible when all the facts are known.

The most thorough work on the alcohol question is that of Dr. B. W.
Richardson, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of England.
His conclusion is that alcohol in itself is not food, although people who take much of it will become fat under its influence. They become so,
however, because alcohol interferes with the nutritive processes,
and acts like a drag on the wheels within. The man gets fat because the system does not throw off from it
the refuse matter which it is necessary to get rid of. The fatening is caused by the arrest of a vital process necessary to health; it betokens disease rather than health; and after a while perhaps the man dies of a fatty heart, and the physicians call it heart disease.—Boston Advertiser.

Cincinnati Enquirer: Bayard's
friends claim too much territory for him. Think of a little fly speck of a State of Delaware controlling the Solid South, and New York, New Jersey and Connecticut besides.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE BLAINE OUTRAGE INVESTIGATION.

NEW ORLEANS, January 7.—The Teller election investigation subcommittee commenced business today in the private office of Surveyor
Madison Wells. J. Ernest Breda, of Natchitoches, testified that he has been a republican since 1871; was hunted down and driven from home
last September by armed men on account of his politics; took refuge in the woods with his brother until he learned they were to be hunted with blood-hounds, when they went to Shreveport, where they remained until summoned before the grand jury at New Orleans. Witness was a native of Louisiana, and in the Confederate army. V. A. Barron,
a native of Mississippi, but a resident of Natchitoches, and also a Confederate soldier during the war, testified that he was forced to leave Natchitoches
in September by the organized bushwhackers of the parish. John U.
Lewis, colored, of Natchitoches,
testified that his house was broken into by riflemen in September, who said they would kill him if they found him, but he escaped. Robert Blount, a colored man of property
and influence, of the same parish, testified that his house was surrounded by 250 men under M. J. Canning-ham, at present a member of the Legislature, his door broken into and he arrested and put in jail, but afterwards released on condition that he would advise negroes to leave politics alone, and would never return to the parish. Witness was a Baptist preacher, and in 1876 was a member of the Packard Legislature. J. D.
McGill, Lucien Bland and J. M.
McGill, of Tensas parish, testified that they believed there were frauds to such an extent as to prevent the election of the "independent" ticket,
on which they ran for parish officers.
The whole machinery was in the hands of the democrats.

THE POLYGAMY QUESTION SETTLED.

WASHINGTON, January 6.—A decision was rendered this afternoon
by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Geo. Reynolds against the United States, brought here by appeal from the Supreme Court of Utah. This case involves the whole question of polygamy in the Territories and the constitutionality of the laws passed by Congress for its suppression. Reynolds was indicted by the grand jury for contracting a bigamous marriage. He was tried in the Third Judicial Court of Utah and found guilty. He appealed to the Supreme court of the Territory,
and finally to this court, which now affirms the judgment of the lower tribunals, and decides that the plea
of religious conviction is not a valid defense; that polygamy is not under the protection of the clause in the constitution which prohibits interference with religious belief; that Congress had power to pass laws prohibiting polygamous marriage in Utah, and that such laws are constitutional.

ALEXANDRIA'S SENSATION.

WASHINGTON, January 6.—The Virginia Democrats, in establishing the whipping-post as an instrument of terror to keep the negroes in order, overlooked the fact that it might happen in some districts that the colored people would have a majority. A colored justice of the peace has just sentenced a wealthy white man named James Duncan to be whipped for petty larceny.
The sentence would have been carried out effect by a colored constable had not the case been appealed. The case arose out of a dispute

as to the ownership of some ice cut from the Alexandria canal, one claimant accusing the other of stealing a lot of ice worth 10 cents. It happens that in that district the colored people elected a colored Justice of the Peace, before whom this case was tried. The justice found the white capitalist guilty of petty larceny, and proposed to administer to him the medicine the whites intended for the colored people alone,
and sentenced him to be whipped.
The case is now pending on an appeal.

THE CENSUS OF 1880.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—The bill introduced by Representative Cox, of New York, to day, provides for taking the census of the population, wealth and industry of the United States on the 1st of June, 1880; the superintendent of the census is to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and a clerical force to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and one or more supervisors for each State and territory not exceeding in all 150, to be nominated by the governors of the several States. The schedule of inquiries at the tenth census are the same as those contained in the act
for taking the census of 1850, with additional provisions for inquiries as to the relation of each person enumerated to the head of the family,
whether wife, son, daughter, boarder,
whether married, widowed or single,
and the physical and mental health of each person, &c. The bill enlarges the scope of inquiries in relation to agriculture, manufacturing, &c. It also provides for obtaining full information in regard to railroads, express companies and other corporations. The sum of $3,000,000 is fixed as the maximum cost of the census.
The bill proposes a subvention to any State or territory which at the intermediate five years may take a census
with similar blanks and schedules and report to the Secretary of the Interior the government in such case to pay half the cost. The bill is made operative for all future censuses
unless otherwise ordered by Congress. The bill was ordered to be printed and referred to the committee on the tenth census.

ATTRACTING FOREIGN CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The indications are unmistakable that the assumption of specie payments will,
before long, attract foreign capital to this country for investment in a variety of commercial and financial enterprises. The movement may be said to have already begun in the establishment at New York of an agency of the famous Netherland Trading Society, which is conducting its business on a paid up capital of $14,000,000. This society is the agent of the Dutch Government in the sale and transportation of the produce of the colonies, and has been in operation since the year 1824. The King names the managers and the stockholders the directors. Its agencies are to be found not in the Dutch possessions alone, but in China, Japan, the Philippine Islands, Ceylon and British India, and among the products it handles are coffee, sugar,
rice, tea, indigo, hides, spices, pepper,
gutta percha, tobacco, sandal wood,
&c. Its commercial operations, therefore, take a very wide sweep. Its financial business will include the negotiation of loans, the emission of bills of credit, and other banking transactions. This is the first time the Netherland Society has established an agency on this side of the Atlantic, and the fact is important as showing the tendency of European capital to seek American investments.

A SUE FOR DEMOCRATS TO CHASE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Republican members of the Potter committee have the evidence of a gentleman named St. Martin, a cousin of Governor Nichols, and who served as deputy sergeant-at-arms of Mr.
Stenger's sub-committee in New Orleans last summer, which will give the Democrats a good deal to think about, and add materially to the weight of their present tribulations.
Mr. St. Martin has made an admirable, charging with a minuteness of detail that of itself corroborates the truthfulness of his statement, that money was raised and paid to secure those witnesses who came before the committee and denied their previous testimony before the Republican Congressional Committee. Mr. Sten-ger, the chairman of the Louisiana Potter sub-committee, directed him
to ascertain whether the witnesses summoned would give testimony of value to the Democrats, and if they would not to return them as not found.

THE FOUR PER CENT. LOAN.

WASHINGTON, January 5.—The
subscriptions to the four per cent.
bonds yesterday reached the enormous sum of over $7,500,000, making the aggregate subscriptions this year nearly $19,000,000. This is unprecedented in the history of the financing operations of the government.
Treasury officials are no longer
doubtful of the ability of the nation to call in $300,000,000 of the gold six per cent. bonds, series of '67,
during the present year. Another call was issued yesterday for $10,- 000,000 of these bonds, and Assistant Secretary Hawley said that if he had waited for the afternoon mails, which brought over $5,000,000 of the day's subscriptions to the four per cents, he would have increased the call for the six per cents to $15,000,- 000. Treasurer Spillan attributes this remarkable demand for government bonds to three causes: First,
sound financial condition of the government and preference for its securities over any others; second, that the bonds are now purchasable in greenbacks; and third, the large amount of money loaned upon the market at this season of the year, principally by the payment of stock dividends and interest on Federal, state and corporate bonds. To these might be added another reason, which is that the general disaster attendant upon nearly all sorts of speculative ventures during recent years, has tended to check recklessness, and the people have learned by bitter experience that safe investments with small returns are preferable to tempting speculations, which promise a great deal but usually end in loss.

GENERAL GRANT IN DUBLIN.
DUBLIN, January 4.—Owing to the lateness of the hour last night I did only scanty justice to the speech of General Grant at the banquet
given him at the Mansion House.
The company rose and gave the Irish welcome when the General's name was proposed. The ex-president made, in response, the longest speech of his life, speaking in a clear voice, and being listened to with rapt attention. He referred to himself as a fellow citizen of Dublin, and intimated, amid much laughter and cheering, that he might return to Dublin one day and run against Barrington for Mayor, and East for Parliament. He warned those gentlemen that he was generally a troublesome candidate. Then, passing to serious matters, the General said: "We have heard some words spoken about our country—our country—before I was naturalized in another. [Laughter.] We have a very great country, a prosperous country,
with room for a great many people.
We have been suffering for some years from very great depression.
The world has felt it. [Hear, hear!]
There is no question about the fact that when you have forty-five millions of consumers such as we are,
and when they are made to feel poverty, then the whole world must feel it. [Applause.] You have had here great prosperity because of our great extravagance and our great misfortunes. We had a war which drew into it almost every man who could bear arms, and my friend who spoke so eloquently to you a few moments ago lost a leg in it. You did not observe that, perhaps, as he has a wooden one in place of it. When that great conflict was going on we were spending $2,000,000,000 a year
more than we were producing, and Europe got every dollar of it. It made for you a false prosperity. You were getting our bonds and our promise to pay. You were cashing them yourselves. That made great prosperity and made producers beyond the real necessities of the world at large. But we finally got through that great conflict, and with an inflated currency which was far below
the specie you use here. It made our people still more extravagant.
Our speculations were going on, and we still continued to spend $200,000, 000 or $400,000,000 of money per year more than we were producing. We paid it back to you for your labor
and manufactures, and it made you apparently and really prosperous.
We, on the other hand, were getting really poor, but being honest, however, we came in the day of solid, honest payment. We came down to the necessity of selling more than we bought. Now we have turned the corner. We have had our days of depression; yours are just coming
on. I hope it is nearly over. [Hear,
here.] Our prosperity is commencing,
and as we become prosperous you will, too—[applause]—because we became increased consumers of your products as well as our own. I think it safe to say that the United States,
with a few years' more such prosperity, will consume as much more as they did. Two distinguished men have alluded to this subject—one was the President of the United States, and he said that the prosperity of the United States would be felt to the bonds of the civilized world. [Applause.] The other was Lord Beaconsfield, the most far-seeing man,
the one who seems to me to see as far into the future as any man I know—[applause]—and he says the same as President Hayes."

Gen. Grant's speech created a profound sen-ation.

LONDON, January 6.—Ex-

President Grant arrived here to-day,
and was formally presented with the roses of the city. A grand banquet was given in his honor to-night.

Home-Made Candies.

When a good confectioner is at hand ordinary people, who require his goods only in small quantities, will find it more convenient as well as more convenient to buy their candies ready made. But households where there are children, and where many confectioneries are used, or in the country, where fresh candies are not readily obtained, it is a good plan to make them at home. The young people of the family will enjoy the work, and when made they are sure to be appreciated. For such cases the following recipes are given.

Most persons are familiar with the mode of making molasses candy—common taffy—but no article on home-made candies would be complete if it did not include the molasses candy. The poorer kind will not candy. The boiling syrup should be stirred frequently, from the first, to prevent burning, and, after it becomes thick, it will be necessary to stir constantly. Try by dropping a little into a cup of cold water, or by setting a small quantity out of doors to cool. It is done when it can easily be pulled, or when if chewed it does not stick to the teeth. It will make the candy less brittle and whiter if, ten minutes before taking it off, cooking soda is added in the proportion of an even teaspoonful to a gallon of molasses. Take out a cupful of the syrup and mix the soda well in. Then take the kettle from the fire and stir the mixture into the syrup. It will bubble up, and vigorous stirring will be needed to keep it from boiling over. Return to the fire and stir steadily until done, which ought to be in about ten minutes. For sugar taffy—to three pounds of sugar allow half a teaspoonful of water and half a cup of vinegar. Set on the back of the stove until the sugar is dissolved. Then bring it forward and let it stir steadily until done, which may be determined in the same way as with the molasses. Do not stir the candy while steaming, as so doing makes it turn back to sugar. If you do not wish to add vinegar, add an even teaspoonful of soda in the same way as with the molasses taffy, only don't stir it. In pulling taffy it is a mistake to oil the hands. The candy will be nicer if instead you wash your hands occasionally with cold water, drying them perfectly afterward. Use fresh butter or olive oil for greasing the pans into which you pour your candy to cool.

Cocanut candy is made by taking two pounds of sugar to an ordinary amount. Add to the milk of the cocoanut to the sugar, with a little water if the milk is less than a small teaspoonful. Stew it until it ropes when poured from a spoon, then stir in the cocoanut, which you should have already grated, and pour into buttered pans. When cool break into pieces—a process which will be facilitated if, when the candy is cool, but not cold, you score it half through with a knife. Any candy can be made in the same manner by substituting nut kernels for the grated cocoanut. For cream candy allow a cupful of rich cream to three pounds of sugar and stew until the syrup candies when dropped into cold water, and flavor with vanilla, lemon, or what you like, and pour into buttered pans. Another recipe for cream candy, without the cream, requires two cups of granulated sugar, half a cup of water, a piece of butter the size of a walnut, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Do not stir while boiling. When done pour on buttered plates, and when cold pull it until white.

There are many recipes for chocolate caramels. The following will be found reliable: To a pint of milk and three pounds of sugar and half a pound of butter, let the mixture boil for fifteen minutes, then take off and beat rapidly until it is creamy, flavor to taste, then roll into small balls, a teaspoonful to each ball, and dip in the chocolate until covered. For this you can use two forks, handling the balls carefully. Lay them on buttered paper to cool.

The following recipe for barley sugar, a favorite candy with English children, is taken from an English magazine: One and a half pounds of sugar and one pound of water should be broken into small lumps and boiled over the fire with a pint of water. It should be skimmed carefully until cold water becomes brittle and will snap. The juice of a lemon and six drops of essence of lemon should now be added, the sugar boiled up just once, and then the bottom of the pan should be placed in cold water till the first heat has subsided. The mixture should then be poured upon a marble slab, which has been slightly smeared with butter. It will, of course, spread out, but it should be drawn together with a knife, and kept as much as possible in a lump. As soon as it is cool enough to handle, pieces about the size of an egg may be cut off, rolled to the form of round sticks, and twisted slightly, as barley sugar usually is bought. These should be put on an oiled sheet and left till they are cold and stiff, when sugar should be sifted lightly over them.

For burnt almonds, take a pound of almonds and bleach by scalding in hot water, when the skins will easily slip off. Dry them and warm them slightly. Three-quarters of a pound of sugar should now be boiled with half a pint of water, till the surface looks like large pearls or globules, when a few drops of prepared cochineal, a few drops of vanilla, or any other suitable essence, and the almonds should be thrown in and all stirred gently to gether with a wooden spoon, to detach the sugar both from the bottom and sides of the sauce-pan. The almonds should be kept from sticking to the bottom of the pan, and should be thoroughly turned over and over, so that they may be well coated, or, as it is called, "charged" with sugar. As soon as they give out a crackling noise the pan should be removed from the fire and still gently stirred, until the sugar has the appearance of being grainy almost like sand, when almonds, sugar and all should be turned upon a sieve and covered with paper for five minutes.

At the end of that time the almonds should be picked out and the grainy sugar put again into the sugar boiler with just enough water to dissolve it, and when it is again boiled to the point it had before reached the almonds should be thrown in, and again stirred until they have received another coating, being careful only to keep them entirely separate. The operation may be repeated a third, and even a fourth time, when they will probably be double their original size and are done. They ought to have a rugged, uneven surface, and to be crisp and hard when bitten in half. They may either be used as they are, or wrapped in fancy papers. If it is wished to impart a glazed appearance to burnt almonds, they should, when prepared, be dropped into a little thickly-dissolved gum arabic, boiling hot, and stirred lightly till they are covered with the gum, then turned on a sieve to dry.

Hardwood candy, that old-fashioned and excellent cough medicine, is made by stewing the sugar with a strong decoction of horehound. When done the candy may be put up or dropped in lumps on buttered paper.

These home-made candies are, of course, entirely pure, and may be eaten freely without harm. They cost, also, much less than "store candies," and our readers will try the recipes we are giving them with satisfaction.—Philadelphia Times.

How an Old Nag Went.

Horse traders were surprised in this city a couple of days ago because a horse which they refused to buy at twenty-five dollars, refused to sell at twenty-five hundred dollars for his impetuous-looking owner. Graves and a few others, were standing out at the corner of Third street when a rustic appearing chap drove up in a rickety rig, patched up harness and hanged wagon, two horses were hitched in and one of them seemed about ready to lay down under a load of years and short grass. The fellow tried to sell.

He was very hard up and wanted to dispose of him the worst way. In recommending he did not forget that the old horse had "go" in him. But the lookers on didn't think that plug could go and some of them were rash enough to bet he couldn't go a mile in four minutes. They put up money on it and kept betting on time clear down to 2:50. The owner then wanted to bet five hundred dollars his horse could make a mile on our track in 2:25. The exceedingly villager horse in the crowd got scared about this time and refused to invest any more money, preferring to see how the old nag could go. They all adjourned to the fair grounds where rustics hitched to an old sulky, drove around a few times to limber up, and then got the word "go!" Away he went, like the wind, in a cloud of dust by the stand and down the first quarter; past the half mile in 1:32 and never skipping as he came down the home stretch and passed under the wire in 2:50. The boys haven't got so much money as they had, but they found out something.—Des Moines Leader.

The Government Library.

READERS who are eager for statistics may seek to know something of the pecuniary value of the collection of books which the people own at Washington. The expenditure upon the library of the Government, if compared with its extent, is not very great. The sum total of the appropriations of Congress for books from 1800 to 1878 has not exceeded $640,000, and this is inclusive of the cost of all the volumes acquired in two configurations. The British Museum Library, which numbers 1,100,000 volumes, is supposed to have cost about $3,000,000 (£300,000); but as not only this collection, but all the great Government libraries of the British and colonial press. The library of an American national library should be as well as in manuscripts, and many of them in costly engravings, there can be no just basis for a comparison between them, and a collection so modern in its origin as well as its principal contents as our own. The library of the British Museum, moreover, has enjoyed for more than a century the benefit of the copy tax, bringing in free of cost all the publications of the British and colonial press. The library at Washington, though founded in the beginning of the century, really dates from 1852, when only 20,000 volumes were saved from the flames. Quite unreasonable would it be to expect that an American national library should rival those of the Old World in those collections of incunabula and precious manuscripts which centuries of opportunity have enabled them to assemble. There are now twelve libraries in Europe numbering the Library of Congress in the books upon their shelves; yet the growth of our national library has been so rapid as to have twice doubled the numerical extent of the collection fifteen years. In 1863 the library of Congress contained 72,000 volumes; in 1867, 165,000; and in 1878 the collection had risen to 310,000 volumes, besides pamphlets. The Boston Public Library alone among American collections approximates it in size, and even a little exceeds it, if we count the books contained in its seven branches in the suburbs of Boston, which, however, are duplicates of the parent collection. But the numerical standard is far from furnishing an adequate test of the true value of any collection of books, save in the presumption it furnishes that the largest collections will contain the best works printed in every field. It may be said of the Library of Congress that in the main its stores have been selected with a view to the highest utility, and with some general plan of unity. It has not, like the British Museum Library, the Boston Public Library, and some other large institutions, been the recipient of extensive donations, or bequests, which, while greatly enriching the collections, tend also to the multiplication of the duplicates. It were to be wished that all authors of books, and especially of pamphlets, should bear in mind that this great collection at Washington is the representative library of the country, and by placing in it copies of their productions, whether protected by copyright or not, secure to their thought a shrine that posterity which may care to examine it. All pamphlets coming to this library are treated with the same honor as books, acknowledged, catalogued, separately bound (instead of having their identity lost in the incongruous volumes), and classified in their proper place upon the shelves.—A. R. Spafford, in International Review.

Buried Treasure.

Almost all of our readers have heard of the "Economites," a religious, humanitarian organization of Heaven County, Pa. They are known to be a thrifty people, and their accumulations of wealth have been very great. The Pittsburgh Leader gives the following account of one of their peculiar transactions.

The Economites a short time since took from a grave, where it had been buried for the last eighteen years, a treasure in silver to the amount of seventy-five thousand dollars.

It seems that at the first grumblings of the war the wise heads of the society held a meeting, and fearing that the Government might be wrecked as the result of the struggle, they concluded to secret a special sum of money in case of contingencies. About the sum mentioned was collected and buried in a secret place, where it has since remained, only a few of the managers of the society knowing anything of the matter.

During the war it went up in price, until at one time 240 could be had for what this enormous price only served to make its owners more confident in their good judgment in secreting it. After the war the owners had no need of the money, and it still remained buried. A short time ago, when silver began to depreciate, and it became apparent with the quantity of it secreted, the Economites concluded it would be best to get rid of the hoarded wealth. They sought the services of a broker of this city, who agreed to take it at market value, but was asked to discover the location of the treasure.

An effort was made to sell it to different dealers in old coins. A circular being sent by one of these to the society giving prices of coins, some time was spent in scouring the new raised coins to discover the dates, but when all were made "as bright as a dollar," they found their work was vain, as the prices given were selling prices. It was a secret in St. Louis, and the brightness of the coins was remarked. In order to transport it to this city a portion of the amount was placed in an old-fashioned cask with heavy staves. It was taken to the station and offered to the express company, but the agent, seeing it too heavy to be handled, especially as the Economites would not say what it was in. So they waited for the local accommodation, where it was rolled into a baggage car, and the old gentleman, perching himself upon it, rode up to the city. It was then hauled to one of the city banks and placed in the vaults. Under the agreement between the express company and the railroad company the latter had to pay the freight money as freight, that being left for the express people, who charge a handsome premium for the duty. They having heard how the silver was brought here, are now charging the railroad people with violating the agreement.

Wintering Sheep.

A. C. Stevens, of Bradford Co., Pa., describes his method of wintering, in a communication to the Elmira Farmers' Club reported in the Hudsonian. He commences to feed grain to his sheep in November in the fall and keeps it up till good grass in spring, with all the good hay they will eat. He allows one bushel of grain to fifteen sheep, per week. The oats and corn are mixed, and the sheep are fed on a one-third corn and two-thirds oats. At Hoag's Corners, N. Y., says that as long as he had his lambs dropped about the first of April he lost many. Several years ago he commenced to have them drop about February 1st, since that time he has had no losses to speak of, and the lambs are stronger and better every way. He feeds time, early-cut clover hay, three times a day, all they will eat. After lambing, he feeds those that had twins, and failing ewes, oats or shorts, four times a day, with hay.

MR. NORMAN LOCKYER, the well-known scientist, has made a discovery, or solved rather the dream of the alchemists in the transmutation of metals. This far he has only succeeded in changing tin and bismuth into nickel, but he holds that it will only require time for him to be able to transmute copper into gold. If this is what the future has in store for us, what guarantee have we that gold will not become as common as brass, and the gold dollar will have to be endowed with a tin attachment to make it the coin of the world? Ah, these wretched economists! Will they leave us nothing to tie to for the future?—Exchange.

ONE of the highest compliments a man can receive is to hear a friend say to him: "The very sight of your pleasant face is enough to drive away the blues."—Chrysalis. But the satisfaction with which one hears such a speech is marred by the anticipation of the remark that is almost certain to ensue: "By the way, you haven't got two dollars that you," etc., etc.—Boston Traveler.

The almighty dollar is almighty hard to get.

VARIETIES.

"Life is real," to the spinner.
—Connecticut has parties called "bean bakes."

A Laporte (Ind.) woman with vim subsists by saving wood.
—When Ham was sick was he cured by smoking?—N. Y. Mail.

Gen. O. O. Howard has taken to writing Sunday-School books.
—The day after washing day is one of sad irony.—Boston Transcript.

The happiest lower animal at the present time is the canal-boat mule.
—The elephant always carries his provisions by the Grand Trunk Line.

When a dog expires does he go to the happy land of Canine?—Witchell Times.
—Dried apples are used for dessert at all well parties.—New Orleans Picayune.

A young man with his first goatee may be said to have a tuft of it.—Chicago (Ky.) Times.
—"Weight for the wagon," observed the farmer, as he helped his 300 pound wife to a seat in his vehicle.

A Kentucky jailer diets his prisoners on buckwheat. We should be afraid they would break out.—Chicago Journal.
—There is one advantage in marrying a woman who hasn't a mind of her own; she can't forever be giving you a piece of it.

A South Norwalk hatter has chewed tobacco a great number of years without any injury to himself, having begged the tobacco.—Connecticut Paper.
—We trust the undermost man in the fight will not forget that the proverb says the anvil lasts longer than the hammer.—Old City Herald.

Better it is to sit on a barrel at the corner grocery with contentment than repose in the most luxurious easy chair adorned with a tidi in the house of the order-loving woman.—Boston Transcript.

We always admired a masquerade ball. It's so nice to squeeze a little lump of condensed sweetness for one straight hour, and then find you've been hugging your own sister.—Elmhurst Gazette.

The moon is just the thing for coon hunting or sleigh riding. But it isn't worth much for gathering chickens or talking about the greenback movement over the front gate with another fellow's girl.—Bridgeport Standard.

Mexico has four Presidential candidates, and not one of them is a General. Three are lawyers and one a coffee planter.
—The moon in 1884. Thirty or forty Beigades may pop up before election day.

A fast young man stopped in a restaurant the other day and said: "What have you got?" "Almond everything," was the reply. "Well, give me a plate of that," said he. "One piece of hard this way," yelled the waiter.

This is an awfully wicked world. An Indianapolis clergyman told me he went to hear Col. Ingersoll's lecture on "Some Mistakes of Moses," and saw more of his church members there than he had seen at any prayer-meeting in six months.—Burdette.

Large scale raps of Afghanistan, printed on calico pocket-handkerchiefs, have been distributed among the officers and men who are taking part in the campaign against the Amer.

Very useful when it comes to blows.—Cincinnati Commercial.
—A German paper asserts that prussic acid only causes suspension of life at first, and that one who takes it can be restored to animation by the pouring of acetate of potash and salt dissolved in water, on the head and spine. Rabbits have been so recovered.

The remains of huge glaciers have been discovered on the east side of Wind River Peak, Wyoming Territory, and on the west base of Fremont's Peak. Prof. E. V. Hayden thinks that on the west side of Wind River a glacier once existed eighty miles in length and twelve in breadth.

A Whitehall youngster had just been given a dose of salt and senna, when he took against his will. "I wish old Mrs. Lot had never looked back," he exclaimed, making up wry faces. "Why?" asked his mother. "Because then there'd never been any such thing as salt and senna to bother my little boys with," was his reply.

A well-appearing gentleman walked into the bar-room of a leading hotel the other evening, and, professing to be out of change, asked the bar-keeper if he could put his umbrella up for a drink. As it was a good silk one, the security was agreed upon. The man swallowed his beverage, and, quickly raising his umbrella, walked out. Jimmy did not call him back, but took the joke as philosophically as possible.—Rochester Union.

Good Idea.—Locomotive whistling is to be superseded at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., by a bell worked by electricity, which will be set up in the depot. When the train arrives within a mile of the station, the bell will ring until it gets to the depot. The danger signal is thus given, and the waste of steam is avoided, to say nothing of the racket. Any engineer who whistles hereafter when in Poughkeepsie loses his situation in the Hudson River Railroad.

The Scientific American says unsalable lime compressed into cartridges, or used loosely, and well stamped down into the hole, using water or other liquid to saturate and expand it, is now proposed for use in firing coal mines. It is claimed that the advantages to be gained from its use are economy in the production of coal; making less slack than using ordinary blasting powder; lives of colliers are in less danger; the breaking or shattering of coal back of the charge, which is especially characteristic of gunpowder, is avoided, and the quality of the atmosphere is rather improved by its use than otherwise.

A young lady in Paris had accepted an engagement at a small theater and been cast for a sonnette part, where it was her business to run to the window and, clapping her hands gleefully, turn around and exclaim, "Ah, the carriage has just driven into the yard." Night and day for six weeks she conscientiously studied her part, so as to be letter-perfect in her lines. At last the night of her debut came; her artless appearance charmed everyone; the cue was given, and, tripping with bewitching grace to the window, she looked out, clasped her hands and cried, "Ah, the carriage has just driven into the carriage."

An account is given in the French journals of a new and interesting invention, namely, a method of producing a cloth from glass, which has some special advantages over ordinary textiles; that is, it is produced in all colors and of different strengths, and is also incombustible, this latter property rendering it valuable for those who have to work near a fire or flames. It is also adapted for ladies' dresses, and for other purposes, in place of silk, and it is said to be more glossy and lustrous, and is, moreover, easily washed. It is stated to have all the appearance of a cloth, and to be as soft and elastic like the latter. Its usefulness, however, must of course depend in a great degree on its durability.

With the close of the French Exhibition, that claims to be the smallest book in the world, is on sale. It is a 12mo edition of Dante's "Divina Commedia," printed in Padua in 1878; it forms a volume of 500 pages, and measures five centimeters (almost exactly one inch) high by three and a half (one and three-eighths inches) broad. Only 1,000 copies have been printed, and the type has been destroyed. There are in all about 400 editions of the "Divina Commedia," the largest of which is said to be that published by Mussi, at Milan, in three folio volumes, in the year 1809, so that Italy has produced the largest as well as the smallest edition of her greatest poet.

How Proposals are Made in the South-west.

He sat one side of the room in a big white oak rocking-chair. A long-eared deer found snipping at the flies, was by his side; a basket of sewing by hers. Both rocked incessantly—that is, the young people—not the dog and basket. He sighs heavily and looks out of the west window at a crape myrtle tree; she sighs lightly and gazes out of the east window—at a turnip patch. At last he remarks:

"This is mighty good weather to pick cotton."
"Tis that—if we only had any to pick."

The rocking continues.
"What's your dog's name?"
"Coony."

Another sigh-broken stillness.
"What is he doing?"
"What is he doing?" said he also, strictly.

"Your dog, Coony?"
"I've ketched 'em possums."
"He looks like a deer dog."
"Who looks like a deer dog?"
"Coony."

"He is—but he's kinder belovely, and gettin' old an' slow now. An' he ain't no better'n a fool." "Tis true." In the quiet ten minutes that ensued she took two stiches in her quilt; it was a gorgeous affair, that quilt was made by the pattern called "Rose of Sharon." She is very particular about the nomenclature of her quilt, and frequently walks fifteen miles to get a new pattern with a "real party name."

"Your ma raisin' many chickens?"
"Forty odd."

Then came rocking and somehow, after a while the big rocking chair and the little rocking chair were jammed side by side. I don't know how it happened. It may have been caused by some peculiarity in the floor, or by the fact that the deer, sitting on one chair had for the other; but strange to say the basket of work had followed the little chair, and the little chair had traveled as fast as the big one. Coony placed sound asleep, and he was talking in his sleep, that is, giving faint, irregular barks at the possums he beheld in his dreams. After a while the conversation was resumed.

"How many chickens?"
"How many what?"
"Chickens?"
"Nigh on to a hundred."

By this time the chairs were so close together that rocking was impossible. "The quilt has got most of ours." Then a long silence reigns. At last he observes:

"Makin' quilts?"
"Yes," she replies, brightening up. "I've just finishin' a 'Raisin' Eagle of Brazil,' a 'Stitchin' Sun,' and a 'Narrow's Pride.' Have you ever saw the 'Yellow Rose on the Paray'?"
"No."

More silence, then he says:
"I've ketched a cabbage?"
"I do that."

Presently his hand is accidentally placed on hers. She does not know it; at least does not seem to be aware of it. Then, after a half hour spent in a sighing, coughing and clearing of throats, he suddenly says:

"I've a great a-mind to bite you."
"What you great a-mind to bite me for?"
"Kase you won't have me!"
"Kase you ain't axed me."
"Well, now I ax you."
"Then, now I ax you."

Then Coony dreams he hears a sound of kissing.

Then the next day the young man goes to Tigerville after a marriage license. Wednesday the following week. No cards.

The confusion which is always apparent in this country in the matter of severing apparel at the changing of the seasons, is obliterated by government supervision in China. A recent decree of the Governor of Canton gave notice that the wearing of winter hats would begin on the 25th of November.

The New Orleans Picayune expresses its belief that "if a bank officer would look at a burglar with a bag of tools as severely as he does at an honest man with a small note, many robberies might be prevented."

The Thibodaux (La.) Sentinel says twenty years ago a leper appeared in Lafourche, and now fully 100,000 people are affected with the horrible malady.

Something White.

A few evenings since two Sacramento gentlemen proceeded to the residence of three young ladies of their acquaintance to request them to attend a surprise party. The ladies, not having expected such an invitation, were engaged in sewing upon certain mysterious articles necessary to the female toilet. Two of them laid their work away when the visitors arrived, while the third, having got up hastily to answer the bell, threw the garment she was sewing upon down on a chair. The gentlemen were invited to be seated, and one of them happened to deposit himself upon that very chair. A moment later he observed the young ladies smiling mischievously, as they glanced toward him, and he took the earliest opportunity to look around and see what amused them. To his dismay, he discovered a portion of a white garment occupying the seat with him, and he broke out in a cold sweat, as he thought flashed over him that a portion of his wearing apparel had broken out of confinement and was disposed to make itself prominent. His anguish of mind can be better imagined than described. As rapidly as possible, when he thought no one was looking, he tucked that misin out of sight. He thought it a happy circumstance that two of the girls left the room while he was thus engaged; but he would have felt queer if he had known that they had detected the appropriation of the garment, realized his mistake, and had to go somewhere to have a good laugh. When he got home and found what he had done, he would have felt happy if the house had fallen upon him. Next day he had recovered a little, and was able to laugh when he received a message that if he "had taken a pattern of that piece of property, and didn't need it any longer," he might send it home.

Turkish Prisoners Returned.

The Turks are now receiving back their prisoners from Russia. Several thousand men arrive every week. They are well clad and well fed, and all wear enormous boots which emit a strong odor of Russia leather. The returned prisoners say that the Russians at first issued to them rations of black bread, such as their own soldiers use, but the Turks would not touch it. The Russians then provided white bread, exactly as the Turks. The only complaint which the men make is that they were taken to an ineffectual region, where the night is only three and a half hours in length, and that they were set to road-building with wages of ten cents per day of eighteen hours. They seem to have thrived on this regimen, as there is not a battalion in the Turkish army which can compare in appearance of sturdy health with these returned prisoners. The General who has the misfortune to be given up by the Russians are not quite glad to see their native land. A detachment of troops is always on hand at the landing, and when a General arrives he is met by court-martial and marched to the War Department, where they all will have to be tried by court-martial. Two courts-martial sit permanently to try officers defeated in Europe, and the others for those of Asia. If the progress of these courts in future is at their present speed many accused persons will naturally die before the arrival of their turn for trial. Suleiman Pasha has court-martial for five months. The court-martial on Asiatic affairs has tried the case of the commandant of Ardahan, which was surrendered to the Russians early in the war. It has sentenced him to degradation, the Paragon was carried out on the square of the War Department. The poor Pasha was stripped of his buttons and epaulets, and then handed over to a detachment of police to be taken to Sinope, where he is to be imprisoned for three years.—New York Tribune Correspondent.

A Singular Circumstance.

For a long time a lump has been ob-servable in the side of the jaw of a horse belonging to Superintendent Orbison, of the Gould & Curry and Best & Belcher mines. The lump lay in near the jaw-bone, and could be moved about under the skin. It seemed very hard, and no liniment had power to soften or to drive it away. Yesterday a veterinary surgeon made an incision, and to his astonishment and that of all present brought to light a hard and smooth stone, about two inches long and one inch in diameter. The stone was of a yellowish white color, and apparently as hard as marble. In order to make sure as to the nature of the stone, Mr. Orbison took it to the jewelry store of M. M. Frederick and had it saved in two longwise. When the stone was thus cut in two there was seen in the center what had undoubtedly been a grain of barley, half of which was visible in each piece of the stone, the grain looking as though petrified. Around this nucleus the stone had formed in regular layers or growths, the rings of which were distinctly to be traced. The material of which the stone was formed appeared to be the same as found in the incrustations on the tubes of boilers. It is thought that the grain of barley pierced the skin of the horse's mouth and lodged itself in the flesh; that the saliva from the mouth of the animal then flowed in on the barley and deposited upon it lime matter, such as sometimes forms upon the teeth of men and animals. A small concretion having thus been formed it grew to be a nucleus of the size mentioned, the channel having no doubt remained open all the time, thus allowing of an inflow of the silvery matter from the mouth. Some of our veterinary surgeons or horsemen have ever before seen or heard of a case of the kind. The stone is as hard as marble and the angular markings are very distinct.—Virginia Enterprise.

A curious ancient Mexican library has been found in the ruins of a vast palace at Xayi, near Chiapas, in Southern Mexico. The writings are inscribed on terra-cotta tablets half an inch thick, and are supposed to be sacred records, but the language in which they are written is not accurately known.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1879.

NUMBER 47.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Alder & Main Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Saddles, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., (Opposite Jameson's Billiard Saloon).

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second streets.

GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. A. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., op. Bailey's Park.

MILLS.

GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor.

OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Smith's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

MASON.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First street.

LLOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Candy.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Fruits, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's pre-
scriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. d25y

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,
Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to conveying,
investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. d25y

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 24-1879.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Has located permanently in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-ERCISE of his profession in all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
ad25y

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his
usual large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,

which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

VALUABLE MILL PROPERTY

AT OAKLAND

FOR SALE.

The subscriber offers at private sale, a Valuable Mill, situated on the Youghiogheny river, in the town of Oakland, and now doing a successful business. In connection with it is never failing water power. It has also a good and almost new Horse Power Engine to
which a Saw Mill can be attached. Its location renders it the most desirable one for general milling purposes of any in the country.
There are also five acres of land, well adapted
for building lots, attached, which will be
sold together or separate at the option of the purchaser. Also a Two and a half story
FRAME DWELLING HOUSE, in good order
and pleasantly situated, with all necessary
outbuildings attached; either of which will be sold separately or together. Price VERY LOW, and terms easy.

For further particulars, address,
W. A. DAILY,
832 Is Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

850 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

Our Cities.

AS SEEN THROUGH THE GLASSES OF
REV. DR. TALMAGE—WASHINGTON
THE SEAT OF POLITICAL POWER.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The first of a series of sermons, entitled "Our American Cities as I have explored
them," was delivered by the Rev.
T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., in the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning.

The way the cities go, the land goes. Who has a moral barometer able to tell the influence of Cincinnati
upon Ohio, or Baltimore upon Maryland, or of Charleston upon South Carolina, or San Francisco upon California. Let me feel the pulse of the cities, and I will tell you the pulse of the nation. God gives to us a city, and it is our duty to make it a mission.

As our physical and mental characteristics indicate our sphere, the topographic and historical facts indicate the sphere of the city. Each city of the world comes to be known for certain characteristics. Babylon for pride, Sparta for military prowess, Venice for architecture in ruins, Dresden in pictures, Rome for Pontifical rule, Paris for fashion, Edinburgh for learning, Glasgow for shipbuilding, and London
for being the mightiest of the world.

Our American cities are so young that their characteristics are not so well defined as are the characteristics of the cities of the Old World, but I think I have struck the right word
in the designation of each.

Interlocked with the moral welfare and the very existence of this nation
stands the City of Washington.

It stands the City of the Potomac,
built on the banks of the Potomac,
as a matter of compromise. At the dining table of Alexander Hamilton
it was decided that if the South would consent to the assumption of State debts by the Government then the North would consent to have the Capital built on the Potomac instead of on the Delaware. And so the Government of the United States has moved from Annapolis to Philadelphia, and from Philadelphia to Trenton,
and from Trenton to New York,
and from New York to the Potomac.

To stay there until by the law
of growth within a century it shall take its place on the banks of the Mississippi, or Missouri, or sooner if the nation is wise enough to find out the advantage of having the hub of the wheel in the centre rather than on the rim of the tire.

What has that city to do with you?
As much as your heart has to do with your body. It is the natural heart. It sends forth good blood, good national health; if it sends forth bad blood, bad national sickness. It is a city of palaces. The who has seen the Departments of State, and the National Postoffice,
and the Treasury building, and the Capitol, has seen the highest achievements of painting, masonry, sculpture and architecture. I put the eight panels of the bronze door of the Capitol against the door of the Madeleine at Paris. Talk about the old masters; better stand at our Capitol stairs and look at the work of the new masters—Leutze's "Westward Ho!" Brumidi's frescoes, Green-ough's "Washington," Crawford's
"Statue of Freedom," &c.

GRANDER OF WASHINGTON.

I put the marble mountain of magnificence within which Congress assembles against the Tuilleries of France and the Parliament houses of London. No city on earth is so grandly laid out, Mr. Elliott having by astronomical observations run
the boulevards from east to west and north to south. Every inch of her Pennsylvania avenue is historical with the footsteps of her Webster, Calhoun, Jackson and Washington; streets along which 100,000
people have again and again vociferated at inaugurations; streets along which Charles Sumner started for his last journey to Mount Auburn, and Abraham Lincoln for Springfield,
the bells of the nation tolling for the obsequies and the orchestra of the continent throbbing with the dead
march. City of Huzzas and Requiem!
City of Patriotism and Debauchery!
City of National Sacrifice and Back Pay! City of Senatorial Dignity and Corrupt Lobby! City of Emancipa-tion Proclamation and Credit Mobilier! City of the best men and of the worst! City of Washington! I have explored it when Congress was assembled and when Congress was away. Its morals are 50 per cent.
better when the Senate and House of Representatives are home on vacation. During that time the character has its revivals and the piety of the city is more dominant. It is the way of this country that so many of our national legislators leave their families at home and getting to Washington these celebrated men show the need of domestic supervi-sal. Man without elevated female society is naturally a bear.

LOOSE CHRISTIANS.

But few men do as well away from home as at home. American Christians at Paris have been to disreputable gardens, and ministers on vacations have been seen at the Saratoga races. Some Christian members of Congress, who attend to their religion during vacation, during the session generously give the vacation to their religion. But Washington has indefinitely not in official position, and they stay all the year round.

Four dens and fields of infamy
are found in every part of the city, and the police, in their attempts to preserve law and order, are poorly sustained by the courts and churches.
On Christmas day, on Pennsylvania Avenue, a dozen young men drink
until they fight, and one is shot dead
and others are bruised and mangled,
and the culprits are taken to the District Attorney and then let go.

The sins rampant in New York and Brooklyn are rampant in Washington. Two thousand bar rooms, grocery stores and apothecary shops,
where intoxicating liquors may be had, 12,973 arrests during the year, 4,276 citizens that can neither read or write, over $129,000 of stolen property captured by the police last year,
are statistics all suggestive to an intelligent mind. The heat of a policeman in Washington and Georgetown is ten miles per man. Only nine mounted men in that vast city,
its population in nine years more than doubling, rushing up from 61, 000 to 131,000.

But what vast improvements since
the day when the drinking saloons
under the National Capitol were more than any establishments in the city, and Senators and Congressmen went there to get inspiration before they delivered their speeches and reappeared afterwards.
Thanks to Henry Wilson, the Christian statesman, and a few kindred spirits for the overthrow of that assommoir. During the war there were one hundred gambling houses
in Washington and over five hundred professed gamblers. One of these gambling houses cleared in one year over half a million dollars.
During one session of Congress the keeper of a gambling house presented to the Sergeant-at-Arms orders for the greater part of the salaries of many of the Congressmen these Congressmen having lost at the table until they had thus to mortgage their salaries. Go in some of the more gambling houses still remaining and you will find clerks of departments and bookkeepers and private secretaries. Go in some of the more costly establishments near Pennsylvania avenue and Fourteenth street, and you will find members of Congress,
officers of the army, and gentlemen distinguished the land over. They have a curious way of hushing things up in Washington.

MRS. HAYES'S INFLUENCE.

I fear the reporters of Washington
are not as wide awake as our reporters, or they would give the States of the Union public information as to how some of their Representatives
in Washington spend their evenings.
But in many respects there have been vast changes in our National Capitol: Duelling abolished; clubbing of Senators ended. No longer does Cypote, of Pennsylvania, brandish a spittoon over the head of Barksdale, of Mississippi; nor do Grow and Keitt take each other by the throat; nor does Griswold club Lyon, Lyon securing the tongs and striking back till both roll in an angry scuffle on the floor of Congress.
It is a matter of congratulation and high hope that never since the foundation of the Government has there been so many genuinely Christian men in the heads of departments in Washington, and in the Senatorial and Representative chairs as now.
What a state of encouragement when the Queen of American society at Washington, by her simplicity of appeal in the White House, has put condemnation to that extravagance
of wardrobe which will high shipwrecked some other administrations,
and by her removal of the intoxicating cup from state dinners has suggested that in high social position
people may be jolly and yet stay sober. Whatever may be thought of the politics of the Presidential mansion, there has never been since the days of Washington a purer White House, with less rum and tobacco,

and more Methodist hymn books,
and higher type of personal morality
than to-day.

I came back from two or three Washington explorations impressed with two or three things. First, that while we would not have the question of a candidate being a Christian brought into the election campaign, no man ought to be sent to Washington or anywhere else who has not a good moral character. Send a blasphemer? No! Blasphemy is an indictable offense against the law of the land, and will you send a breaker of the law to make laws.
Send an atheist? No! How can he take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States when there is no solemnity in an oath if there be no God. Send a man who indulges in games of chance, whether to the amount of $500 or five cents?

No! Gambling is denounced by the statutes of every State. Send a libertine? No! His presence at Washington would be an insult to every decent man and woman in that United States.

WALKING CHARNAL HOUSE.

Before you send a representative to your City Hall, or your Legislature, or your Congress, go through him with a lighted candle and see if he swears, if he lies, if he refuses to pay his debts, if he dishonors the family
relation, if he goes in bad company.
If he is guilty, scratch his name off
with the blackest ink and put a blot on it afterwards. Send him not to a Congressional hall where John Quincy Adams died, nor to a Senate chamber where Theodore Fred-riksen sat with face illuminated with charity and heaven. Not the religious test but the moral test I demand for the ballot box in every city, State and national election. We have had many Representatives in our Congressional halls in their day.
I am sorry to say there are a few left
who were walking charnel houses.
Nothing short of the gravedigger's spade could free the world of their corruption. Some of them died of delfium tremens and in a brothel.
After they had been dead a while,
some one, for the sake of giving a stone-cutter a lucrative job, moves that a large amount of city, State or national funds be appropriated for the building of a monument. To this I have no objection if they will only dedicate it with proper ceremony and have on it proper epitaphs.
Choose for the uncovering of the monument the hour when an August thunderstorm is gathering. Have the block of marble cut in shape of the ivory chips with which the deceased patriot used to gamble. On the four corners of the pedestal, cut
in marble, let there be wine cup, flask, decanter, and devilfish, suggestive of what ruined him. Let the fragments of the broken families whom he despoiled come with their faded shawls, and worn shoes,
and pallid cheeks to witness the dedication, announcing every block of marble with bitter tears. And when the blackest fald of that August thunderstorm wraps the top of the mountain with darkness, and while some men high in church or State, recreant to the truth, is pronouncing a eulogium, let the black cloud open and a bolt wash into dust the monumental inferity with a thunder that shall shake all our American capitol
with the reverberation, "The name of the wicked shall rot."

PROSPECTIVE INCREASE IN IMMI-GRATION.—A New York letter states that the agents of all the great European steamship lines are preparing for a large increase of immigration
the coming spring and summer.
Letters from their agents at English
as well as the continental ports have assurances all looking confidently in that direction. The cases at work to justify these are the wide spread depression of trade throughout the United Kingdom, and the poor prospect of an improvement for a long while to come; the repressive policy of the German government will also have an effect to swell the number of political refugees. The improved condition of our American Industries, it is believed, will have an immense influence in stimulating the movement, especially from the great manufacturing districts of England.

The reform movement has struck
the Georgia Legislature. The Governor's salary has been reduced from $4,000 to $3,000; Superior Court Judges from $2,500 to $2,000, and other State officials in the same proportion.

Now is the time to distribute advice to the poor.

For Republican Consideration.

The number of persons present at the Republican meeting in Baltimore
yesterday showed at least one thing
—that there are a great many members of the party in Maryland who are persuaded that its strength and prospects will be improved by the general overhauling and re-organization for which they ask. We are not entirely satisfied as to the motives of some of these gentlemen, for their temper does not appear consonant with an unselfish desire to place the party in a better footing for this year's campaign. When they announce in one breath that their aim is simply to restore harmony and solidity in the ranks, and in the next breath launch out obloquy on individual Republicans they convict themselves of inconsistency. Moreover, it is not good policy to wash
dirty linen in public, and the Republicans have been doing that very much to their own disadvantage.
We are sure that the Democrats can discount the Republicans in this state in the matter of intestine feuds, but they are shrewd enough to relegate settlements to private caucuses held behind closed doors. This is political wisdom, and the opposition might learn a profitable example from the Democrats.

But, perhaps, there was more of moderation shown in the action, if not in the spoken words, of yesterday's meeting than might have been expected. Although some gentlemen exploited their virtuous indignation concerning men and things,
the wiser heads had the greater influence in deciding upon the line of policy adopted. If a few of the sentiments expressed in speeches had been omitted, not much exception
could be taken to the tone and resolutions of the meeting. We may admit that its numbers and character entitled it to consideration. Even if it is cited a record against constitutional authority, the weight of the insults it can hardly be gainsaid.
But the one word of advice we have for all Republicans is to keep cool and make up their minds to heal, instead of widen, whatever breaches exist. The Central Committee has been asked to meet not later than February and call a state convention.
It remains for the committee to decide how it will deal with the request,
and until it does so angry Republicans should restrain their feelings.
It is likely enough that the Republicans can gain large successes in Maryland this year. The people are thoroughly tired of Democratic rule
in legislation and administration, extravagance, corruption and inefficiency. There is a great deal said about the Democracy reforming itself from within; but there is not much done towards securing good government without the Republican party doing a larger part of the work. But to be fit for the labor
there must be an end to faction fights.
Any settling up of two distinct state conventions and two state central committees would probably have the effect of sending contesting delegations from Maryland to the National Republican Convention
next year. Such a thing would be a scandal, and should be avoided by conciliation at the present time.
Baltimore American.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old Reliable "STANDARD," the
price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the at-
tachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people far beyond that ever yet attain-
ed by any other machine at any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are leaving the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "STANDARD." Knowing from experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can outsell
all other Machines, where the super-
ior quality and low price is made
known. This splendid Machine
combines all the improvements. Is
far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a Serviceable Sewing Machine. In
every particular, that will outlast
any Machine, and at a price far down
below any other. It is thoroughly
warranted for five years. Kept in order free of charge. And sent to any part of the Country for examination
by the customer before payment of
the bill. We can predict equally as
large a demand for them in this
section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured
should write direct to the Factory.
And enterprising persons wishing to
seize the chance should apply for so
desirable an agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper.
Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor.
Broadway and Clinton Place, New York.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE GREAT HARVEST YEAR.

[The harvest of the year 1878 is the largest harvest which ever ripened in America. The exports of food are much greater than ever before.]

The night the century ebbed out, all worn with work and sin.
The night a twentieth century, all fresh with hope, came in.
The children watched, the evening long, the midnight clock to see,
And to wait to see another "A Happy Century."
They climbed upon my knee, and they tumbled on the floor,
And Bob and Nell came begging me for stories of the War.

But I told Nell that I could tell no tales but tales of peace.
God grant that for a hundred years the blessed War might cease!
I told them I would tell them the tales of the Harvest Year.
Of the year in which God fed men as they ne'er were fed before.
For, all that year of matelless cheer, since sun or words were made,
Never sent him to other lands such gifts of Daily Bread!

The War was done, and men began to live in peaceful ways.
For thirteen years of hopes and fears, dark nights and joyful days.
If wealth would come, if wit would trip, and neither would avail,
"Let the seed-time and the harvest," said the Lord, "shall never fail."

And to all change of ups and downs, to every hope and fear,
For thirteen years of hopes and fears, dark nights and joyful days.
When did a country haul all the land join heart and soul and mind,
And health and wealth, and hand and hand, for feeding half mankind?

So hot the promise of ripe July, that men took day for day,
And when the night show clear and bright, they took their time to sleep;
Nor can the men eat all the grain when hungry words are fed.
So the ready Hittis and Oualis are gleaming in their stead.

All through the heated summer day the Kansas maidens slept.
All through the night, with laughter light, their "soulful viols" kept.
"In the moonlight moon until the break of day,
Watched over their lightsome harvest-work, and cheered them on their way.

They drove their handsome horses down, they drove them in the sun;
While "click, click, click," the rattling knives of old the house,
Before it fell, around the straw the waiting vines were laid.
And the well-ordered shelves are left in still array behind.

So laughing girls the harvest reap, all clattering the while,
While "click, click, click," the shears keep their cheerful, merrily tune.
And lazy morning blouses when she sees the harvest stored,
In ordered files, those miles on miles, to feed the hungry land.

For in the South from day to day a living tide swept forth,
As, wave on wave the bands of kind flowed slowly to the North;
Great bread-borne oxen, tender-eyed, and such as June loved,
In troops no man could number, across the prairie moved.

Behind, along the way, line the brown ranched cows,
From east to west, from west to east, as North the column flowed,
To keep the herd compact and close from morn to setting sun,
Nor for the way have one stray, as the great tide moved on.

A fair-haired Saxon boy beside the omnibus stood,
And as it flowed along the road, I heard the tramping hoofs,
"Go, God command these heaves, shall stand upon the Chevrolet Hills,
The land to feed where ringing Tweed the lowland downs distills."

So the great herd flows Northward, as the All-father wills, Edward Garrett Hale, in Harper's Magazine for January.

SOMETIME.

STRANGELY enough the cellar stairs precluded it—at least they cut short that very important part, the application. Sister Seales had furnished the text in the morning, but then the sermon might have gone on from firstly to forty-seventh without Mrs. Barney's notice, had it not been for the cellar stairs.

Mrs. Barney was hurried that day—she was always hurried—and it was warm and uncomfortable in the sunshiny, stove-heated kitchen, where she was listening to the sermon, growing tired and tired without slackening her speed. Neale, standing at the ironing-table, was tired also.

"There's so much to do," she said, wearily. "I do not see why we need do looking and ironing both in one day. It makes such a crowd, and we could have left one for to-morrow."

"To-morrow will bring work enough of its own," answered Mrs. Barney, quickly. "Besides, if we should get the work all out of the way the first of the week, a whole day to rest in would be worth something."

"But then we shouldn't take it for a resting just because it would be a whole day and something else would be crowded into it," murmured Neale, to whom one hour now looked very inviting and that possible day in the future very uncertain.

The mother did not answer, and the girl's hand moved more slowly over the damp muslins as her gaze wandered away to the hills where great trees were throwing cool shadows. How pleasant the shade and greenness were. The desire to bring it nearer suggested another thought to Neale.

"Some vines would be so nice at this window, mother. I could plant them if you would let Tim dig a little spot out there."

"Yes, but if we ever get the house fixed up as we want it we shall have shutters at that window."

"But we don't know when we can do that, and the vines would be so pretty now," urged Neale.

"Pretty? Well, yes if we had the whole yard trimmed and laid out as it should be. I hope we shall have it some day; but a stray vine here and there seems hardly worth fussing over when we can't have the whole done."

Neale sighed, but was silent, and presently Tim came in with an armful of wood.

"Neale," he said, pausing near her table—"if you just see this sleeve up a little. The old thing tears awful easy, and I just hit it against a nail."

He spoke low, but Mrs. Barney's quick ears caught the words.

"That jacket torn again, Tim? I never saw such a boy to tear things to pieces! No, Neale can't stop to mend it now, and I can't either. I've been tending to get you a new one, but there doesn't seem much chance to make anything new while you contrive to make so much patching and darning on the old."

Mrs. Barney shut the oven door with a snap. Tim was the hired boy, kind-hearted but careless, and he was rather discouraging. He had been clothing sometimes appeared to her a high price for his service. "Hurry now, pick some crumbs for dinner," she said.

Tim took the tin pail pointed out to him, but he did not hurry as he passed, wiggling his feet down the walk. The thought of a new jacket would have been very pleasant a few minutes before, but it had suddenly lost its attractiveness. The boy drew his busy brows of sight of the house, threw himself upon the grass and began his currant picking in a very leisurely manner. Then it was that Sister Seales drove up in her rattling old buggy, with a horse that was, as Tim said, "a regular old revolutionary postilion."

"If I can't have fine horses and carriages I can take a deal of comfort with these," was always Sister Seales' cheery comment upon her equipment. She had an errand at Mrs. Barney's, and had stopped on her way to the village. A plump, rosy-faced little woman she was, not young, only that she belonged to the class of people who never grow old; never decrepit, though it was "but the old poplin made over," Mrs. Barney noted, while she was talking, wondering a little that she should have "taken the trouble, when she surely needed a new one."

"This room is too warm to ask anyone to sit in," she said, apologetically, placing a chair for her caller just outside the door. "When we are able to have the house altered to suit I shall never have more here in the summer."

In the meantime you have this nice cool porch. What a pleasant place it is!" said Sister Seales, admiringly.

"Yes, if one had time to enjoy it," answered Mrs. Barney, with a nervous laugh. "I'm so hurried trying to get everything about the place in just the right order that I don't have time."

"Take time, Sister Barney, take time," said Mrs. Seales, smiling, but as the words came from her mouth they have while you are working for something better. Don't crowd out any little sweetness you have to make room for some great pleasure that's farther off. You see," she added, blushing a little, as if her words needed excuse.

"It's something I had to learn myself years ago—never trample on daisies in a wild chase after roses. The roses I haven't found, but the daisies have been enough to make me feel bright."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

"Daisies and roses! I don't see what a sort of flower has to do with wanting a new kitchen! But there! I suppose ministers' wives hear so much talk that it comes natural to them."

Mrs. Barney looked upon her in some perplexity, as she took her departure. She had listened with one-half her mind on the leaves of bread in the oven, and the other half did not fully comprehend what had been said.

on comforts and conveniences he had foregone for that! Those very cellar stairs toward whose dark and tortuous steps she was tending were an example; they could scarcely be more badly built, or in a more inconvenient place. Mr. Barney had wanted to remove them, but she would not allow him to incur the expense, because a second removal might be necessary when the house was thoroughly rearranged.

No, she preferred to submit to the discomfort of this time.

Too long a time it proved, for even while she meditated an insect board slipped beneath her feet, plunging her down the dark, narrow stairway against the rough stone wall, and then upon the hard floor of the cellar. One swift moment of terror, the crash of the dishes that fell from her hands, a flash of excruciating pain, and then she knew no more.

She did not hear Neale's cry from the room above nor see her husband's pale face as he lifted her in his arms.

When she returned to consciousness a strange voice—the physician's—was saying:

"No bones broken, though it's a wonder her neck wasn't falling in the way she did."

Slowly she opened her eyes upon a confused mingling of anxious faces, wet clothes, bottles of various kinds, and gradually she comprehended what had happened, and her own condition—not dangerously injured, but bruised and tamed, and with a sprained ankle that would keep her in bed for some days at least.

It was a sudden pause in her busy work—an enforced rest. She scarcely knew how to bear it, for a moment, as she remembered all she had planned to do, until a sudden shuddering thought suggested that she might have left it all forever; then she grew patient and thoughtful. Yet it seemed strange to be lying quietly on the lounge in the best bed-room of the house, with all the furniture still in addition to the house should transmute it into a back parlor; to watch through the open door, only a spectator, while Neale fitted to and fro in the kitchen behind, spreading the table for tea.

How good the children were that evening, how tenderly thoughtful her husband was, coming to her side again and again to talk or read to her. They had not found much time for talking or reading together these last years, she and David; she had always been so busy when he was in the house. She had dreamed of a leisure time coming, though, when she should have many evenings like this, except the illness. She had not thought much of illness or accident coming to mar her plans, or of death suddenly ending them. But it flashed upon her now how many little joys had been crowded out of their home, and in that brief retrospective glance she understood the meaning and the earnestness of Sister Seales' exhortation.

"Why, it's all kind of real nice and jolly—if you wasn't hurt," declared Tommy, unable to express his enjoyment of the pretty room and the unusual family gathering any more clearly.

Tommy gathered in the mother's eyes, and she had found her clew, and she meant to follow it. She had ample time for thought in the days that followed, when she was only able to sew a little now and then on garments for Tom, or read a book or two on the piazza.

And slowly but surely she learned her lesson, and brought it back to health with her—to gather life's pleasantness as God sends his sunshine—day by day.—Pacific Beacon.

Nordenskjold.

THE long and arduous expected reports of Prof. Norden, gold's successful voyage from the Yen-sei around the Cape of Good Hope, and his return never before accomplished by any vessel—have now come to hand, fully confirming the telegraphic news of his safe arrival at the Lena received on the 14th of October.

We extract from a letter dated "Off the Lena, Aug. 27," and written by Lieut. Hovgaard, a naval officer on Nordenskjold's staff, the following interesting particulars:

We left Dickson port on the 10th of August, and sailed on a course which provided the charts to be entirely wrong, for the coast is in reality far more to the west than hitherto supposed. The fine weather with which we were at first favored now gave way to a storm of rain and strong wind, in spite of the elements we pushed onward, and on the 11th passed Cape Steregoff, the furthest point yet reached by any vessel. We constantly perceived small islands not given on the map.

On May 12, the 12th of August, we encountered ice, but not in such quantity as to demand special attention. In the afternoon the ice began to thicken and gradually surround us, so that we were quite unable to move through the ice fields with ice-fringed casts. An unfortunate bear, incautious enough to swim too near the Lena, had to atone with his life for his temerity. This Arctic splendor was not of long duration; the next day we were again obliged to resume our usual maneuvering between the drifting ice, when all at once, at a distance of barely 800 yards, we sighted land. Of course we anchored and waited for clear weather, which finally ensued about three in the afternoon, only to be soon replaced by fog and ice. Still as best we could we held eastward until a favorable opportunity for anchoring presented itself in the shape of a small bay in the south situated between Taimir Island and the continent. This haven was named by us Actinia Port, from the mussels of a sort of polypus we saw in the water.

On the 15th of August we were at last released from our compulsory rest by a change of weather driving away the surrounding ice. Continually enveloped in a thick mist, we steered toward Cheljuskin, first noticed by us the succeeding day. Without really seeing the land itself, but only following its icy outlines, we at the approach of night arrived at the little bay, situated to the west of the northern extremity of Asia, and bearing the name of its first discoverer, the Russian mate Cheljuskin, who reached it by land in 1749. Who can describe the feelings of triumphant joy with which we at last drew near the long-sought goal?

With all flags waving and greeting the time-honored northern point of the Old World, with live sails, the Vega steamed proudly into the harbor, while the sun, as if to give additional lustre to the festive occasion, dispelled the clouds, showing a range of high, snow-covered hills in the background. From the top of a large promontory a bear stared impudently at his unexpected guests, but after receiving a few shots he deemed it prudent to retire to the shelter of the hills. Continuing our observations the next day we erected a cairn, in which we deposited a document telling of our expeditions and future plans. At one p. m. on the 20th of August we weighed anchor and steered eastward. After battling against fog and ice we attained the narrow water of the Taimir peninsula and had then the luck to meet the eternal water. The coast is about fifty English miles more to the west than noted down on the chart. On the 25th we anchored near a small island in the entrance of the Chataanga Bay. We made dual observations and sailed on "up town."

Now in the month of the Lena, where we part company with our Lena, who carries the mail to Yakutsk, her destination. She is to remain there until next year, when she will return to the Vega, hope, in a few months, to sail Japan and successfully accomplish the long-desired and hoped-for discovery of the northern passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.—N. Y. Herald.

What a Billy Goat Did.

AN English girl, near Manchester, tied a string to her toe and let it—the string, not the toe—hang out the window for a gentleman friend to pull in order that she might not miss her music lessons. The result of the church, is further stated, hearing of the arrangement, refused the couple the sacrament. And this reminds us of a little story. Once upon a time a young lady who desired to get up with the lark in order to go on an evening tour, adopted the English girl's plan and the lover was to be on hand at daybreak to give the signal. The string used for the pedal communication was a stout cord, and one end was dropped out of the chink of the window into the back yard, and the other end, of course, was attached to the damsel's great toe. And the legend runs that a healthy goat of the William persuasion arose early next morning to look for the early waker, as it were, and wandered into the yard.

After eating up all the old tomato cans, barrel staves, and broken crockery ware, he found the string and took that in as a dessert. As soon as the cord was drawn taut, the cord just as his hind legs and gave the string an impulsive jerk. The goat awoke. The goat gave another sudden pull, and the maiden jumped out of bed with a smothered cry of pain. Then she stooped down to detach the cord just as the ridiculous beast gave another violent jerk, and she lost her equilibrium—and her toe, too, almost, the cord cutting into the tender flesh. She sprang the window and called down in a hoarse whisper:

"Stop pulling, Charles—I'll be down in a minute."

Then she made another effort to untie the cord, but that diabolical goat gave his head several angry bows, and each time the girl gave a cry of pain. Again she softly called out in the darkness:

"Charles, if you don't stop jerking that way, I'll not come down at all!"

She was answered by another savage pull, and the cry of anguish that escaped from her lips brought her mother into the room, with a look of alarm and a lighted lamp.

The young lady, fainting, the eloquent maid's big toe was sore for two weeks. The goat escaped.—Bradford Bull Brize.

A Sioux Wedding.

PERHAPS the writer will have something more detailed to say about the missionaries, their work, mores, and morals, before he gets through, but as this letter is intended chiefly to give an idea of how people live out here the chronicle of a frontier wedding in this country may not be inappropriate.

The Hon. G. F. Blanchard, who recently exchanged the care and worry of calling the Nebraska State Senate to order for the less prominent but more lucrative position of Indian trader, was sitting in his store on afternoon or so ago when Ben Tobitts, the agency butcher, entered, and after a few preliminaries told Mr. Blanchard that a wedding was to take place at that time that evening, and that the happy couple would consider it a great favor if, following the ceremony, they might use that room for a reception and dance.

"Certainly," said the rather astonished merchant, "but who are to be married, and who is there out in this country to dance waltzes and such things?"

"Well," responded Ben, "the bride's Weah-wash-tay, or the Pretty Woman, granddaughter of Snake, who was king of the whole Dakota nation fifteen years or so ago, and the groom's one of the white employees here. As for the dancing that'll be all right."

"But," quipped Mr. Blanchard, "are these folks to be married in Indian fashion?"

"O no. Dr. Irwin's going to hitch them in first-class double-harness according to the statute in that case made and provided, and all that sort of thing, you know. O, you bet it's all solid clear through."

At seven that evening the ceremony took place, and Weah-wash-tay, who then first donned white women's clothes, demeaned herself as modestly and appropriately as any of her fairer sisters under like conditions. Her hair was done in a French twist and neatly banded with a crimson ribbon, which contrasted well with her ringlets of glossy black. Her features were purely Indian, but of a type which warranted her name, and her great dark eyes glanced about on the assembled guests with just enough of tremor in them to suggest a measure of maidenly hesitation. Her dress and shawl were not only neat but in good style, and the little feet which peeped out beneath were encased in booties that neatly have vied in size with the glass slipper of Cinderella. As for the groom, he was in the ordinary dress of an American citizen wears when got up for a special event. After the ceremony, Macneah Leutah, known to the whites as Red Cloud, chief of the Ogallalas, was present as representative of the bride's family and nation arose, and with a native grace and solemnity which impressed all present, raised his hands toward the still and starry heavens and prayed the Great Spirit that he would keep down upon the Indian girl and her husband in kindness and not in anger; that he would help them to follow the good way in this world, and after life was over bring them to a place of rest and peace for the eternal day. We then enjoined upon the pair the duty of being good to each other, kind to their friends, and helpful to the poor.

In the meantime the mirth had become so rampant that the "tap tap tap" of an improvised platform against the wall sat the musicians, Curtis, Dr. Irwin's colored cook, with the guitar; a wandering bull-whacker with the violin, and one of Reine's mechanics with a piano. The fun ceased for a moment when the bridal party entered, and then went on with greater zeal than ever. Not a white woman was present, the female dancers being entirely half-breed and half-Indian. Yet the pulsing rhythm of the music never met with better response from flying feet, and the daughters of the prairie endowed the poetry of motion with an accuracy and zest often foreign to the sort of motion they were the men of the frontier, yet each was famous for some particular deed. There, for example, was William Irving, scapaceous son of a wealthy Philadelphia family, who, as Brother Bill, is known to all over the border, to have no equal as a rider, and who sits the wildest horse with an ease and assurance that is the continued envy of his fellows. There, too, was William Garnett, half-savage and half-artistocrat, son of the rebel General Garnett by a squaw, next to Leon Pallidy the best interpreter in the country; and later Dear, son of J. W. Dear, once the most daring of Mosby's men, and now the heavy freight and Indian supply contractor in the West. Besides these, as well, were genial, whole-souled George Knox, who has made and lost a half-dozen fortunes beyond the Mississippi, and who, despite all, thinks it the best plan for one of his boys to grow up fat; and Powder-Jake, who, like Topey, "growsed," and is never so much at home as when burning Friar Bacon's deadly invention. Among the guests could be found the fun J. H. Hammond, the Indian Inspector, whom the Dakotas call White Panther, and whose doings are yet to be noted; Dr. James Irwin, the agent; Dr. Robinson, the missionary; the Hon. G. F. Blanchard, and other white men.

As the music rose and fell to the good old strains of the Virginia reel, and Brother Bill met Wankila, the Turtle Dove, who is the belle of her tribe, beneath the arch of hands, Dr. Irwin turned to the Times commissioner and said:

"Do you know I regard this scene as a flattering comment on my administration. Three years back you couldn't get a pair of white women in white costume, and as for figures or music, they knew none outside those of the scalp dance and that of the tom-tom. Now you see them as self-possessed as though they were palmer-skinned, and all the ways of civilization all their lives long."

At this moment there came a lull, the couples on the floor took seats, and Gen. Hammond, turning to Mr. Jordan, the chief clerk, remarked:

"I wish, Charles, that those fellows play so well, you'd see if they can't give us a march between dances."

The request was conveyed to the motley orchestra, and after a whispered consultation they began. As the weird, beautiful, perfect harmony filled every nook of this far-off spot, the General stared, and then turning to the writer whispered:

"In the name of enchantment, don't you recognize that music?"

"Yes, it's the grand march from 'Norma,' isn't it?"

"Of course; but who would ever have dreamed of hearing it here?"

The air punched and charmed the ears of the Indians clustered about like syren strains, and they drew stealthily nearer to catch every note, until with a finale that was wonderful in its melody, the sounds ceased and wandered off through the night to the distant pines.

So much for a Sunday at the Ridge, and a wedding among savages.—Correspondence Chicago Times.

THINGS brought $250 apiece at auction in New York recently. We don't suppose they will be any cheaper this season, and if our readers haven't time to go to the jungles of Africa and catch their own tigers they had better purchase their winter's supply this month. They will be no cheaper after the holidays.—Norristown Herald.

A GERMAN, telling the story of his campaigns, gives the following interesting item: "In this battle we lost the brave Captain Schultz. A cannon ball took off his head. His last words were, 'Bury me on the spot where I fell.'"

Very curious story comes from Pocumoke City, Md., showing what reading Byron may lead to. Miss Lily Duer was a young lady of culture, and a belle of Pocumoke City. She had only lately "graduated with honors," which may mean much or little, according to circumstances. Young ladies from sixteen to twenty generally affect one style or another, according to the novels they have read most. Miss Lily Duer adopted the strong-minded, slam-bang role, and parted it boy fashion. Being a pretty girl, with large, dark eyes, this was rather becoming. She studied medicine and hated men. Whether she studied medicine because she hated men, or hated men because she studied medicine, is not quite clear. She took long walks in the woods. Perhaps to keep off the abominable masculine sex, she fell into the pleasant little habit of carrying a small loaded pistol with her. Moreover, this popgun had a cheerful way of sometimes going off accidentally. At least that was what she claimed.

Miss Lily was overwhelmingly intellectual. She used to sit up every night reading books. She was passionately fond of rarer rarer novel testifies. The sequel shows that she was a passionate sort of female anyhow. Her favorite author was Byron, "whose nature is similar to my own," she said. She was honest to own it, at any rate.

She foreswore matrimony. Most girls do. But it was unfortunate in Miss Lily Duer's case. If she had had a nice young man to waste her affections and her powder on, Miss Ella Hearn might have been alive to-day. Owing to the fact that she hated men, Lily conceived an ardent fancy for Ella. All history testifies that the human heart must have something to lean upon, as it were. When women won't face the world, as nature intended, they fall in love with each other. At length, after Lily had studied medicine, sat up nights reading Byron, and taken lonely walks with her loaded little pistol by her side, for a sufficient period, she was in that frame of mind to do anything romantic. It is said she put on—in short, that she donned a suit of masculine clothes, and cavorted about the country at times in trousers. Her strong-mindedness seems to have developed.

Her love for Miss Hearn assumed the violent phase, so violent that at last it moved Ella seriously. Miss Hearn seems to have been a natural minded young woman who did not take kindly to this sort of nonsense. Lily used to visit her every day with queer and extravagant demonstrations of affection, although she told her again and again to go home, and never come back. Unrequited love is apt to become a nuisance in male or female. In October the two young ladies took a walk together in the woods. They gathered tea-berry. After a while they started home, the she-lover, with her little pistol, walking in the rear.

"Stop!" she cried, suddenly, to Ella. Miss Hearn did not heed, but walked on. Suddenly she heard a report, and then another and another, which caused her to stop very quickly and look behind her. Lily had deliberately fired at her three times, narrowly missing her. Ella ran to her and knocked the pistol out of her hand.

"Did you intend to shoot me?" she asked.

"I only intended to frighten you and make you stop," said Lily.

After that Ella never walked in the woods with her any more. Miss Hearn had another young lady friend, a Miss Foster, and this fact soon became known to the public. Miss Foster, who was a very nice girl, aroused the ungenerous jealousy of the female lover, who would brook no rival. From sitting up nights reading Byron she had learned what the proper thing to do. Nov. 4 she wrote a note to Ella asking her to call at her (Lily's) house, "on important business."

Ella called, and the weighty concern was a pressing request to take a walk in the woods with Lily. Ella declined. Next day, Nov. 5, the young girl marched into Miss Hearn's house with her tiny popgun. She insisted that Ella should walk with her in the woods, declaring before Almighty God that if she didn't go this time, she (Lily) would never ask her to do anything else as long as she lived. Ella still refused.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
CARLTON, GARRETT CO., MD.

COUNTRY BLIGHING.

A NEW SONG TO AN OLD TUNE.
In January, when the daisy
For cream and clover freeze,
When snow-drops to cover the frozen over,
We farmers take our ease,
At night we sit the team,
And with the outer only,
Then all it, till it, till it,
And hear the first about.

The windows glisten, the old folks listen,
To hear the night-bells ring;
The fields grow white with the stars are brighter,
The moon is in the firmament;
Our infant faces burn,
The clear north wind blows cold,
The girls all nod, nod, nod,
Each in her lover's hold.

Through bridge and gateway we're shooting Straightway,
The tollman was too slow!
As over the hill we go,
The girls cry "Fie for shame!"
Their cheeks and lips are red,
And as with knees, knees, knees,
They take the toll instead.

Still follow, follow across the hollow—
The tavern front is low;
When, now, all steady, the host is ready—
He knows the country road;
The reins are in his hand,
The leading lip is set;
So your and mine, up it,
And spit while 'tis hot.

The bells are ringing, the orders bringing,
The orders up now;
The leaders are singing, too long we're staying,
The night is half way through,
We're close the buffet table,
We're all about once more,
Now, drink, drink, drink, drink,
Away from the tavern door.

So follow, follow, by hill and hollow,
And swiftly homeward glide,
What midnight splendour! how warm and tender
The napkin by your side,
The slights drop apart,
Her words are soft and low;
Now, if you love her, love her, love her,
'Tis safe to tell her so.

THE FAIR STOWAWAY.

A ship's forecastle, like poverty, often makes one acquainted with strange companions, and the truth of this I verified on board an iron clipper called La Belle Helene, laden with lemons and railway plant and bound for the east. Having loaded at Liverpool, we were hauling out of the Prince's half-side basin, when a smart looking man with a stern face and a look of foreign service came on board, and, after a few words with the mate, desired him to clear the ship of strangers. This was Capt. Sprout, who had within twelve hours of his appointment been ordered to sea with two strange officers and a crew some of whom were not understood English. At Point Lynas the tug and pilot left us, with a strong south-west wind and a cross sea, into which the vessel was plunging, setting everything forward about.

On the second day things were a little more ship-shape; though at noon, when we were piped to dinner the forecastle was dark as pitch, what light there was being obtained from a few tapers, and a beef-tin, a rope-yarn and a potato. Two wooden fresh-dishes, containing the last dinner of fresh meat had been laid on the hatch, round which about fourteen men were seated, when something like a faint, sepulchral, seemed to issue from underneath.

"Rats already," remarked one of the crew, helping himself to beef; when, just as the ship gave an unusually heavy pitch, there was heard a long, wild, continuous shriek, about which there could be no mistake. In an instant every man was on his feet, the hatch was thrown off, and a young fellow descended the coit-hold, and directly afterwards, shouting "Stowaway!" sent down a line! When a boy-line had been thrown over him he hauled up a wretched sick-looking lad of about twelve years of age, who seemed ill and worn out with exhaustion; and who was followed by an older boy, whose face and form were almost concealed in a southwest and a suit of tarpanlin much too big for him.

"What do you mean by yowling and yelping in that way?" roared Black, whose real name was Pappa, one of those rough, turbulent-looking men peculiar to Liverpool and New York.

The elder lad made no reply, but was in the act of putting his hand in the nearest bucket, to assist his head, when, with a suddenness, he sprang out, and drawing his knife across the boy's knuckles, sang out: "Men before boys, remember; and not a bit of grub do you get here till you are victualled by the ship."

"Slam!" replied another voice, which proceeded from a hammock; and Hawke, a pale-looking young fellow with a thin, sharp nose and a pair of eyes as bright and piercing as a bird's, put his hand to his forehead.

"Who said that?"

"I did," answered the man in the hammock; "and I say, too, that you must be a coward to cut a boy's hand like that."

"Stand out, then, if you don't want to be served the same," retorted the other; and Black stood up and brandished his sheath-knife. But he had not long to wait, for Hawke sprang out of his hammock, and without a word struck the bully a blow which floored him. When the latter regained his feet he was mad with passion and frantic with revenge; and seizing his weapon and lowering his head, was again rushing to the attack, when, unable to stand it longer, I stepped forward and caught his wrist, which I twisted till he dropped the knife. Shouting to the foreigners, he yelled: "Are we to be bullied by the Britishers in this way?" and I felt myself choked from behind, and while struggling with two unseen adversaries, slipped down with them uppermost. A general melee now ensued between the British and the foreigners, which was getting fierce and sanguinary, when Mr. Cobb, the mate, hearing a cry of "Murder!" rushed to the rescue, followed by the boatswain. The former was a tall, wiry man, possessed of great strength, and as he entered the forecastle he saw two Maltese jumping upon the body of Shaw, who had found the stowaways. Without hesitation Mr. Cobb seized one in each hand and knocked their heads together; but in the dark he was set upon by others, and one of the Maltese was down, seized him by the leg and hit him savagely; but the mate dealt him a terrific blow, which made him relinquish his hold and lie sprawling on the deck. Black was shouting "Down with him—I'll finish him!" when he was seized by the son of Anak, and, in spite of a furious resistance, was thrown on the deck, and, in presence of the whole watch, put in irons. By his courage, strength, and decision, Mr. Cobb overawed the whole of us, and perhaps saved some of the English portion from being murdered.

After being restored, Mr. Cobb called for lights; and all objectionable weapons being delivered up to him, he condescended to ask what the disturbance was about; but when he found that in spite of his own aid, and care there were strangers on board, he began to chide the second mate and the boatswain for their negligence.

In the meantime the elder of the lads had placed his arm around the boy's shoulder, as though to protect him, both of them looking very frightened. Mr. Cobb regarded the pair with a look of severity, and roughly ordered them to follow him to the cabin. When the wailing apparition before Capt. Sprout, that officer was in the act of threatening to disrate the steward, whom he charged with being incapable and making free with his deck-cases; but directly the Captain saw the pair and heard the account of the disturbance, "In the forecastle on their account, he broke out with: "You are a pair of young loafers who ought to be in jail, and shall go there when I reach Calcutta; and you, too, shall be there, for your conduct in boxing the lad's ears for entering the cabin without removing his hat, and had just wrenched the objectionable head-piece from the boy's head, when a mass of the crew, who had followed the Captain and assistant, came rushing in, and the younger whined out: "Please don't hurt her, sir; she's my sister."

Capt. Sprout staggered back aghast. "Mercy on us!" he exclaimed. "Have you no shame or reputation left to come masquerading among my crew in men's clothes? Who are you? And what's your name?"

The girl colored crimson as she replied: "Helen Muir; and then, after a moment's hesitation, she added: "I am a friend of the Captain's, and I have come on board to see him. I have been on a boarding-school near Liverpool, because, through no letters or remittances having been received from my father for two years, he has been constantly heaped upon their name. For the same cause her brother had been compelled to go to sea; and not wishing to be separated, they had terminated their education, and were now in India and rejoined their father, leaving their clothes behind, and giving their last money to the wife of a ship-keeper, who induced her husband to place them in the hold of La Belle Helene. I will clear out the cabin and assist her. I will be no cost to you, for I am clever with my needle, can make pastry, and do, I think, all that a steward can."

Capt. Sprout gave her a searching look and said: "I shall try you." He then entered in the log that John Tattamy was disgraced for drunkenness, and Helen Muir appointed in his place. "And the boy," continued the Captain, "will clear out the cabin and assist her. I will be no cost to you, for I am clever with my needle, can make pastry, and do, I think, all that a steward can."

"Ay, ay, sir," returned the other, who quickly retired to his cabin to make the entry.

"Now," Helen, commenced Capt. Sprout, "every soul on board here has to work, and so must you; and your duty is simple. Take charge of the cups and saucers, glass and linen, and keep them clean. Pass my orders to the cook, who will come for them every morning at six sharp. Lay the table and wait on me. The boy will attend to Mr. Cobb and the second officer. Now, remember!" and the Captain looked terribly in earnest. "Outside the cabin doors you must not stir without permission, nor speak to any of the crew for any reason, or you will be sorry for it. But if you come to me when in any difficulty, and do your duty with fear or favor from anyone, you will be safe in this cabin as though you were in your father's drawing-room."

Having admonished the girl with this laconic speech, the Captain found her cabin, and turned his attention to getting her some clothes, and fetching her a piece of dark-blue serge intended for his own use, and an old cloth jacket, he laid them on the cabin table and commenced to fashion a garment which, when completed, resembled the useful dress of a sister of Charity.

One evening at dusk all hands were called to shorten sail. Helen stood near the cabin-door trimming a lamp, and watching us run aloft, when the door opened quietly, and a girl, black-haired, stout, and noiseless as a tiger. Suddenly she saw the man with his eyes fixed upon her, and before she could scream or speak, he caught her in his arms and kissed her roughly, and while she struggled with him her hair broke and fell in waves over her face and breast. "I love you," he said, "and you shall be mine; and I will kill him, and him, and all of them!"—pointing to the officers' cabins—"if you will say me, I shall kill you, too. But I will come again; and I take this for a love gift;" and this black-bearded miscreant snatched from her neck one of Capt. Sprout's white silk handkerchiefs, and disappeared in the dark as he had entered.

The girl was too terrified to tell any one what had occurred; besides, she did not even know the man's name; and when, on the next morning, Capt. Sprout entered the cabin, he found her wiping oil off the floor, and for the first time spoke to her sharply about her carelessness; and, imagining that her tears and trembling were occasioned by his reproach, returned on deck again. But another event occurred which did not pass off so smoothly. The next evening during the dog-watch, Sholto Shaw, the young seaman who had found the cabin doors, and under pretense of asking for medicine, took the opportunity of presenting her with a dainty pair of canvass shoes, which he said, had been made on purpose for her, and she was questioning him as to who was the sender; but Capt. Sprout was too sharp for them, for at that moment he darted out of the cabin, and, seizing the shoes, remarked: "You liked for medicine, I think," when, dragging Shaw on deck and taking up a rope-end, he flogged him for stealing the ship's canvass, and promising him a stronger dose if the offense was repeated, the Captain sent him forward.

Entering the cabin, the Captain called Helen to him. "You have broken my orders, and I am disappointed; but as I have punished the sailor I must also punish you," and, producing a pair of scissors, the Captain deliberately cut off all her hair, remarking that he might not be so lenient a second time.

As for Helen, a nature less innocent might have been blighted by such treatment, but she only shed a few tears, and made much lighter of the matter than my comrade Hawke, who trembled with indignation when he heard of the occurrence. Black, the cook, who laughed like a hyena at the fate of the canvass shoes, and, to our amazement, put the white silk handkerchief around his neck, which he said the English miss had given him.

Of Hawke's history, I knew nothing; but there was something about the unknown seaman which showed that he had come down greatly in social status; in fact, he admitted that he was a forecastle through his own folly. He had been a very reason and a cool self-possession, and pride about him which made the other seamen keep aloof from him and the officers dislike him. Sharp words ensued between these two men about the ownership of the handkerchief, which would have ended in blows; but the weather being squally, we were piped to reef top-sails. The reef-tacks of the main-top-sails were hauled taut, and some of us were upon the yard piecing up the points, when Black came up the weather-rigging, and getting on the foot-rope seized Hawke's points and gave him a shove which nearly sent both of us off the yard, and caused us to let go the rope, and in an instant the sail belied out, and Black, who was still holding on, was dragged over the yard; but no human power could save him, for what with the wind and the rope he had about his neck, and as he did so he fell feet foremost, and with a tremendous crash went half through a life-boat which was lying on the skids. He had been caught in the manner of speaking to her, and the carpenter was found to be dead.

After a voyage of ninety days we reached Calcutta, where, after seeing his agents, the first thing that Captain Muir did was to take Helen on shore. Then driving to the Adjutant General's office, he made inquiries for her father, and was told that Captain Muir had sent in his papers three years previously.

An advertisement elicited the information that Captain Muir, a widower at the time when he was hopelessly insolvent, had married an East Indian lady, and from getting into debt with the banks and struggling to get out of it, had fallen into worse difficulties, resulting in his death at the debtor's jail, Calcutta; and the widow, much impoverished, declined to increase her responsibilities by receiving step-children.

It was when Helen thus found herself without a home and friendless that Capt. Sprout came to her aid. He had lately become gentle, and was looking in his manner of speaking to her, and from treating her as a child had, although he hardly knew it, commenced to love her as a woman. But it was the mendacious statement of the disgraced steward in the past, and the question, I will make you my wife."

Extremes will meet. In spite of his severity, Helen greatly respected the Captain. His stern sense of justice, manly ways, and the terse vigor that characterized his utterances, made him to her a man to look up to; besides she now regarded him as her protector and the ship her home, and she accepted him.

A few days after this speech, Capt. Sprout, who had been married that morning, and had left his bride at the house of a friend, prior to going on a short honeymoon. Before leaving, however, he gave his bride his instructions to Mr. Cobb.

Some days previous to the wedding my comrade, Hawke, had applied for and obtained his discharge, the Captain remarking that he did not care to have a broken-down sailor on board his ship, and advising Hawke to try to find more congenial employment on shore. But on this, the Captain's wedding morning, a terrible event occurred which nearly lost him, his wife, his ship, and the lives of every one on board, including his own. The barometer had fallen, and when the Captain came on board it was blowing with a gale, and at noon, just as the great tidal wave was due, the wind shifted with the force of a hurricane, bringing with it the "bore" or storm-wave from the sea. Then commenced to blow such a cyclone that for destruction has hardly been equaled during the century. In that cyclone twenty thousand people perished and one hundred and thirteen villages were swept away; and out of a fleet of three hundred and finest ships and steamers in the world, only one escaped without damage.

When the great wave came rolling up, La Belle Helene, directly she struck, was dragged from her moorings, while the force of the wind was so terrific that we could not stand upright. Two vessels locked together had drifted against us, smashing our boats to match-wood and snapping our masts and yards as though they were pipe-stems. The concussion caused us to collide with another vessel, reducing her to the same state as ourselves; and thus four vessels locked together were swept out into the stream. We were carried stern first with almost railway velocity, the Captain and Mr. Cobb vainly trying to give orders, while holding on to the mizzen-mast, when suddenly the vessel lifted up with a tremendous crash, as though her stern was stove in, and in less than a minute her low swinging round head-upstream, and she lay over on her beam-ends. We had struck on a smitten wreck, and in addition to losing the rudder had knocked a large hole in our quarter, through which the water was rushing like a water-fall, and we were filling fast. This disaster, however, cleared us of the other vessels, which, like chips in a mill-stream, swept past, leaving us a complete wreck, with bulwarks stove in and fore-lower-mast alone standing. As the vessel settled by the stern, with great difficulty we crawled and made our way to the bowsprit, which seemed each minute to stand more upright; while with a roar like the blast of a furnace the wind increased in force, or screamed like an Arabian harp through what remained of our wire shrouds. The cyclone was now at its height, and we had been nearly four hours on the bowsprit, when there was a hull, and as cattle, horses and dead bodies of men, women and children passed us, besides native boats and portions of wreckage, we could make out that they saw us on shore, and were getting the rocket apparatus into position; but such was the force of the wind that when they fired the mortar the lines fell short, and after several attempts they desisted. They pointed down the river, what appeared to be a speck came up with the tide, which was running like a sluiceway. As the speck approached we could distinguish that it was a man with the features of Hawke, and he held up his hand to show that he had been stowed to his aid, and as he was carried toward us, the Captain dropped a running bow-line over him, and with great difficulty we hauled him on board.

To the line which Hawke brought with him we were not long in attaching the ropes, and together, which they hauled on shore; and as they were dragging us, one at a time, on land, Hawke came to me for a moment and in an anxious tone asked: "Where is Helen?"

"Married this morning to the Captain, and on shore."

"He turned away, saying: "Then I am of no use to the world, and the life of no use to me. With a heart full of grief, and a head full of despair, he went to the shore, and when she saw him, she was quickly thinking of nothing at all, she suddenly bowed to her great amazement, a tiny voice—as clear and sweet as the tinkling of the silver bell that hung from her forehead—said: "Repeat the words."

"Sixty minutes make an hour," and peeping through the cloud of hair that veiled her eyes, she saw a wee figure standing before her, dressed in white, with a daisy in its bosom, and a snow-drooping to its pale, golden curls.

"It had a round, cheery, baby-face, with a dimple in one rosy cheek, and another in the rosy chin, and its eyes were as blue as the eyes of a kitten when it is very young and old. Dancing in a hole in one of the window panes, and thence to the floor on a long, slanting sunbeam, came other wee figures, followed by still smaller ones, and the smaller ones followed by comical mites no higher than Nellie's thumb.

"O, your darlings!" cried Nellie, "how glad I am to see you! Are you fairies?"

"No, dear," replied the baby-faced one with a bright smile. "We are Hours, Minutes and Seconds, and we belong to the year that is almost gone. I don't suppose you can remember the Minutes and Seconds, your acquaintances; but we are very slight; they stay such a short time, no one can be so well acquainted with them, sixty minutes and three thousand and six hundred seconds coming and going during the year; but I am sure you can remember me and my sisters and cousins—that is, some of us. It would be impossible for you to remember us all."

"Why, how many sisters and cousins had you, your cunning tot?" asked Nellie.

"Twenty-three sisters, and eight thousand seven hundred and thirty-six cousins."

"Good gracious! and my stars!" exclaimed Nellie. "What a awful—a very awful large family! I never heard of such a thing. It stands to reason!"

"Nellie!" I roared this expression from her papa—"that I could not remember such a young family as I have—only six, though on seven—the half or quarter of so many hundreds and thousands, even if I'd met them all, which I don't believe I have."

"That's just what I was about to say," said the Hour, shaking its light curls softly; "we don't expect you to remember very many of us, and you're right in thinking you have not known us all. In fact, but half of our number have been introduced to you. The other half gilded silently by, while you were sleeping, and some of us were so much alike that you couldn't tell us apart, and a few of our relations have long enough to receive them. The last will fly away as the clock strikes twelve, and the midnight bells ring merrily to welcome the birth of the New Year."

"O dear, no," said Nellie; "I shan't lose on particular-casualties, and then nine; but I don't think this is a particular-casualties for you. But you haven't told me who you are, yet?"

"I am the Hour that was with you the morning nearly a year ago, when your baby-brother broke the beautiful wax doll Santa Claus had brought you, and you forced back the tears when you saw his rosy mouth begin to tremble, and taking him in your arms told him: 'Hush, hush, black sheep, until he fell asleep.'"

Our Young Folks.

THE MINCE PIE PRINCE.

The Mince Pie Prince, with his curly hair,
Sat himself down on the lowest stair,
Of the broad flight leading up to the moon,
Where lives the King of the Golden Shoon.
Where all is light as an endless day;
Where there's no time for work, but plenty for play.
Said the Mince Pie Prince: "They'll be here soon."

And from all around, as he sat him down,
Came a legion of mince pies, thick and brown,
There were mince pies long, and mince pies small;
Mince pies short, and mince pies tall;
Mince pies here, and mince pies there;
Mince pies on every where.
Said the Mince Pie Prince: "I'll eat them all."

"I'll eat them all without delay,
For the sooner, the better, they're out of the way.
Chances like this come but seldom enough,
When they six six pies are to be tough.
But these are so nice that I'll not leave one,
No, not one for the prince yet to come."

So he set to work with a royal will,
And made of mince pies a mince pie mill—
One by one they vanished from sight,
Two by two they disappeared;
Three by three, and four by four,
Till at last there weren't any mince pies more.

Then the Mince Pie Prince, he said, with a grin,
That he couldn't get up, but was held fast down
By mince pie crust so sticky and brown.
By mince pie crust, and mince pie crust,
And all that makes a mince pie crust.

In vain his struggles, in vain his cries;
No one came but a few mince pies,
Which he could not reach, and so he lay,
Till the sun came and the moon went away.
Dear children, beware of gluttony.
—Kirk Monitor, in January Wide-Awake.

"SIXTY MINUTES MAKE AN HOUR."

"Sixty seconds make a minute—sixty minutes make an hour," sang brown-haired Nellie, on the afternoon of the very last day of the year, as she rocked to and fro in her small rocking-chair—a gift from Santa Claus—beating her breast with her little fist as though to repeat the lesson so firmly in that it never could get out again by any chance (I think it would have been far more sensible to have pounded on her head for that purpose)—"sixty seconds make a minute—sixty minutes make an hour," over an over again, until the childish voice grew fainter and fainter, and the last "hour" never got farther than "on."

Then Nellie ceased rocking, and her head fell back against the pretty scarlet and green "tidy" which she had found on her Christmas Tree, and the dark-brown curls fell over the dark-brown eyes, and she began to think of nothing at all, and in a few minutes she was quietly thinking of nothing at all, she suddenly bowed to her great amazement, a tiny voice—as clear and sweet as the tinkling of the silver bell that hung from her forehead—said: "Repeat the words."

"Sixty minutes make an hour," and peeping through the cloud of hair that veiled her eyes, she saw a wee figure standing before her, dressed in white, with a daisy in its bosom, and a snow-drooping to its pale, golden curls.

"It had a round, cheery, baby-face, with a dimple in one rosy cheek, and another in the rosy chin, and its eyes were as blue as the eyes of a kitten when it is very young and old. Dancing in a hole in one of the window panes, and thence to the floor on a long, slanting sunbeam, came other wee figures, followed by still smaller ones, and the smaller ones followed by comical mites no higher than Nellie's thumb.

"O, your darlings!" cried Nellie, "how glad I am to see you! Are you fairies?"

"No, dear," replied the baby-faced one with a bright smile. "We are Hours, Minutes and Seconds, and we belong to the year that is almost gone. I don't suppose you can remember the Minutes and Seconds, your acquaintances; but we are very slight; they stay such a short time, no one can be so well acquainted with them, sixty minutes and three thousand and six hundred seconds coming and going during the year; but I am sure you can remember me and my sisters and cousins—that is, some of us. It would be impossible for you to remember us all."

"Why, how many sisters and cousins had you, your cunning tot?" asked Nellie.

"Twenty-three sisters, and eight thousand seven hundred and thirty-six cousins."

"Good gracious! and my stars!" exclaimed Nellie. "What a awful—a very awful large family! I never heard of such a thing. It stands to reason!"

"Nellie!" I roared this expression from her papa—"that I could not remember such a young family as I have—only six, though on seven—the half or quarter of so many hundreds and thousands, even if I'd met them all, which I don't believe I have."

"That's just what I was about to say," said the Hour, shaking its light curls softly; "we don't expect you to remember very many of us, and you're right in thinking you have not known us all. In fact, but half of our number have been introduced to you. The other half gilded silently by, while you were sleeping, and some of us were so much alike that you couldn't tell us apart, and a few of our relations have long enough to receive them. The last will fly away as the clock strikes twelve, and the midnight bells ring merrily to welcome the birth of the New Year."

"O dear, no," said Nellie; "I shan't lose on particular-casualties, and then nine; but I don't think this is a particular-casualties for you. But you haven't told me who you are, yet?"

—with marks of tears on its cheeks, and a funny red tip to its nose, "that stayed with you when you were being punished for telling—"

"Don't mention it, please," interrupted a bright-faced, pleasant looking Hour, in a sky-blue robe, with a wreath of the finest, crispsandhennas around its head. "What's the use of talking about it? It isn't a cheerful subject, and I've no doubt Nellie always told the truth after that. I heard her sobs of repentance, and her vows 'never—never—never' to do so again, and saw the smiles come back and chase away the clouds, when all was joy and peace once more."

"I danced with her in the meadow," sang a graceful elf standing on the tips of its toes, and holding its arms above its head as though it were about to fly. "One summer day—the day she gathered daisies and dandelions—and sang a sweet and joyous song in answer to the bird that had a nest in the apple-tree. In that nest were four baby-birds, and they peeped out and twittered when they heard Nellie sing."

"Yes, yes, indeed!" cried Nellie, "and what big mouths they had!"

"And I, Nellie dear," said a queer sprite with a pointed cap, and on the point a jolly little bell, "fell into the brook with you one August afternoon when you were trying to catch a frog. Kneel down! how scared the frog-folk were when you tumbled in among them!" and the sprite laughed, and the jolly little bell laughed, and Nellie laughed loudest of all.

"And I," cried another, tossing its head and trying to point, "sat by your side when you were sent from the supper-table because you were naughty and wouldn't say 'please.'"

"And I," lisped a roly-poly, cunning wee thing, "chased you now." "Please—please—please," and grandma gave you a slice of bread-and-butter, but you couldn't see the butter for the apple-jelly."

"I remember, I remember," said Nellie, "I wish I had some now."

"I was with you, dear one," murmured an Hour, with kind, gentle eyes, and low, piping voice, "when your poor head ached with a terrible pain, and between your moans, you made a prayer to the good God for help."

"I am the Hour," said a merry, twinkling, bird-like spirit with holly-berry hanging all over it, "that looked on when you played games with your brothers just before you had your stocking on Christmas Eve."

"And I saw you take it down the next morning filled almost to bursting with good things to eat," said another, with a face like a doll's plum-pudding, and little black curls for eyes.

"And I—," but at that moment Nellie's arithmetic fell from her lap with a bang, and away fell the Seconds, and Minutes, and Hours, up the long, slanting sunbeam, and out of the window.

And when Nellie in a great hurry leaned out to look after them, she saw nothing but the snow, and two street-sweepers picking up crumbs, and chattering noisily to each other.—St. Nicholas for January.

Excursion in Greenland.

Many attempts have been made to penetrate into the interior of Greenland from the west coast, but with little success. Three Danish gentlemen, Messrs. Jensen, Kornrup and Groth, under the direction of the Commission for Scientific Exploration in the Danish Colonies, started to explore and survey the coast between Godthaab and Frederikshaab. Lieut. Jensen took advantage of the opportunity to make an excursion into the interior over the ice. The aim was to reach several mountain peaks rising out of the ice. The baggage was placed in three small sledges of the travelers' own, and the toilsome journey commenced on July 14. After two days the loose snow accumulated on the surface of the ice to such an extent that the journey became very dangerous, while they continually sank in concealed crevices and holes, saving themselves only by adopting the Alpine expedient of attaching themselves to knapsacks with a rope. The surface of the ice was generally undulating, but there were also many rugged parts and chasms which rendered the journey a difficult one. It was foggy nearly the whole day. On the 24th the expedition reached the foot of the mountain referred to above. Then came another storm which lasted six days, with continuous snow and fog; the travelers were suffering from the weather, and the ascent of the mountain might be undertaken with some prospect of success. The height was estimated at about 5,000 feet above sea level, and on the other side of the mountain the ice could reach, ice sheets and glaciers were seen, and not the smallest speck of land free of ice. After finishing their observations, the expedition returned and reached their starting point on Aug. 5, having been away for twenty-three days. The mountains referred to was forty-five miles from the coast.

Share and Share Alike.

"Yes," grumbled an interesting husband, "my wife comes to me for money to buy me a Christmas present with; fine way of doing business, that is! It is a fine way of doing business, and it is the proper way, and if that husband will please stand up a minute we will address our remarks to him personally." "Don't you know, sir, that the money belongs as much to your wife as it does to you? Don't you chance to hold the purse-strings? Don't you know that to her industry, her self-denial and her intelligence you owe more than you will be able to pay if you live a hundred years? Don't you know that when you put your self up with the idea that she is living on your bounty, that you are worse than an egotistical fool? And lastly, don't you know that the best thing you can do, and the right thing is to give your wife a regular allowance to spend as she chooses, her share of the joint earnings? If you don't know it, it is high time that you found it out, and you can now sit down."

Rocheater Democrat.

The almighty dollar is almighty hard to get.

Hour and Minute from no condition rise; At well your part—there all the lower lies.

Chambers Journal.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JAN. 18, 1879.

Alonso Garcelon, Democrat, has been elected Governor of Maine by the Legislature of that State. The Republicans voted for him almost solidly in preference to casting their ballots for his Greenback opponent.

Voice of the Bulgarian people: We don't want him. Voice of the American people: "Neither do we." What on earth, then, is Grant to do.—N. Y. Star. Continue to mind his own business, smoke his fragrant cigar, and fill the bosom of the Democracy with terrible forebodings.

Representative Schleicher is the ninth member of the present Congress who has died. The others were Senators Morton and Boggs, and Representatives Leonard, Welch, Quinn, Williams, Douglas and Harbridge. There should be an investigation into the sanitary condition of the Capital and the habits of Congressmen.

From the vehemence of Western Democratic and Greenback papers one might suppose that the "national bank monopoly" monopolized the banking business of the country, while in reality, they do scarcely a third of it. The total deposits of the national banks are $67,160,000, while those of the state banks and private banks are $1,212,790,000. National banks number only 2,056, while the state and private banks number 4,400.

The Democratic platform of 1876 declared the resumption act "a hindrance to resumption," and Samuel J. Tilden expanded the same thesis in his letter of acceptance with his most hair-splitting and circumlocutory and non-understandable rhetoric. Now what have these gentlemen to say for themselves? The resumption act has not been repealed and despite its "hindrance" resumption has come along promptly as advertised.

The Potter committee is having the usual luck of Democratic committees when fishing in dirty waters. It has hooked a number of Democrats. J. H. St. Martin, a deputy sergeant-at-arms of the committee, swears that he was engaged by A. M. Gibson, J. H. Maddox and Geo. W. Carter, stated to be confidential agents of Tilden, to suborn certain witnesses to retract statements previously made by them before the Returning Board in regard to outrages and intimidation in Feliciana parish, and that money was given for the purpose.

The Okolona, Mississippi, editors have this to say of the 1880 race: "Certainly we would like to see the Resumption act repealed, the Federal banking system leveled with the dust, and sufficient currency to supply the demands of trade; certainly we prefer Thurman to Bayard, Hendricks to Tilden. But we insist that the Democracy shall nominate the man who will poll the heaviest vote. Our friends and allies North must not think it necessary to throw a sop to the South in the way of a Vice Presidential candidate. If a Southern man is nominated, it will weaken our ticket in the North; and if a Lamar, a Hill, a Hampton, or any so-called conservative Democrat of that type or complexion is named for the donor, it will dissatisfy a large portion of our people. The men specified, and their imitators of minor note, have misrepresented us in public councils by saying that we have cheerfully acquiesced in the fruits of the war, when the truth is we have never acquiesced, except, and only except as a matter of stern necessity. If we had our way we would strike down the forced amendments to the Constitution—the fourteenth and fifteenth—and remand the suffrage question to the state government, where it properly belongs."

Europe's average grain crop is set down at 5,000,000,000 bushels, of which Russia raises 1,650,000,000 bushels; France and Germany each 500,000,000. The United States produces about the same as Russia, which in proportion to population is greater than any other country.

Counting our inhabitants at forty millions, we raise forty bushels per head, and Europe's inhabitants at three hundred millions, she raises out sixteen bushels per head. Russia has twenty-six and Great Britain four bushels per head. The amount of grain consumed being generally fifteen bushels per head, we produce nearly three times as much as we want, Russia almost twice what she needs, and Great Britain not more than one fourth of her requirement. Thus, it will be seen, that the production far exceeds the consumption, but the excess is absorbed by breweries and distilleries at home and abroad, which, more than any other cause, keep up the prices of breadstuffs. So men have to pay dearer for what they drink than for what they eat, because, perhaps, eating is a necessity, and drinking, for the most part, is much worse than a superfluity.

Political Sensations.

Although the committee appointed by the Raine's Hall Republican meeting has not, in a body, called upon Mr. R. Stockett Mathews, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, in relation to the assembling of that body to decide upon the meeting of the State Convention, several members have seen him personally, and have ascertained from him that he proposes to call a meeting of the State Central Committee at as early a day as is practicable, and within the time named in the Raine's Hall resolutions. If the committee decides upon issuing the summons for a convention, an early date will undoubtedly be decided upon.

The authors of the reorganization movement forecast a brilliant future for the Republican party in Maryland if their plans are carried out. They talk of bringing reinforcements into the party from the ranks of the Democrats dissatisfied with the rule of the Ring. On the day of the Raine's Hall meeting, Mr. C. Irving Ditty and several other political leaders were discussing affairs, when Colonel Marshall, of the law firm of Marshall & Fisher, happened in. He remarked that if the reorganization project was successful, he would be very likely to join the Republican party. Those who heard his words got the opinion that he was thoroughly disgusted with the Ring domination in the Democratic party, and that he would become a Republican if that party provided anything better. The conversation then turned upon General Grant, and Colonel Marshall expressed his admiration for the man. He spoke of his magnanimity in allowing the surrendering Confederate soldiers to retain their side arms, and in vouching the honor of the nation for the safety of the prisoners of war. Colonel Marshall remarked that few Confederates can forget General Grant's generosity towards them on that occasion. It had not been for General Grant he (Colonel Marshall) and thousands of others would have been thrown into prison upon returning north from Appomattox Court House. Those who heard Colonel Marshall formed the impression that he would not be averse to vote or perhaps stump for General Grant in the event of his being the nominee of the Republican party for President of the United States in 1880.

Colonel Marshall was one of the most prominent officers of the Confederate army. He was assistant adjutant general and chief-of-staff under General Robert E. Lee, and he conducted the correspondence between Lee and Grant preceding the surrender at Appomattox. Since shortly after the war he has been practicing law in Baltimore. He is the author of a work upon "The Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia," and it is understood that he is now engaged upon a life of the distinguished military chieftain of the Confederacy with whom he was so closely associated.

Governor Pillsbury, of Minnesota, in his message, says statistics show the total number of farms in the state to be 60,816, covering a total tillable area of 5,429,164 acres. Nine years' progress in agricultural development may be seen by comparing these with similar returns for 1859, when the number of farms was 46,250, with 1,863,316 cultivated acres. The sales in land offices reached an aggregate of 2,344,266 acres, being more than double the total quantity disposed of in 1877, which, in turn, far surpassed any prior year in the magnitude of land transactions. The number of miles added to the railroad system within the year 1878 was 375, making a total of 2,608 miles. He deeply regrets repudiation of state bonds of certain classes, and urges a reconsideration of the matter.

Life is but short, and we should do all we can to prolong it. Check a Cough or Cold at once by using an old and reliable remedy such as Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 13, 1879.

There was a man in our town who was so wondrous wise,
He jumped into the inflation bush and scratched out both his eyes,
But when he found his eyes were out, with all his might and main,
He jumped back into the honest-money bush to scratch 'em in again.

You will, Mr. Editor, bear me witness that I am tolerable free from the Hegelian habit of "dropping into poetry." But by taking some liberties with him so exactly epitomized the financial course of "the favorite son" great Senator of Ohio, that I have ventured to quote him, substituting and interpolating as demanded by the circumstances of the particular case, though at the expense of metre and symmetry, perhaps. The damage resulting to Mr. Thurman's reputation as a financial guide from the success of resumption is sufficiently disquieting. Just at a time when finances promise to continue one of the leading issues in the campaign of 1880. But he is confronted by a still more serious dilemma in the revelations now being made before the Teller Committee. Mr. Thurman is an ingrained Bourbon and the associations of a life time have tended to make him one of the most narrow minded and bigotted of partisans. He has never lost an opportunity to defend the bloody code of the White League Democracy in the Senate. His chicanery of the bulldozers is notorious; and they have shown themselves capable of no crime so atrocious or sickening as to shock Mr. Thurman into silence. But his pointless, rambling letter to the young Democrats of Ohio shows his perturbations of mind and the depths of depression in which he is at present wallowing. There are other den—well call them Democrats—unhappily disappointed at the success of resumption. As in the case of Mr. Thurman it discredits them; and at it hemes prophets, and makes the hand-springs and double summer suits they have turned during the past two years with the hope, of keeping on the winning side regardless of principle or conviction, appear in a light so ridiculous, not to say contemptible, that they are in danger of being laughed out of future nominating conventions. Let us hope these men represent only themselves in their anxiety to thus trade on the National pledges to its creditors, to temporarily obtain peace and power. Certainly if Republican and some Democratic representatives here correctly reflect the sentiment of their constituents, a vast majority of the votes of this country share the feeling of heart felt gratitude exhibited by most Congressmen here that we have been able to get down to a hard money basis with so little disturbance to any of our national interests.

Senator Oglesby has secured the respect of the public by his straight forward course here as a National legislator. Nevertheless General Logan is the popular favorite with those who sympathized with the Union cause; at least that is the impression one gets from the tone of comment heard on the chances of the different candidates for the Senatorial succession from Illinois. I believe he is the preference of a very large majority of the class named, as between him and any other man Illinois Republicans could select to represent them in the upper House of Congress. His course in the Senate was narrowly scrutinized and generally commended itself to Republicans, and the conspicuous services he rendered the country in its hour of peril will not be forgotten till the last loyal man of this generation shall have succumbed to the last enemy.

A little reflection is convincing that Mr. Sumner is figuring to get the conspicious machinery into the hands of the bulldozers, that he may inflame the white vote of his section, to his liking.

UNDINE.

The Republican Record.

The admission with which the English press regard the successful resumption of specie payments in this country shows just appreciation of a wonderful achievement. The financial results of the Republican administration will form a shining chapter of history, unmatched in the annals of any nation. We have already referred to the tardy and bungling manner in which the resumption of specie payments was effected in England. Repeated postponements of the date were made, and even after resumption had been accomplished, the specie redemption of small bills was indefinitely postponed, causing the issue of a volume of currency which precipitated the terribly ruinous panic of 1855. Resumption in this country was effected without the slightest jar, but the financial management that led up to it is even more remarkable than that great event.

Take, for instance, the reduction of the public debt. It stood at its maximum in 1865, and the account then stood as follows, the figures being taken from the statement of Secretary McCulloch, October 31, 1865:

Principal.	Interest.
$50,000,000 at 7 1/2 per cent.....	$37,500,000
1,175,000,000 at 1 1/2 ".....	17,625,000
$30,851,716 at 2 ".....	617,034
$2,552,467,479
$49,361,287 bearing no interest.	$148,438,901
$2,601,828,766
$2,711,390,022 total debt.

The public debt statement for last December showed the following:

Principal.	Interest.
$67,840,200 at 6 per cent.....	$4,069,722
785,266,659 at 4 ".....	31,410,676
230,000,000 at 1 1/2 ".....	3,450,000
188,700,000 at 3 ".....	5,661,000
11,000,000 at 2 ".....	$20,000
$1,282,816,859
$1,418,890,000 bearing no interest.	$91,232,101
$2,701,706,859
$23,061,215 cash in treasury, less interest due.
$2,678,645,644 total debt.

From the comparison of these two statements it appears that in thirteen years and two months the principal of the debt has been brought down from $2,711,390,022 to $2,678,645,644, a reduction of $32,744,378; and the interest has been reduced from $158,468,931 to $91,232,101, a saving of $67,236,830 per annum. This process of reduction in the amount of principal and interest of the debt has been accompanied by a steady reduction of taxation.

In 1866 the taxes were:

Customs.....	$179,016,652
Internal revenue.....	$90,226,143
Total.....	$269,242,795

In 1878 the taxes were:

Customs.....	$130,170,080
Internal revenue.....	$109,611,621
Total.....	$239,781,701

Since 1866 taxation has been reduced to the extent of $27,521,160 per annum. One must stop to think in order to realize the immensity of these amounts.

Such financial achievements as these are unmatched in the history of the world. They are absolutely unprecedented. In sixty-three years the debt of England has not been reduced to any extent in the last century this nation in thirteen years. The example of France is often quoted, but it is remarkable only for the facility with which great national loans have been effected. The war between France and Germany closed in January, 1871, and by the terms of the treaty an indemnity of $1,000,000,000 was to be paid Germany within four years. The whole amount was raised by the national loans of 1871 and 1872. In 1875 the national debt amounted to $8,750,000,000. Since then it has increased to $1,415,700,000, and the interest account has also been increased. Thus, while the United States is reducing her debt and interest, France is increasing hers.

Why are not the securities of the United States the most valuable in the world? If England can fund her debt at three per cent, why cannot the United States? Simply because of the constant assaults upon the public credit by the Democratic party. It started the movement for the payment of the interest on the debt in greenbacks. Every Democrat in Congress voted against the Resumption act, and that party has ceaselessly agitated for its repeal. It gave the chief strength to the silver movement, now the only obstruction to the refunding of the debt. It was a Democratic House that gave Bland a round of applause when he said: "If we cannot get free coinage of silver, I am in favor of issuing paper money enough to stuff down the bondholders until they are sick." Aberrations of principle and divisions of sentiment were brought about in the Republican ranks by the popular agitators induced by the ceaseless demagoguery of the Democratic leaders. In spite of all opposition and embarrassments, the Republican party has accomplished the splendid feat we have noted. Since the first of the year six per cent bonds to the amount of $4,000,000 have been called in, four per cent bonds having been substituted for them, with a saving of $800,000 interest per annum. And still the work goes on. Has any party in any land ever had a better record on its confidence? This is the issue on which the Republican party will carry the next election. The Southern issue is dead; the financial issue is living. The practical and sagacious people of this country will not transfer their interests from the control of the party that has done these things to the hands of the party that has labored to prevent their doing.—Balto. American.

Adjusting the Republican Troubles.

The committee appointed at the Raine's Hall Republican meeting to wait upon Mr. R. Stockett Mathews, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, to request him to call an early meeting of that body, with a view of calling a state convention, proposes to perform that duty as soon as it is officially advised as to how far its obligations extend in the matter. At the Raine's Hall meeting on Wednesday, each of the two resolutions passed required the appointment of a committee of five. One of the resolutions required a committee to wait on the chairman of the State Central Committee and also other action for reorganization, and another resolution provided for a committee to present rules for the government of the Republican party, and to submit them to the next convention. Only one committee was appointed by Mr. McCullough, the President of the meeting, and it is not known under which resolution the committee was appointed, or whether it was the intention of the chairman that the committee should attend to the duties provided under both resolutions. In order to satisfy himself upon this point, Mr. Henry Stockbridge, chairman of the committee, has written to Mr. McCullough asking for information on this point, and no action will be taken by the committee until his reply is received. Mr. Stockbridge does not anticipate the slightest difficulty in arriving at a satisfactory conclusion on the matter at issue, and thinks that one interview will settle it. He states that Mr. Mathews had received him and several other members of the committee, which initiated the movement, very courteously and with a disposition to make an agreeable settlement. Mr. Stockbridge says that in reality the differences between Mr. Mathews and the committee are very slight indeed, and they are only differences of opinion as to the time for calling the convention, and there is no reason why an amicable adjustment should not be reached.—Balto. American.

Hamilton Stock Improving.

It would be a singular thing if the anxiety of the Ring to hold office should force its members to support the nomination of Hamilton for Governor, but such seems probable at present. Keating, the Comptroller—wants a re-nomination, possibly ambitious of serving the State for as many years as his predecessor Woolford. But the candidate for Governor cannot be taken, to the satisfaction of the people, from the same shore with the Comptroller, hence ex-Governor Thomas must step aside, and the chances are now that the Ring will be obliged to support Hamilton in order to secure Keating. It is interesting to see how the hope of spoils brings the belligerent constituents of the Democratic party together, causing them to bury the hatchet, provided in so doing they can make their title to the Treasury more certain. For this reason they recognized the leadership of Tom Swann, and for this reason, even the Ring will swear fealty to Hamilton.—Frederick Examiner.

DIPHTHERIA.—Taking for its text the death of the Princess Alice of Hesse, the London Times comments editorially on the prevalence of diphtheria in England. Although not a new form of disease, for it has existed in many countries from very ancient times, it did not attract attention in England until about thirty years ago. In the winter of 1838-9 it became very prevalent, and in those two years it swept off 20,000 people. In 1860 the number of deaths declined to about 5,000. In 1873 there were 2,581 deaths; in 1874, 3,569; in 1875, 3,236; and in 1876, 3,010, thus showing a yearly average of 3,000 deaths from a disease concerning the propagation and prevention of which it is apparent that the English practitioners are still densely ignorant. Thus far it seems to have baffled the efforts of medical science to find a specific remedy for it. We fear also that American practitioners are scarcely more successful. The theory in England appears to be that there is a similarity between diphtheria and some forms of scarlet fever, and according to the Chicago Times the late Dr. Beebe, of that city, who made a special microscopic study of diphtheria, came to the conclusion "that the characteristic symptoms of scarlet fever and diphtheria were frequently intermingled, but that they were of a septic character." That is to say, that they were promotive of putrefaction. Acting on this belief, he sought for an antiseptic agent as the most appropriate remedy. The antiseptic he finally used in his practice, and it is said very successfully, was the sulpho-carbide of soda. We do not, of course, know if the same agent has been used by other physicians in this disease, or, if so, whether they had the same success with it that is attributed to its administration by Dr. Beebe. But that the number of cases of diphtheria has greatly increased in this country of late, that many of them are fatal, and that the disease is so communicable by contact with the person of the patient, under certain conditions of susceptibility, are facts that are everywhere acknowledged. That physician, therefore, will be a benefactor to his kind who shall be the first to demonstrate to his professional brethren a mode of treatment as reasonably certain in its fortunate results as that which is authoritatively laid down as the most proper to pursue in ordinary cases of disease.—Balto. Sun.

The Nevada legislature has re-elected Senator Jones for six years from the 4th of March next.

TELEGRAPHIC.

WASHINGTON, January 12.—The Potter Committee has disgusted some of its own party friends by its course yesterday, in refusing to consider the sworn charges against one of its own members and one of its own officers, when the principal witness was present, and then turning to the state subject of irregularities in the electoral certificates from the State of Louisiana. The publication of St. Martin's affidavit (the purport of which was given in these despatches several days ago), in spite of attempts of Democrats to prevent it, will now compel Mr. Stenger to notice the matter and cause the examination of St. Martin. The Democrats are already assailing St. Martin's character vigorously, and it is really painful to be informed of the unenviable retrospect now charged against this person by his late associates. It seems almost incredible that St. Martin was an officer of the committee only a few months ago, and that his unsavory antecedents were only discovered by his party friends after he made the ugly affidavit in question. In justice to Mr. Gibson and Colonel Carter, it may be stated that both deny St. Martin's allegations against them, and assert that they can readily disprove the charges.

During the coming week, perhaps to-morrow, the Republicans in the Senate will offer resolutions designed to force the Democrats to a vote upon an expression of hard money views. The resolution will be of a character to either split the Democratic vote, or place the party in a very embarrassing position for Eastern Democrats to occupy. Senator Eaton, a few days since, after listening to Voorhees' greenback speech, said that, in his opinion, the Democrats had reached the fork of the road, and if Voorhees' way was that of the Democrat, he, for one, would take the other road.

CONDITION OF THE AMERICAN IRON TRADE.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—A report of the condition of the American iron trade for the past year has just been completed by James M. Swanwick, secretary of the American Iron and Steel Association. It states that the production of pig iron in the United States in 1877 was 2,314,585 tons, and in 1878 2,382,000 tons. Pennsylvania shows an increase of over 100,000 tons, while Ohio shows a decrease of over 30,000 tons. In 1878 Pennsylvania made more than 50 per cent. of the total production of pig iron in the United States. At the close of 1877 there were in the United States 716 blast furnaces, of which 270 were in blast and 446 were out of blast. At the close of 1877 there were 700 furnaces, of which 260 were in blast and 440 were out of blast. These figures, taken in connection with those of production above given, indicate an increased average production of the active furnaces in 1878 over the year 1877. The new year opens with the promise of a still more active and more prosperous business for our iron and steel manufacturers than the old year gave to them. Business is in fewer hands, and home competition cannot be so desperate as it has been. Foreign competition for the present is not to be dreaded. Prices, it is hoped, are at last at the lowest point to which they can possibly fall, while the unmistakable and undeniable revival of general prosperity throughout the country gives every assurance of the continuance of the increased demand for iron and steel which characterized the old year.

THE REPUBLICAN SENATORIAL CAUCUS.

WASHINGTON, January 11.—The caucus of Republican senators to-day was called by Senator Edmunds to take action on the order of business, and a committee on the subject was appointed to report at a future meeting. There was an interchange of views on political questions and as to what would best advance the interests of the Republican party. The resumption of specie payments was a general matter of congratulation and was claimed as a measure originating with and carried out by that party, and which was successful, notwithstanding the persistent efforts of the Democrats to defeat it. The subject of protecting all citizens, particularly those of the South, in their rights under the Constitution, was earnestly discussed, all agreeing that the enforcement of the laws for this purpose would materially strengthen the party, which has always advocated the doctrine of equal rights.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Dr. W. H. Smith returned to Hancock, Md., on Friday last.

—Why doesn't some one invent something to keep the tip of the nose warm?

—The Garrett Literary Society will meet in Legge's Hall this (Saturday) evening at 7 o'clock.

—Coasting on the side walks is a nuisance, but of a kind that must be tolerated on the children's account.

—The January apportionment of the State School fund for Garrett county is $1,807.67.

—If love is blind, as they say it is, how is it that they always turn down the light so low that nobody else can see?

—Dr. Bartlett, School Examiner, started from Oakland Tuesday morning, for the purpose of visiting the schools in the county.

—Monday night W. H. Tower, Esq., presented Sheaflet Lodge, No. 122, I. O. O. F., with a large and handsome copy of the Bible.

—Notice the advertisement in another column of a farm for rent. A rare chance to go into the grazing business on a small capital.

—Died—On Dec. 26th, 1878, John Matthew, only son of Dennis and Mary Ryan, of Star District, Utah, aged 1 year and 1 month. The remains were brought here and interred in the Catholic cemetery on Tuesday.

—Any person doubting the efficacy of Keller's Bunion Liniment is respectfully referred to Mr. Robert E. Woods, one of the proprietors of Wood's Baltimore City Directory, who was a great sufferer from Rheumatism. Three applications cured him.

—The committee on manufactures of the Cumberland city council has sent a gentleman to Lynn, Mass., to interview an organized company of shoemakers, one hundred in number, who propose going South in search of a location for a cooperative shoe factory. The gentleman alluded to is delegated to lay before these operatives the advantages of Cumberland as a manufacturing point, with a view of getting them to settle there. He will also visit other cities in the same interest.

—It was rumored here on Saturday last that Mr. George Charles was coming back to reside among us. Mr. Charles was a most estimable citizen when here and we deplored his departure. Certainly we would give him the warmest grip of our hand if he returns, and should think the city a gain. Mr. Charles has held an important position of honor and trust in this city, and because he is an old journalist, what more could be said in his praise.—Cham. Times.

—On Sunday morning Jan. 19th, at 10 o'clock, there will be preaching at the U. chapel, and at Clear Spring at 3 P. M., and on Sunday morning, Jan. 26th, at 10 o'clock, at Deep Creek, North Glade at 3 P. M., and at Swanton at night. On Sunday, Feb. 2d, at Mt Zion at 10 o'clock, A. M., Chestnut Grove at 3 P. M., and at Tidwell's school house in the evening. Rev. Mr. Rodrick will preach at all of these appointments, and as he is needy, he desires that the brethren come prepared for financial relief.

Church Services—Sunday.

Memorial Church.—Preaching on Sunday, at 6:45 P. M., by Rev. J. E. Moffat, of Cumberland, Md.

Valuable Farm for Sale.

By reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that Mr. P. Hamill offers at private sale a valuable tract of land near Oakland, and which is in every respect a very desirable piece of property. The advantages of the place are fully set forth in the advertisement. Those wishing to invest in real estate have now a rare chance to do so.

Death of an Aged Citizen.

Died at the residence of his son, near Oakland, Md., January 13th, 1879, Samuel Harned, aged 82 years. This aged man, though known to but few persons in this vicinity, will be remembered by many in the northern part of this county. He lived most of his lifetime in a village bearing his own name (Harnedville) in the southern part of Somerset county, Pa. He was a pushing, energetic farmer, in connection with which he and his sons were for years engaged in the mercantile business. About the time the B. & O. R. R. was being made he bought a tract of land near Deer Park, (the same being now owned by Mr. John Riley.) At a later date he sold his farm and moved to the west. Here his wife, who was an estimable woman, died. Her death he seemed to feel very much. After this he lived with his children, mostly with his son John, where he died. For the past few years he has been quite a sufferer, arising partly from an accident which resulted in the mashing of one of his limbs.

Mr. Harned has been a member of the M. E. Church for many years, and was mainly instrumental in erecting a house of worship on the old homestead, which is still used. For evenness of temper, gentleness of manner and kindness to others, he will long be remembered by those who knew him. His mind though somewhat impaired during the past two years, was perfectly clear during the last hours of his life. His death was as his life, calm and peaceful.

His remains were interred in the Odd-Fellows cemetery, at Oakland, Tuesday.

Meeting of County Commissioners.

In addition to those published last week, the following Supervisors' accounts were filed and approved:

Jas. P. Wiley, Henry Lancaster, Israel Garlitz, Wm. R. Barthouse, George L. Layman, Jacob Guagey, Jacob Maust, Otho Bernard, Abraham Turney, Gideon Ferguson, J. H. Schlossagle, Chas. A. Friend, Howard Stuck, Jas. Paul, Rudolph Beckman, Alfred Kelly, Jno. Weber, Samuel Teets, E. Droege, Johnson White.

The following Road Supervisors were appointed:

DISTRICT NO. 1.

E. Kitzmiller, road from Wilson's store to Kitzmiller's; also new road opened by him, $10.

Daniel Wilson, road from Kitzmiller's to East Land run, $30.

M. G. Harvey, roads worked by Wm. Sharpless last year, $50.

John A. Junkins, road leading from the Back farm to Ryan's Glade road, $20.

Robert Head, road leading from Sandy Flat to Deer Park, $40.

Samuel W. Friend, road leading from Wilson's store to Burnt school house, $85.

Silas Walters, road from dist. No. 3, $45.

John H. Miller, road from Deer Park to Ryan's Glade road, and from Wilson's store to road from Deer Park to Ryan's Glade road, $25.

John Riley, old county road leading from road given to Samuel W. Friend, to Broad Ford, $20.

Wm. H. Chaderton, road leading from road given to John Riley, through D or Park to Broad Ford, $25.

Henry Shank, road leading from top of Sawmill hill to Glen Dale Church, $75.

J. Fletcher, Friend, road from Sawmill hill to Altamont road, $20.

R. Steadings, road from where it turns off of Sawmill road, near Mrs. Braker's, to Altamont road at John Edmonds', $15.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Johns Wess, Factory road to Morgantown road, and all roads lying east of Factory road, including the Poland road; $100.

Wm. Boyer, all roads north of Morgantown road and east of Yough river to Factory, including road leading from mouth of Collins' run, via Boyer's, to Pennsylvania line; also road from Steelmill's mill to Daniel Bousler's, $100.

Henry Lancaster, Morgantown road from Hoshen's run to Selbyport, and River road to district line, $80.

Lott Frazee, road from State line near Jockey Hollow, via Frazee's ridge, thence to Baptist Church and Ulysses Frazee's, to Yough river, $35.

Samuel Lowdermilk, River road from Selbyport north to road near Yough bridge; also road from Buff also bridge, via John J. Frazee's and Samuel Lowdermilk's, to Asher's Glade road, $70.

W. A. Coddington, Furnace road to Accident road, $40.

Jefferson Frazee, road from Kimmell Frazee's to Asher's Glade road; also road to Rush's water trough, $35.

Wm. R. Barthouse, Asher's Glade road to State line; also road to Sand Spring, and road to West Virginia line, $35.

Lewis Vansickle, road from east end of Friendsville bridge, via S. K. Hook's, to J. E. Friend's, on W. Va. line, $55.

Samuel Fortner, road from J. E. Friend's to White Rock; also road from Keeler's Glade road, back to intersect White Rock road, $35.

Asa Savage, all roads south of Morgantown road and north of Friendsville and Keeler Glade road, $25.

J. W. Frantz, all roads worked by Noah Humber son, $90.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Thos. B. Wiley, road from Gill man's shoeshop to district line near Shrock's, &c., $10.

Peter Stark, all roads formerly worked by Charles Warnick, $80.

Lewis Pope, all roads formerly worked by Israel Garlitz, $65.

W. H. Swanger, all roads formerly worked by Chas. N. Durst, $210.

James E. Guagey, all roads formerly worked by Aaron Beachy, and to Knosinger bridge, $150.

Philip Durst, all roads formerly worked by Jacob Guagey, $130.

Jas. P. Wiley, same roads as worked last year by Jas. Wiley, of H., $110.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Gillead Miller, same roads as last year, $93.

Edward Bernard, same road as last year, $70.

Otho Bernard, same roads as last year, $93.

Henry M. Broadwater, Grantsville and Barton road; also Mountain Ridge road, $85.

Geo. L. Michaels, all roads in district north of Savage river except those worked by Ulram Duckworth and Henry M. Broadwater, and except those formerly in district No. 16, $135; also $50 additional on road from Bloomington to Knight's water trough.

Ulram Duckworth, same roads as last year, $63.

Andrew Blocher, the Loaning road, the Barton road and the road from Gregg's grist mill to Simon Greene's, $110.

—Cline, roads from Frankville up the Savage river, $60.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Abraham Turney, same roads as last year, $50.

James Paul, Morgantown road from Geo. Hileman's to district line; also road from Samuel Hileman's to Shrock farm, $40.

Henry S. H. Sagle, same roads as last year, $40.

Jacob Mosser, roads worked last year by Josiah Beachy, $5.

Gideon Ferguson, same roads as last year, $90.

Wm. Englehart, all roads south of Bear creek, including road from Boyer's farm to Goodrich's, $95.

Alex. Fresh, same roads as last year, $95.

Joseph Lint, Legislature road from district line of No. 2 to district line of No. 5, $90.

Daniel Beachy, Morgantown road to district line, thence to National road, $70.

Solomon Turney, all other roads north of Morgantown road, $90.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Elijah Friend, road from river bridge to W. Va. line; also road from White Rock run to the Cranesville road near the river bridge; also from White Rock, via McNeur's farm to east end of Cranes' lane, $58.

John W. Johnson, all other roads except those worked by Elijah Friend on west side of river, $35.

Wesley Savage, road from Sang Run to south end of Deep Creek bridge, $62.

Philip Lewis, road from river bridge to Johnston, $10.

Wm. Casteel, road from Joseph Frantz's to bridge at Sell's mill, $45.

Thaddeus Gloydfrey, road from Specter's school house to Glen Dale Church, $40.

Nimrod Gloydfrey, road from Oak land road to district line near Shrock's, and road from top of mound to Bear Creek, $12.

Sauiel Specht, road from Johnston to McHenry; also road from McHenry, via R. Speicher's, to district line of No. 7, $71.

John Pysell, road from McHenry, via Pysell's, to Johnston, $37.

Gov. E. Bishop, road from Andrew Scholtz's, via Casteel's farm to Legislature road, $30.

Lewis Bittelz, road from Bear Creek to Grantsville road near Shrock's, $40.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Adam Sell, road from Burnt school house to north end of Deep Creek bridge at Sell's mill, $70.

Nelson Irvin, road from Sand Flat to Casteel farm, $30.

Joseph Martin, road from Oakland to top of mountain, via Jos. King's, $60.

Johnson White, road from Oak land to top of mountain, via Wondery's, $25.

Nathan Casteel, same roads as last year, $40.

W. M. Coddington, Sang Run road from Oakland to Deep Cr's, $90.

E. D. Keimer, roads worked by Stephen Browning last year, $25.

G. W. DeKawder, road from Oak land to Herrington creek, the ending bridge, $40.

Jos. B. Davis, Hutton's Switch road to W. Va. line, $15.

Thos. Browning, road from Herrington Creek to West Va. line; also road from Hutton's Switch road to Grantsville road, $30.

J. T. Bowers, West Union road from Oakland to West Union No. 8; also road from Lewis Thompson's to Wm. Lower's, and West Union road to district line of No. 8, $85.

Chas. Sweeney, Hoopoe road from Oakland to Sand Flat, $70.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

Jehu Paugh, road leading to Kitzmiller's and Ryan's Glade road, $50.

J. McClure Mason, road from Swan house to top of mountain at pike, $85.

Hugh Cooper, the road opened by him last year, $25.

Isaac W. Abernathy, Northwest corner pike from North Branch river to

W. Va. line, and all roads south of pike, $200.

Joseph Irons, all other roads in district, $190.

DISTRICT NO. 9.

Michael Durst, same roads as last year, $25.

Henry Blocher, roads south of National road in dist. No. 9, $60.

John Wilhelm, road from Pennsylvania line to National road west of Thos. Johnson's, $60.

Jasper Guard filed list of discounts allowed on taxes. Approved by Board.

S. W. Friend filed bond as Road Supervisor, which was approved.

W. H. Hagans elected clerk for present year and filed bond in the penalty of $1,000, which was approved by Board.

The following are the prices adopted by the Board for Supervisors, &c., for the present year.

Supervisors, . . . $1.40 per day.

laborers, . . . 1.00 per day.

2 horse team & driver, 2.50 per day.

Horse and Cart . . . 1.50 per day.

Isaac Larue appointed Constable in District No. 9.

Robert Head, L. H. Schofield and John Friend, of N., appointed Examiners on road in district No. 1, from Joseph King's to —.

OAKLAND, Jan. 16th, 1879.

EDITOR OF THE REPUBLICAN:

Will you be kind enough to insert a brief statement of facts for me in reply to the charges of H. P. Tasker in his paper of last week? In his notice to Administrators, &c., he advises them to take the advertisements in his paper themselves, as I positively refused to give him Mr. O'Brien's notice. What I did say was this, (and I am sure Mr. O'Brien will corroborate me.) As I was not on very good terms with Tasker, I did not care to carry the notice to him, and would prefer he would tell him to send to the editor and get it on Tuesday, as I would have it ready on that day; and that he had a perfect right to select the paper. In regard to the notice of Samuel Hoff and others, (I simply pronounce false from beginning to end. I gave the notice as I understood it from Mr. Hoff, and in a conversation with that gentleman afterwards, I think he was satisfied as to how the mistake occurred. As I was tired to try his paper at that time, 1875, it is not likely that I took it to a paper I was not patronizing unless ordered to do so. But as I am only responsible to Mr. Hoff if matters little to me whether it suits Tasker or not. He says he will hold me responsible under the law. Well let him do so. That seems to be a standing threat with him, such notices having appeared in his paper before.

In conclusion I will say that hereafter I positively refuse to carry any notice of any kind to him, and will continue to patronize whatever paper I desire, or accommodate my friends of either of the other papers. If this is sufficient cause for litigation, he had better enter suit at once, and I will endeavor to vindicate myself and show him up in his true character. Until then I shall take no further notice of his contemptible stunts, but warn him to be careful what he writes.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
WM. L. RAWLINGS.

Balky Horses.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals puts forth the following rules for the treatment of balky horses, which will bear reproduction:

1. Pat the horse upon the neck; examine the harness carefully, first on one side and then on the other, speaking encouragingly while doing so; then jump into the wagon and give the word go; generally he will obey.

2. A teamster in Maine says he can start the worst balky horse by taking him out of the shafts and making him go around in a circle until he is giddy. If the first dance of this sort doesn't cure him the second will.

3. To cure a balky horse, simply place your hand over the horse's nose and shut off his wind until he wants to go, and then let him go.

4. The brain of the horse seems to entertain but one idea at a time; therefore continued whipping only confirms his stubborn resolve, if you can by any means give him a new subject to think of you will generally have no trouble in starting him.

A simple remedy is to take a couple of turns of stout twine around the fore leg, just below the knee, light enough for the horse to feel, and tie in a bowknot. At the first check he will go dancing off, and after going a short distance you can get out and remove the string to prevent injury to the tendon in your farther drive.

5. Take the tail of the horse between the hind legs, and tie it by a cord to the saddle girth.

What used to be regarded and denominated invariably as the vice of intemperance is now held in many and the worst cases, to be dispendia, a mad, irresistible craving for alcoholic stimulants. In a large number of instances, it is unquestionably a species of moral insanity; it is often associated with other forms of mental derangement, and is very apt, in connection with one or more of these forms, to be hereditary, even through several generations. While there is usually a broad and palpable difference between the vice and the mania, the former may frequently become the latter, especially in persons of a nervous-sanguine temperament, women being more liable to the mania than men. The alcoholic principle perverts the action, if not the nutrition, of cerebral matter, and the repeated disturbance of the mental functions by fits of intoxication, the loose and irregular habits superinduced, the excitation of remorse and self disgust, with desperate and continued efforts to drive out the demon, and thought by increased drinking, all combine to cause dispendia. The victim of it loses entire command over his will; has no power to withstand the appetite for alcohol, and is transformed into an abject slave of his morbid thirst. He deteriorates mentally and morally with physical indulgence, and, ere long, becomes a wreck of everything useful and estimable. In such condition he requires confinement or restraint before there can be any hope of his cure. This view is now taken by advanced philanthropists and reformers; hence inebriate asylums are continually springing up in different parts of the country. Such asylums are beginning to be thought as useful as asylums for other kinds of insanity; and it will not be many years before they shall be established in every community. We have commenced to see that vices and crimes arise quite as much from mental disorder as from moral defects; that all sorts of evil, are to a certain extent, the result of dementia, and should be so treated. We marvel now at the ignorance that could regard insanity as a vice for which the sufferer was responsible. In due season we shall be able, let us hope, to detect vicious or diseased tendencies in man, and, by skillful, sympathetic treatment, direct them to beneficial ends, and to solve in a measure, the stubborn problem of evil.

Isaac Larue appointed Constable in District No. 9.

Robert Head, L. H. Schofield and John Friend, of N., appointed Examiners on road in district No. 1, from Joseph King's to —.

OAKLAND, Jan. 16th, 1879.

EDITOR OF THE REPUBLICAN:

Will you be kind enough to insert a brief statement of facts for me in reply to the charges of H. P. Tasker in his paper of last week? In his notice to Administrators, &c., he advises them to take the advertisements in his paper themselves, as I positively refused to give him Mr. O'Brien's notice. What I did say was this, (and I am sure Mr. O'Brien will corroborate me.) As I was not on very good terms with Tasker, I did not care to carry the notice to him, and would prefer he would tell him to send to the editor and get it on Tuesday, as I would have it ready on that day; and that he had a perfect right to select the paper. In regard to the notice of Samuel Hoff and others, (I simply pronounce false from beginning to end. I gave the notice as I understood it from Mr. Hoff, and in a conversation with that gentleman afterwards, I think he was satisfied as to how the mistake occurred. As I was tired to try his paper at that time, 1875, it is not likely that I took it to a paper I was not patronizing unless ordered to do so. But as I am only responsible to Mr. Hoff if matters little to me whether it suits Tasker or not. He says he will hold me responsible under the law. Well let him do so. That seems to be a standing threat with him, such notices having appeared in his paper before.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

JOHN RICHARDSON,
Manufacturer of and Dealer in
WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS.
—GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY.
Also an Improved Hand Sown Sower.
Jail-y Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 16th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their offices in Oakland,

On Monday, Feb. 10th, 1879,
at which time Road Supervisors' bonds will be approved, and all other business transacted as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS,
Clerk.

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE
GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 15, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will receive Sealed Proposals for the building of a Bridge across Yough River, in District No. 2, known as the Fike Bridge, between Guard's and Selbyport.

Said bridge to be built according to the following plan and specifications: To be built of stone or masonry, but raised one foot higher; length 200 feet; width of span 100 feet; stone pier in center, said bridge built on the same plan as the Friendsville bridge, above at above bridge. To be as wide as present abutments will allow, and covered with good pine shingles.

Said bridge to be completed on or before the first day of July next, amount to be levied at annual levy of 1879.

The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order County Commissioners.

W. H. HAGANS,
Clerk.

Estate of George Meese, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of GEORGE MESE, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

AARON WILHELM, Administrator.

Estate of Henry Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER,
Administratrix.

Estate of Henry Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER,
Administratrix.

Estate of Henry Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER,
Administratrix.

Estate of Henry Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER,
Administratrix.

Estate of Henry Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of July, 1879. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 14th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER,
Administratrix.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

PRIVATE SALE

OF A

MOST VALUABLE

AND HIGHLY

IMPROVED FARM!

In Garrett County.

The undersigned offers for sale the

"Promised Land" Farm,

formerly owned by Col. James M. Schley, containing two hundred and seventy four acres.

This property is one mile from Hutton's Switch and Post Office, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and four miles from Oakland, and connected therewith by a good county road. The property is

Elegantly Improved,

Two-thirds in cultivation, Two sets of farm buildings, good houses on each, with barns, sheds and out buildings of every kind and noted therewith. The whole enclosed with a new and substantial fence, and a large portion of the land has been recently tilled. Never falling springs of water in every field.

Possession given 1st of April next.

For terms, &c., address or apply to the undersigned at Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

P. HAMILL,
Real Estate Agent.

A Farm for Rent.

The farm known as the William Schley place, five miles from Oakland, containing 700 Acres of Land,

all included, is now offered for rent. There are on this place one large dwelling, and two tenant houses, a good barn, stable and sheds. The land is well adapted to grazing, and can be rented for one year, with the privilege of live.

For particulars and terms address or apply to

JOHN M. DAVIS,
Oakland, Md.

ORDER NISI.

In the Orphans' Court for Garrett county.

In the matter of the sale of the Real Estate of Thomas Wilson, deceased.

Ordered, this 10th day of January, 1879, by the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, that the sale of the Real Estate of Thomas Wilson, deceased, be postponed until the 1st day of February, 1879, at which time the said Real Estate shall be sold, and the proceeds thereof be paid to the said Thomas Wilson, late of said county, deceased, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 10th day of February, 1879. Provided a copy of this order be inserted in some newspaper printed and published in the town of Oakland once in each of three successive weeks before the 10th day of February, 1879.

The report shall state the amount of sales to be made.

JOSEPH DEWITT, C. J. O. C.
ANDREW J. MICHAEL, J. O. C.
WILLIAM HARVEY, J. O. C.

True Copy—Test—WM. L. RAWLINGS, Register.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Baptists in Iowa report a moderate revival interest under regular pastors, but only a company of school girls of ordinary intelligence. There was no suggestion of prison garb. They all wore neat calico dresses and a neat little white collar. Some had their hair braided, some wore it short, but everyone showed that cultivation of neatness of person, which is one of the most refining influences which can be brought to bear upon and cherish the self-respect necessary to virtuous womanhood. In one corner sat the fifty or sixty little girls, all dressed in neatly made calico dresses, and looking so interesting and happy that any mother's heart would go out to them in affection. They listened to several short addresses, joined in singing (and, by the way, they sang beautifully, led by a young lady who, having passed her term of imprisonment of four years without ever having once been reprimanded, is free, and is employed as an officer of the institution), and preserved the most perfect order.

It was a sight never to be forgotten. I could have listened all day to Mrs. Hendricks and Mrs. Smith as they related incidents of their work. Of the inmates received 82 percent, have been permanently reformed. Only think of it! and it is all the work of women.

Men were skeptical when the idea was proposed. They declared that hardened criminals who were then in the various jails and prisons. When this institution was opened, a number of the most hardened and abandoned women were brought there, and the inmates were ordered their chains off, and she controls them all with pure strength of moral force. It is truly wonderful. Never have I seen anything that so inspired me with hope that fallen humanity may be reclaimed as this sight. Of the workings of the institution it tells the whole of it in a few lines. The only objection that has ever been urged to it is that the inmates are made too comfortable. But then, they are all good, and they are all reformed. They are the products of education; they are compelled to lead lives of purity and order, and if any one can show that they would be morally improved by making them physically uncomfortable, or branding them with a prison costume, or keeping them in manacles and handcuffs when they can be governed without, on him let the burden of proof fall. I learned with regret, but not with surprise, that the inmates may be branded with a prison costume, or keeping them in manacles and handcuffs when they can be governed without, on him let the burden of proof fall.

—The Boston Young Men's Christian Union is happy over a bequest of $80,000 from the late Joseph B. Eaton, conditional only upon the raising of whatever additional sum is necessary to clear the institution from debt. As this will be but about $7,000, the whole debt is thus wiped out.

—The following named clergymen of the Church of England have embraced Catholicism within a comparatively brief period: Rev. Joseph Atkinson, of the Order of Charity; Rev. E. W. Atwood, of St. Michael's Church, Shore-ditch; Rev. C. Brodie, of St. Stephen's, Kensington; Rev. George Whitefield Benjamin, D. D., Rev. Frances Bayly, Rev. W. L. Burrows, of St. Peter's, Liverpool, and Rev. A. J. D. Bradley, of St. Martin's Liverpool.

—When Mr. Moody was in Dublin, in 1874, he held a Christian Convention, similar to those which he has held in many of our cities. Each succeeding year its anniversary has been observed by a Convention of like character and purpose. The fifth was held last month in the new Christian Union Building, and lasted several days; about five hundred ministers of all denominations were present, and thousands attended the meetings.

—The chief Methodist school of theology in the Northwest, the Garrett Institute at Evanston, Ill., will graduate its first lady student the coming spring, Miss Mary A. Phillips, of Olney, Ill.; and the professors are understood to say she is the first lady applicant in the country for a degree in Methodist theology. When she enters the school, the professors looked with disfavor upon her presence, but a year's acquaintance and reflection have converted them. She is the daughter of a clergyman, the peer of the best man in her class, and intends to do Gospel public work.

—A speaker at the recent meeting of the Detroit teachers said that children should be taught grammar when they are even too young to read, but that the teaching of technical grammar should be reserved until the last year at the High School. He held that no one ever changed from a bad speaker to a good one by correcting his sayings by the rules of grammar. It is constant practice that causes correctness.

There is a great deal of truth in this; who that has ever attended a country school but remembers how the talk of the pupils, in spite of ceaseless recitations in grammar, remained crammed with blunders?

A Model Reformatory.

This afternoon by invitation of Mrs. Gov. Hendricks, I accompanied her to visit the most wonderful institution in the world. It is the Woman's Prison and Reformatory for girls. It has the honor of being the first one of the kind in the world. There is another now at Sherborne, Mass., but it has only been in operation two years, while this has been in operation seven years, and the Sherborne prison was modeled after this. This institution receives all the convicted criminals of the State who are girls and women.

All incorrigible girls are also sent here, where they are received and taught. Among the inmates are nearly fifty little girls under twelve years of age who had already entered upon a life of crime. As the noble-looking Quakeress, Sarah Smith, who, with the assistance of a corps of eight or nine women, manages this whole institution, ascended with me the stairs to the chapel, she said: "Remember these girls and women are from the very same and off-spring of Indiana." As I looked upon them I involuntarily exclaimed, "Can it be possible?" About 200 girls and women were before me. Their faces were so clean and their hair so smooth that they fairly shone. Their countenances beamed with interest, and I never for one moment would have imagined them to be criminals, but only a company of school girls of ordinary intelligence. There was no suggestion of prison garb. They all wore neat calico dresses and a neat little white collar. Some had their hair braided, some wore it short, but everyone showed that cultivation of neatness of person, which is one of the most refining influences which can be brought to bear upon and cherish the self-respect necessary to virtuous womanhood. In one corner sat the fifty or sixty little girls, all dressed in neatly made calico dresses, and looking so interesting and happy that any mother's heart would go out to them in affection. They listened to several short addresses, joined in singing (and, by the way, they sang beautifully, led by a young lady who, having passed her term of imprisonment of four years without ever having once been reprimanded, is free, and is employed as an officer of the institution), and preserved the most perfect order.

It was a sight never to be forgotten. I could have listened all day to Mrs. Hendricks and Mrs. Smith as they related incidents of their work. Of the inmates received 82 percent, have been permanently reformed. Only think of it! and it is all the work of women.

Men were skeptical when the idea was proposed. They declared that hardened criminals who were then in the various jails and prisons. When this institution was opened, a number of the most hardened and abandoned women were brought there, and the inmates were ordered their chains off, and she controls them all with pure strength of moral force. It is truly wonderful. Never have I seen anything that so inspired me with hope that fallen humanity may be reclaimed as this sight. Of the workings of the institution it tells the whole of it in a few lines. The only objection that has ever been urged to it is that the inmates are made too comfortable. But then, they are all good, and they are all reformed. They are the products of education; they are compelled to lead lives of purity and order, and if any one can show that they would be morally improved by making them physically uncomfortable, or branding them with a prison costume, or keeping them in manacles and handcuffs when they can be governed without, on him let the burden of proof fall. I learned with regret, but not with surprise, that the inmates may be branded with a prison costume, or keeping them in manacles and handcuffs when they can be governed without, on him let the burden of proof fall.

—The Boston Young Men's Christian Union is happy over a bequest of $80,000 from the late Joseph B. Eaton, conditional only upon the raising of whatever additional sum is necessary to clear the institution from debt. As this will be but about $7,000, the whole debt is thus wiped out.

—The following named clergymen of the Church of England have embraced Catholicism within a comparatively brief period: Rev. Joseph Atkinson, of the Order of Charity; Rev. E. W. Atwood, of St. Michael's Church, Shore-ditch; Rev. C. Brodie, of St. Stephen's, Kensington; Rev. George Whitefield Benjamin, D. D., Rev. Frances Bayly, Rev. W. L. Burrows, of St. Peter's, Liverpool, and Rev. A. J. D. Bradley, of St. Martin's Liverpool.

—When Mr. Moody was in Dublin, in 1874, he held a Christian Convention, similar to those which he has held in many of our cities. Each succeeding year its anniversary has been observed by a Convention of like character and purpose. The fifth was held last month in the new Christian Union Building, and lasted several days; about five hundred ministers of all denominations were present, and thousands attended the meetings.

—The chief Methodist school of theology in the Northwest, the Garrett Institute at Evanston, Ill., will graduate its first lady student the coming spring, Miss Mary A. Phillips, of Olney, Ill.; and the professors are understood to say she is the first lady applicant in the country for a degree in Methodist theology. When she enters the school, the professors looked with disfavor upon her presence, but a year's acquaintance and reflection have converted them. She is the daughter of a clergyman, the peer of the best man in her class, and intends to do Gospel public work.

—A speaker at the recent meeting of the Detroit teachers said that children should be taught grammar when they are even too young to read, but that the teaching of technical grammar should be reserved until the last year at the High School. He held that no one ever changed from a bad speaker to a good one by correcting his sayings by the rules of grammar. It is constant practice that causes correctness.

There is a great deal of truth in this; who that has ever attended a country school but remembers how the talk of the pupils, in spite of ceaseless recitations in grammar, remained crammed with blunders?

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—To Fricassee Eggs.—Take hard-boiled eggs and roll them in brown crumbs seasoned with salt and pepper and nutmeg, and try them a delicate brown in butter.

—Cocoanut Candy.—Grate the meat of a cocoanut, and having ready two pounds of finely-whited sugar (white) and the beaten whites of two eggs, also, the milk of the nut, mix together and make into little cakes. In a short time the candy will be dry enough to eat, and I have always found it to be as good as if cooked.

—Indian Pudding.—Stir into a pint of scalding milk Indian meal enough for a stiff batter; when cold add three eggs, one tablespoonful each of butter and molasses, one-half cup of flour, one tablespoonful of baking powder, flavor with cinnamon; to be eaten with a rich sauce.

—To manufacture furniture polish take equal quantities of common white wax, white soap, in the proportion of one ounce of each to a pint of water. Cut the above ingredients fine, and dissolve over a fire until well mingled.

—Cure for Inflammatory Rheumatism.—Take a ounce of pulverized saltpetre put in half a pint of sweet oil; bathe the parts affected, and a sound cure will speedily be effected.

—Jelly Cake.—Three-quarters pound sugar, half pound butter, one cup sour milk, half teaspoonful soda stirred into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

—Escalloped Potatoes.—When the potatoes are thoroughly boiled, mash them and rub them through a colander into the milk, six eggs, pound flour; stir this well together. Bake in the pans not more than half inch thick; when baked, as you take them from the oven, lay them on a flat surface, spread over a layer of jelly on the top, then lay on another cake, then jelly, then cake; keep the best-looking for the top; cut it in square pieces.

The eggs coated with poppy oil in three months lost 2 per cent, and in six months 4 per cent, of their weight. The eggs were still full, and devoid of unpleasant smell. The eggs rubbed over with linseed oil in three months lost 2 per cent, and in six months 3 per cent, of their weight, and when opened were found to be full, with the smell of fresh eggs.

The Grey Rat.

This morning while the workmen were tearing up the old floor of the Central freight house preparatory to relaying, they came across an immense scale box some eight inches deep, and about four feet square. It was piled up from its position, and as it was being raised, a rattling sound was heard inside. The men broke it open, when out dashed a monstrous rat. Chase was given the rodent, but the animal managed to escape by running into a pile of freight. The rat was as large as a good-sized kitchen and so gray from age that it was almost white. The bottom of the box from which it emerged was found to be completely covered to the depth of an inch or more with peanut shucks, corn, corn cobs, and the like. The only opening that could be discovered was a small hole about an inch and three-fourths in diameter through which a rat had passed. When young and small, the rat, it is supposed, crawled through the box, and after going in with plunder was unable to get out and thus became an involuntary prisoner. It gradually grew until it reached enormous proportions. The litter found in the box indicated that other rats fed it, and that kept it from starvation. The rodent was undoubtedly confined for several years, and the action of the other animals in supplying it with means of subsistence, shows a degree of intelligence that the rat has never been given credit for. How the imprisoned rat obtained water or other liquids to quench its thirst, is a mystery; but that it was in the box for several years, there can be no doubt. Had it not been for the accidental discovery, the rat would have remained in its prison until it died of sheer old age. Its long imprisonment did not seem to impair its physical qualities to any extent, as was evidenced by the sprightly manner in which it dodged about to get away from the workmen when it was released. The men could have killed it readily had they not been taken so completely by surprise by the unexpected appearance of the rodent. They did not deem it possible that even a rat could crawl through such a small aperture.—Evening Aukerian.

Macaroni.

This nutritious and wholesome article of food is little used in this country. In Italy, however, its use is universal, often constituting the principal food, or taking the place of fish, vegetables, and the dessert generally in the regular dinner. It is also sold in the streets as freely as fruits are with us. Its use is extensive in France and Germany.

It consists of pure gluten, which element constitutes only three and one-half per cent, of wheat flour, and is obtained by dissolving out the starch and other constituents of the flour with cold water. The process is as follows:

A soft dough, having been made up in a soft dough, is placed on a fine sieve, over a vat of water, and is kneaded in Italy with the feet, as long as the water which falls out in a spray, runs through milky. The tenacious nature of the gluten prevents its passing through. Starch is manufactured from the contents of the vat.

The long, hollow tubes are formed by pressing the gluten through a peculiar-shaped opening in a metallic plate, and this tubular form, so important to it in cooking, is indispensable in its drying, as gluten, when moist, rapidly tends to decompose.

Comfortable macaroni is made from flour, instead of from its gluten. It has, moreover, a starchy appearance; is more smooth and glossy than the genuine; is apt to be indigestible; is not as elastic when broken, does not show the glossy fracture of the former; and in cooking becomes pasty and does not preserve the tubular form. The genuine also—as the comforter does not swell up to more than double its original thickness.

It would be a gain to our cookery if macaroni were in more common use among us.

Can There be a World's Currency?

Twenty years ago a very intelligent Frenchman, M. de Vigny, set forth upon a trip over the continent of Europe, and to show the great want of unity in currency he placed a gold twenty-franc piece (value $3.81) in a separate purse, and determined to have it changed into current coin at each city he visited.

In leaving France he went to Frankfurt, where he had letters to several rich merchants, one of whom changed his gold into the current coin. Thence he went to Munich, where the Frankfurt money was changed to Bavarian coin. At Berlin, again, it was changed for Prussian money. At Vienna it went through the same process, and again at Milan. Once more at Naples, and finally at Rome. After going over all Italy he passed into Switzerland, descended the Rhine, and traveled through Holland and Belgium, never failing to go to people on whom he could implicitly rely, who would neither deceive him or charge any discount. As he traveled on, his twenty-franc piece steadily shrank in value. From country to country, the

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1879.

NUMBER 48.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,
(Guns, Pistols, etc.)

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, etc., Confectionery, etc., Next to O'Connell's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

W. M. CROCKETT'S HOTEL,
W. M. CROCKETT, Proprietor,
Main St., opposite Jackson's Infirmary.

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second Streets.

GEORGE BOSTLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND FURNITURE.

A. A. STURMER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

S. J. LEE, M.D.,
Office on Main Street.

M. E. H. BARRETT,
Office on Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.

ATTORNEYS.

CRIST AND SHINBLE MILLS,
PETER CRIST, Proprietor,
Vance Street.

OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS,
SAML. LAWSON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leaves orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in O'Connell's Building,
opposite Postoffice.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simpson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishings,
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCombs' Office.

MASONS.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First Street.

LYNN CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third Street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet Articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.

PAINTING & PAPER HANGING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leaves orders at O'Connell's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

JOHN S. JOHNSON,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence near Express office.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UNDERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. 228-3

GILMORE S. HAMIL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IS O'CONNELL'S BUILDING,
Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to conveyancing,
liquidation of insolvent estates and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. 221-19

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County,
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 21-19

THO. J. FROST, A. B. GOSPER, PIDDICORD & GOSPER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of
West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 21-19

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 21 South Centre Street.
Jan. 21-19

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
ward large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

VALUABLE MILL PROPERTY
AT OAKLAND

FOR SALE.

The subscriber offers at private sale, a Valuable Mill, situated on the Youngs Run river, in the town of Oakland, and now doing a successful business. In connection with it never failing water power. It has also a good mill race, now a Horse Power Engine to which a saw mill can be attached. Its location renders it the most desirable one for general milling purposes of any in the country.
There are also five acres of land, well adapted
for building lots, situated, which will be sold together or separately at the option of the purchaser. Also a Two and a half story
FRAME DWELLING HOUSE, in good order
and pleasantly situated, with all necessary
buildings, either or which will be sold separately or together. Price VERY LOW, and terms easy.

For further particulars, address,
W. A. DAILY,
821 1/2 Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

850 ACRES

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

If any farmer and terms apply to this notice or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

Mr. Nasby Anticipates the Investigating Committee, and Has an Investigation of His Own.

CONFEDERATE KIDNAPERS.
(In the State of Kentucky.)
December 23, 1878.

I don't want no Senatorial committee down here. I don't want no body pryin' around bringin' niggers
up to testify ez to wat they know about clockshuns, and votin' and sich. Niggers iz predestin, and their mental vishuns iz distorted. They don't understand polythix, and hev
very dim and confused notions of religion. Ther ain't a nigger in this State who can read or write.

Heve that the Fifteenth Amendment means that they shud hev the rite to vote, unfettered and unhindered,
and that they hev the rite to vote ez they please. They can't be made to understand that the superior intelligence that lays mostly around Bacon's waz designed by Providence to guide and direct em, and that they might be thankful that it iz
here to keer for em.

To put niggers onto the stand for examination iz to convict ourselves.
Ther ain't ez many uv us to swear
ez ther wuz the morin' uv the clock-shun, but ther iz enuf.

That the county shud hev the two inward uv wad did reely happen
clockshun day, I hev already held an examination, and here it iz:

Issaker Gavitt sworn.—Wuz present at the poles last clockshun day, and hed votid. Count without my double-barreled shot-gun, for I did not anticipate trouble uv any kind.
Hed understood that the niggers hed agreed to vote the state Democratic ticket, in which I wad ez soon they wud vote ez not. Rather encouraged em. Remember acceptin an invitation to take somthin' with one uv em, and wad hev accepted privately with wad uv em. Am first bossin the prejudis which every white man hev again color. They got so that I kin tolerate nigger with reserve, if he iz liberal. Two uv em hed votid them wuz the two Republican tickets wuz found in the box when we diskeved it, that every one uv em had Republican tickets insid uv Democratic and that they purposed to vote em. Hed naturally enraged. Dashed the niggers away from the whider and hed the poles closed. Rushed home and got my shot-gun, ez did Deeking Pogam, Capt. McPetter and the rest uv em.

Immediately notified the niggers that this kind uv a thing wad not do, and that while we desired em to exercise their rites, they must exercise em in accordance with the ideas of the dominant race, and nuthin else. Otherwise they wud not exercise em. Ther wuz som trouble, which resulted in the killin uv perhaps seventy uv em. Can't state exactly how many wuz killed, ez we didn't count em.

Believes in President Hayes, especially since the appointment uv
Mesby ez Consul to Hong Kong.
Thinks it wud be a grate measure uv pastiesion of the (Gavitt) end be appointed to smthin.

Deekin Pogam testified to about the same thing that Issaker did.
Wuz wifin that the niggers shud
vote if they wud only vote the Democratic ticket. Hed overcome the prejudis every Caucasian wuz found to hev agin the inferior race,
but shud insist alluz that the inferior race shud be guided and directed by the superior. If the superior race wants to vote the Democratic ticket,
the inferior must do likewise, and so on. Otherwise wud like to vote.
We shud insist on hev in our council in when we make up our Congress-shunal represintashun, but we cannot their votes. Otherwise the bloated North wud hev the brige on us. Approves the President's policy, especially his appointment uv Mesby ez Minister, or whatever it iz, to Hong Kong. Nuthin so constitutes the Southern mind ez an appointment.
Wud like to hev it tried on hisself.

Colonel McPetter testified to smut
in perhaps seven or eight uv em Believed he wuz justified, and appealed to the Northern sense uv rite.
Hed the niggers votid the Republican ticket, it wud hev bothered us to elect the Democratic ticket, smthin that the Corners alluz hed done, and alluz expoid to do. Content and wooden stand immovashuns. If the niggers want to vote let em vote rite,
and ther will be no objections to
it. Otherwise we can't permit.

I didn't consider it necessary to take any more testimony. But this I hed sworn to, before Basco, who sealed it offshilly with the end uv a whisky glass, and I shud hev rid it in Basco. I hope it will hev the proper effect. I hope the North will see that we recognize the amendments, and that we air willin to go as far ez possible. We must,

however, preserve the integrity uv
the old Democratic party, and must have our majorities. When this iz understood ther will be no more trouble. When the nigger gets into the proper frame uv mind uv votin'
we want him to, and the better
all end, and ther will be that essential kind uv peace that we desire.
Otherwise ther will be more werry
more trouble.

JOSEPH Y. NASBY, Statesman
(Continued.)

Some of Its Effects.

A writer upon the subject of kidney diseases publishes his views in one of our Maryland journals as follows:

"It is a very serious, yet serious disease, and that the different diseases of the kidneys, including Bright's and Diabetic, must be treated as such, and not as dangerous, incurable and fatal of them all, have been more prevalent in the past few years than ever known before. The problem has puzzled many of the best medical and scientific minds to account thereof.
As it is absolutely known that larger beer has come into almost universal use within the period, when diseases of the kidneys, growing fatal in many instances, grow most alarming, there are those—among them
also scientists and members of all medical schools—who are of opinion that the superabundant and unrestrained use of lager beer is one cause, which, chief of the producing causes. It is a well ascertained fact,
as I may state upon unimpaired authority, that the preserving quality of malt liquors is the alcohol produced by fermentation, which in well brewed ale and beer amounts to 31
and 4 per cent. To enable, however,
the great populace to drink—probably to beavers—large quantities of lager beer, the alcohol has been reduced from one to one-half and perhaps, not sufficient to prevent it from acidifying or assuming a condition of putrefaction. To overcome this the beer brewer has discovered that by the use of lime it will enable him
to keep his beer from going to six weeks. The biphenide of lime has such an affinity for the resin in the beer, with which all lager beer is more or less impregnated, that it fixes it. The resin, thus fixed, is well known, has such an effect upon the kidneys—so physicians assert—as to overturn in their natural action, giving them more work than they can naturally perform. The consequence is that Bright's disease, and other diseases of the kidneys, so fatal of recent years, ensue. These maladies, it is well known, have become particularly common and alarming
among both ladies and gentlemen,
embracing the best circles of society,
who use lager beer, not only on account of its palatable taste, but because of its being so easily obtained—
carried to their very doors—and used daily on account of the convenient manner in which it is served to them in the refrigerated patent bottle. The matter to which I here allude is one of vast moment, and should be seriously considered. What I have said is based upon scientific principles, practical observation and the opinions of medical gentlemen in high
standing.

REPORTED FINDING OF A. T.
STEWART'S BODY.—The New York Sun of the 16th inst., says: "It is stated upon authority so trustworthy
as to leave little if any doubt of the entire correctness of the report, that Mrs. A. T. Stewart has said to a gentleman, within the last six days, that the body of her husband has been recovered; that it has been delivered to Judge Hilton, and that it has been placed by him in a vault well guarded, there to remain until the completion of the crypt in the Stewart
Memorial Cathedral, in Garden City." The Sun further says the body was found through a well-known legal firm, and that $50,000 cash was paid, $100,000 being at first demanded. Reporters yesterday endeavored to see Judge Hilton in reference to the reported recovery of the body.
Mr. Hilton, however, declined to be seen. In response to a note requesting a statement of facts in the case,
he sent the following in his own handwriting: "Having no information I desire to communicate, I prefer at present not speaking further on the subject." The detectives express entire ignorance in regard to the matter.

Editors and publishers were made a special subject of prayer during prayer week. The country papers are expressing the hope that something was said for delinquent subscribers, as they needed it more.

All over the world Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is making its way, and every place it reaches consumptive people are more seldom met. It is truly a blessing to humanity and costs only 25 cents.

Moody's Labors.

Mr. Moody's Gospel talk to young men at Dr. Leyburn's church one day last week, was on "Reaping the whirlwind." There were two thousand or more men in the church, and some of the incidents introduced in the discourse were very affecting.
The text was the sixth chapter of Galatians, and the seventh verse:
"Be not deceived, God is not mocked:
for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If, said Mr.
Moody, we sow the wind, we must reap the whirlwind. Nearly every man has been deceived sometime in his life. Our best friends prove false.
Nay, our own hearts play the traitor,
but God cannot be deceived. Whatsoever a man sows that must he reap.
You may sow sin in the darkness,
but you will reap sin and misery in the light. As it is in the natural world, so it, very often is in the spiritual. The farmer who sows oats does not look for a harvest of watermelons or cucumbers. Young men do not study law in order to become great physicians. It only needs for any man, no matter how much he doubts the Bible, to stop to think a moment to find that this text tell of a law of God which is unvarying.
You'll find the evidences all around you. See this hydra-headed sin of intemperance which is sapping the minds of some of the best men in the country; it invariably brings results that can be predicted in advance. What a harvest there is of the corn and rye in this vicinity!
What crushed hopes! What blighted lives! The reaping time must surely come. As a general thing, men who make money out of liquor
do not enjoy their ill-gotten gains.
When a man makes drinkards of others, one of his sons usually falls into the ranks, or else some miserable depraved fellow steals into his household and wins the affections of his beloved daughter and leads her into a life of constant unhappiness. It will be found that a good many liquor sellers hang themselves, and that their sons often turn out criminals. The reaping time must come.
The whirlwind must eventually overtake. What a reaping time King David had! He had his pain-ishment. An adulterer himself, he lived to see his daughter follow in his footsteps. Having displayed God, he should not have complained when his beloved son Absalom turned against him and drove him from the throne. "O Absalom, my son," he cries, "would to God I had died for thee." God's mild grinds slowly, but it is very sure.

Then be sure your sins will find you out. Taxes are not inevitable.
Death has not come to every man,
for Elias was one exception, but that sin will discover you is absolutely certain. We have to deal with a God of equity. Teach your boy to curse God, and in a little while he will curse you; teach your clerk
sharp practice in business, and directly he will use his experience to the detriment of your cash box. Many a young man has been ruined by dishonest employers. Then, remember, you must always reap more than you sow. If you sow a bad seed you will always reap a harvest.
Let me tell you that instead of the kingdom of righteousness the most of us are living in sentimentalism.
God's law has not been abrogated to suit the requirements of later day Christians. It remains in as full force as ever. No amount of singing or praying is going to take the place of restitution where it can and should be made. If a young man cheats a poor woman out of a heard bill, there's no use in him coming here to profess religion until he makes reparation. We have got to be honest first. A religion without morals is nothing but a mockery of the name.
Worship, will not compensate for continual swindling. A good name is of more account to a young man than all the pleasures of theatre, ball room or concert hall, and a clear conscience is something far better than all the delinquency that can be crowded into a lifetime.

But you ask me what becomes of substitution, of salvation by Jesus Christ. I say that salvation does not affect the retribution of sin under God's immutable laws in this world,
although it does make you free from the annihilation of the future. If a drunken man falls and breaks a leg
and it has to be amputated, and he becomes a sober Christian ever after,
he may have great spiritual comfort,
but he will have to hop through life on one leg nevertheless. God forgives you sowing the tares and thistles and does not drive you from his sight, but you must reap the tares and thistles all the same. Deany of you find sin sweet? Ask the prisoners in the penitentiary yonder

if the way of the transgressor is a pleasant one. Oh, let us wake up to a realization of our iniquities, and ask God to have mercy upon us and forgive us.—Baltimore American.

Now that the cold weather has moderated the chronicles are coming forward with statistics and comparisons. It is claimed that no such continued frigid has been experienced in this section since 1856,
and that it extended over more territory in the United States than ever before at any one time. The Cleveland Herald says the cold was as remarkable for its length and breadth
as it was for its thickness. It stretched pretty much all over the continent, and in all places it was intensely severe as compared with the average winter weather of the latitude. Snow fell to the depth of several inches in Shreveport, Vicksburg, and several other Southern cities where a stray flake now and then is about the usual winter allowance.

In the Northern States business
for a good many working hours was substantially at a standstill, the railroad companies wisely making little or no effort to even push through passenger or mail trains, while the movement of merchandise was totally suspended. Indeed, very rarely has an interval of severe winter weather caused such disturbance of business
as well as loss of property and general suffering as that of the past few days. Its advent was so sudden, particularly in those parts of the country where cold weather is seldom known, that it caused most acute distress among the poor and serious discomfort to even the rich. The suffering among the colored people in the Southern States was especially severe, though there are not so many cases of actual death reported from among them as we hear of in the North. From all portions of the North, in fact, come accounts of persons freezing to death—tramps in most instances, though not a few drivers and others whose occupation necessitated exposure, go to swell
the death list.

In a late conversation with the editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer
Vice President Keyser, of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, gave the most positive assurance of the company's intention to resume and prosecute, as soon as the financial condition will justify it, the extension of the Pennsylvania R. R. to a connection with the Pittsburgh and Connellsville.
When the extension is built it is the intention to make the Pennsylvania
a great through route, inasmuch as it shortens the line some fifty miles between Wheeling and Cumberland,
and saves one range of mountains,
and therefore enables the company to make faster time and a more economical haul. The outlet from Wheeling west will of course be over the Central Ohio.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old and Reliable "STANDARD," the
price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the at-
tachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people, far beyond that ever yet attained by any other machine of any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are leaving the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "STANDARD." Knowing from
experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can afford
all other machines, where the super-
ior quality and low price is made known. This special Machine
combines all the improvements, is
far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a reliable Sewing Machine, in
every particular, that will outlast
any Machine, and at a price far down
below any other. It is thoroughly warranted for five years. Read in order of charge. And sent to any part of the country for examination
by the customer before payment of
the bill. We can predict equally as
large a demand for them in this
section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured
should write direct to the Factory.
And enterprising persons wishing to seize the chance should apply for a descriptive agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper.
Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor.
Broadway and Clinton Place, New York.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

SONG.

I.
Tyrant's garden by a river,
Where the grasses bend and quiver
On the river's rocky edge,
And a host of blue runs down
Through the meadows to a town,
In a winding way,
And where the golden flowers blow,
And the river flows so slow,
And the low through meadows going,
I shall never say.

II.
Something fairer than a rose
In that unknown garden grows,
Something sweeter than the rhyme
Rung by birds in the pine-trees:
Fairer than a daisy of youth,
Thought all lost to care and truth,
Something with a heart like May:
Low and lay all in one
Golden hair blown from the sun;
Even with laughter and rain,
What? I'll never say.

III.
Dreamy face and rosy mouth,
Fresh like spring winds from the south,
Eyes disclosing more than life,
Reddest beneath the hooded skirt
Of a day in May.
No, when days grow dim and quiet,
And the winter's time for snowing,
Leave the face to the winds blowing,
I will seek this garden, growing
Where I'll never say.

IV.
In a tangled, secret hollow,
On a bed of mossy moss,
Bills and the wind raves,
Hardly can the leaves be blown,
To the river's edge,
Motionless the water flows,
And within the dusky hollow,
Sounds no leaf's rustling river,
Sleep like some, that rest-giver,
Light and song have flown away,
With the sun and twilight glow,
Sighs and the unknown sorrow
Bring me to the river,
Song was born of joy and thought,
Light, of love and the cross,
Sighs and the unknown sorrow
Bring me to the river,
Death and sleep, who came anons,
Death and sleep, who came anons.

A RIVER DREAM.

MILE-END was a small country town; but such a town! The houses were packed and pressed and crowded together, making them look as though they would suffocate for want of air. Then they were so dilapidated and faded and tumble-down, it seemed a wonder they kept up at all. To look at them at a distance you would think from the queer way the roofs all slanted and leaned toward each other, and a trick some of the houses had of poking up inquisitive looking dormer gables and windows in quite unexpected places, that they had some important secret that they were whispering about and hush-hoing over. And then the narrow, crooked streets, with their seas of mud and filthy gutters, and debris-littered sidewalks, the very stones of which had a dispirited, rakish air, as if instead of lying quietly in their places and doing their duty, they could do nothing better with their time than go knocking about in a disreputable fashion, to trip up unwary passengers. And then the odorous, stinky, Cologne smell, never lessened a larger and more extensive collection; at least, for the sake of its lackless inhabitants, let us hope so. A more unwholesome, undersized, dirty, gossiping, miserably worthless set of human beings surely never existed anywhere. The men were mostly out of work and drunk, the women lean and ragged and unwomanly, and the children little and wretched and wolfed. Many was the drunken brawl and scene of brutal violence that awoke the midnight echoes of the streets, and fever and malaria unmoiled stalked abroad. Within the houses were as unwholesome as without, with separate family in every floor, sometimes within every room. What wonder that the health and the morals of the place should be at a terribly low ebb.

And what wonder to make it more painful and pitiful was the loveliness of the valley in whose lap lay this pestilent little town. The green, flower-gemmed meadows were so fresh and fair, the air was so fragrant and balmy, the birds sang so sweetly, the little flowers were so brilliantly hued and so daintily formed, the river and its many shady backwaters and tributary streamlets were so fresh and bright and sparkling, and the murmuring music that they made in such sweet harmony with the tinkling of the sheepbells, the lowing of the cattle and the clear, ringing note of the skylark, whose bit of a body seemed a mere speck far away against the blue sky, lay, this lovely valley, like a glorious picture, nobly framed by shadow-swept hills and over-arched by heaven's cloud-tinted blue. But, though rich in beauty and healthful with heaven's breezes, it yet clung a canker-spot of corruption to its breast; like a beautiful woman whose soul is worthless and diseased. Very few of the miserable inhabitants of Mile-end, not even the children, ever found their way out of the noxious atmosphere of the streets into the purity and beauty of the woods and fields beyond. Like the grub that tastes of the nut it feeds and fattens on, the dirt and squalor and poverty of the place seemed to grow into the hearts and minds and natures of its people, and to rub out all capacity for enjoying what was better and purer than themselves. And yet even here, brutal and degraded as were the many, in the few, terribly small as that minority was, might be found high and noble instincts, that pushed themselves up through the poisonous soil, and groped painfully upwards and onwards to the light. Even here, as everywhere, might be found instances (rare perhaps, but still there) of brave patience, endurance and heroism under great stress of suffering and misery and wrong. Then, too, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

"Father," said the boy, in a gentler tone, "ye've hurt me, ye have, and she's so good to ye."

The man shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and looked up at his daughter, who was standing defiant and angry, with a defiant look on her cheek and neck. When her brother spoke her face softened and her lips quivered; she knelt suddenly by the bed and put her arms around him, saying in a piteous voice as the big tears fell and his face grew white, "It's no for me to mind! It's for ye. Whateen will ye do to-night through withouten water? There's no a drop more i' the house nor the street."

The boy said nothing as he stroked his sister's brown head, but in a shameful, longing look in his eyes, and the half sigh he could not repress, showed how much he needed the water. The man looked at them for a minute, and then the fumes of the gin he had taken overpowered him, and he reeled to the opposite corner of the room, where he fell on to an old mattress, and in a moment was fast in a deep, drunken sleep. The boy closed his eyes wearily and turned his face to the wall. The girl kissed him and nestled him as comfortably as she could, then rose from her knees and went to the window, which she partly opened. The moon was high and full, and the street without, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

"Father," said the boy, in a gentler tone, "ye've hurt me, ye have, and she's so good to ye."

The man shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and looked up at his daughter, who was standing defiant and angry, with a defiant look on her cheek and neck. When her brother spoke her face softened and her lips quivered; she knelt suddenly by the bed and put her arms around him, saying in a piteous voice as the big tears fell and his face grew white, "It's no for me to mind! It's for ye. Whateen will ye do to-night through withouten water? There's no a drop more i' the house nor the street."

The boy said nothing as he stroked his sister's brown head, but in a shameful, longing look in his eyes, and the half sigh he could not repress, showed how much he needed the water. The man looked at them for a minute, and then the fumes of the gin he had taken overpowered him, and he reeled to the opposite corner of the room, where he fell on to an old mattress, and in a moment was fast in a deep, drunken sleep. The boy closed his eyes wearily and turned his face to the wall. The girl kissed him and nestled him as comfortably as she could, then rose from her knees and went to the window, which she partly opened. The moon was high and full, and the street without, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

"Father," said the boy, in a gentler tone, "ye've hurt me, ye have, and she's so good to ye."

The man shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and looked up at his daughter, who was standing defiant and angry, with a defiant look on her cheek and neck. When her brother spoke her face softened and her lips quivered; she knelt suddenly by the bed and put her arms around him, saying in a piteous voice as the big tears fell and his face grew white, "It's no for me to mind! It's for ye. Whateen will ye do to-night through withouten water? There's no a drop more i' the house nor the street."

The boy said nothing as he stroked his sister's brown head, but in a shameful, longing look in his eyes, and the half sigh he could not repress, showed how much he needed the water. The man looked at them for a minute, and then the fumes of the gin he had taken overpowered him, and he reeled to the opposite corner of the room, where he fell on to an old mattress, and in a moment was fast in a deep, drunken sleep. The boy closed his eyes wearily and turned his face to the wall. The girl kissed him and nestled him as comfortably as she could, then rose from her knees and went to the window, which she partly opened. The moon was high and full, and the street without, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

The boy said nothing as he stroked his sister's brown head, but in a shameful, longing look in his eyes, and the half sigh he could not repress, showed how much he needed the water. The man looked at them for a minute, and then the fumes of the gin he had taken overpowered him, and he reeled to the opposite corner of the room, where he fell on to an old mattress, and in a moment was fast in a deep, drunken sleep. The boy closed his eyes wearily and turned his face to the wall. The girl kissed him and nestled him as comfortably as she could, then rose from her knees and went to the window, which she partly opened. The moon was high and full, and the street without, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

"Father," said the boy, in a gentler tone, "ye've hurt me, ye have, and she's so good to ye."

The man shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and looked up at his daughter, who was standing defiant and angry, with a defiant look on her cheek and neck. When her brother spoke her face softened and her lips quivered; she knelt suddenly by the bed and put her arms around him, saying in a piteous voice as the big tears fell and his face grew white, "It's no for me to mind! It's for ye. Whateen will ye do to-night through withouten water? There's no a drop more i' the house nor the street."

The boy said nothing as he stroked his sister's brown head, but in a shameful, longing look in his eyes, and the half sigh he could not repress, showed how much he needed the water. The man looked at them for a minute, and then the fumes of the gin he had taken overpowered him, and he reeled to the opposite corner of the room, where he fell on to an old mattress, and in a moment was fast in a deep, drunken sleep. The boy closed his eyes wearily and turned his face to the wall. The girl kissed him and nestled him as comfortably as she could, then rose from her knees and went to the window, which she partly opened. The moon was high and full, and the street without, although in most of those poor semi-savage breasts vice and sin had nearly elbowed out all virtue that nature might have originally planted, it must not be overlooked that great as the sin was, as great was the suffering; and who shall say, if those poor souls had been born into the clover of this life, regarded their physical and moral surroundings, what fair and delicate and beautiful blossoms might not have expanded and bloomed in their natures?

Mile-end was a very old as well as a very dirty place, and one particular house in its principal street stood forward into the road several feet beyond its neighbors, its upper story quite overhanging the basement. This house was so old that it almost tottered when the wind blew—as it often did at Mile-end—even in spite of the wooden props, themselves rotten now, with which it had been buttressed up. But in spite, or perhaps because of its age, it was beautifully well-maintained and harmonious in the tone of its coloring. Tufts of vivid green moss and yellow and gray lichen at intervals carpeted and softened the red tiles, and the clumsy chimneys of orange wallflowers filled up the gaps left by departed bricks and mortar, thus throwing over the actual decay and rotteness a glamorous veil of picturesque beauty. Within this house was a roomy old, and cold, and comfortable; the beauty of decay was all outside, and only its stony reality existed within the frail and draughty walls. There were ten rooms in this house, which gave shelter to seven families. The noise and bustle were incessant, never seeming to stop night or day, for when at last the sickly children were asleep, the night was made hideous by the drunken blasphemies and low quarrels of the degraded men and women, and the reckless air was thick and heavy with gin and tobacco and disease. In one of these rooms, it was in the projecting upper story, which through an unusually wide window commanded a view all up and down the street—lay on a straw pallet on the floor, barely covered with an old patchwork quilt, a boy of about fourteen, who, emerging from his constant cough, labored breathing and emaciated limbs, was in the last stages of consumption. Beside him on the narrow bed lay a girl a few years older than her brother, fast asleep. She was pale and thin and dirty, but there was a rare beauty in the firm, soft curves of the month and chin and in the low, broad brow, up from which was swept a thick, tangled mass of curly brown hair. Tears glistened on her brown lashes, and the eyebrows were knitted together in a painful frown, which suddenly relaxed as the sick boy watched her with tired sunken eyes, and a sudden, glowing smile lighted up her face.

"She can allus dream and escape to the beautiful world she tells me about," he muttered, with a wistful, impatient sigh; "and I can never even sleep." Yes, she was dreaming, but not so deeply but that the movement and sigh of her brother woke her. "Whate's the trouble, Harry dear? Be ye worse to-night?" "O no," he said, and sighed again. "I was just a-wonderin' what ye were smilin' so, and I longed to be there too."

"O Harry, I was 'way off, out o' sight o' houses an' streets an' such like, all alone in the valley; an' all the trees an' the flowers an' the river-spark to me to give me comfort."

"Ah! the valley," said the sick boy; "that's where I want to go, as I used to, fore I was took bad. If I could sleep p'raps I could go to it. I feel fit of coughin', which only let me strength to gasp feebly for 'water.'"

A cracked cup without a handle stood on the window sill and in it was a little water. The girl took it and got it but as she was handing it to her brother the door opened and their father staggered in. For an instant he looked at his children, and in a drunken fit of senseless passion struck the girl a savage buffet, which made her reel, and shattered the cup into fragments in her hand.

The girl's brow flushed crimson with anger and pain, and her brown eyes flashed fire. "You miserable, drunken brute!" she said. "None o' yer sarcas, gal, or I'll kill yer!" and he glared at her dangerously, with arm uplifted to strike.

"Father, don't strike her!" cried the boy, rather than implore the sick boy, sitting up with an effort, and holding out a thin, pale hand between them, while a hectic red blazed in his cheeks and vivid light shone in his sunken blue eyes. "Don't yer strike her, or God will strike ye!" There was a strange, almost unearthly look in the boy's spiritualized, suffering face, that averted the man into temporary sobriety.

As he passed with arm uplifted, looking at his son, an expression of shame and uncertainty crossed his features; he hung his head, avoided the boy's intense eyes, and his arm slowly dropped by his side.

Schilleman.

Dr. SCHILLEMANN, after an intermission of five years and a half, resumed, Sept. 30 last, his search for the buried Troy. He is obliged to give the Imperial Museum at Constantinople two-thirds of the discoveries, and to bear all the expenses, now amounting to $2,500 a month. A delegate of the Turkish Government on the spot, and a guard of ten gendarmes is furnished. At Hisarlik, where all the excavations have been made, Dr. S. traces the remains of no fewer than four prehistoric cities which had been built on the same site, and the second of these is, he maintains, the Homeric Troy. He expects, before the season of operation closes, to bring to light the whole western and northern part of the circuit wall, the destruction of which Homer ascribes to Poseidon and Apollo (Iliad vii, 453), as well as all that remains of the pre-historic mansion immediately to the northwest and west of the great gate, which he attributes to the ancient town of King, because it is the largest and best built house in the city. In it were found hundreds of remarkable objects, and close to it the treasure now exhibited in the South Kensington Museum. The walls of this mansion are at a depth of about twenty-eight feet below the surface of the hill, and precisely like the cyclopean walls of the Royal Palace at Mycenae, and the cyclopean houses at Tiryns. They are built of large stones, and are covered to a depth of nine to ten feet. Among these ashes the doctor has recently found a red hand-made vase, containing, among other things, twenty gold ear-rings, four gold hairpins, a long number of gold beads, bracelet of electrum, fragments of necklaces.

More remarkable among the new discoveries is a well-preserved distaff of wood, eleven feet long, with the thread of wool as black as ever. At this depth of twenty-eight feet, curious objects of various kinds are constantly being unearthed. Three gates before the pre-historic mansion have been laid open, varying in breadth from eight to twelve feet, and in height from four to six feet. Unfortunately the approach of winter, which is severe in that region, will suspend further excavations until spring. The zealous antiquarian is sure that, eventually, he will be able to prove to the world that the site of the city of Priam, and to more fully identify the ruins with the localities described by Homer.

The pre-historic times are of vague significance. Although the date of the Trojan war can be fixed with some approach to accuracy, there is a vast period of time deeper in the womb of ages, beyond the reach of chronology. It is only of late years that the science of astronomy has been able to furnish a basis of time from the creation to the present day. The ancients carried human animals back into ages that we take no account of. The Egyptian priests reckoned the time from the reign of Menes, Alexander, at about 23,000 years. Cicero speaks of the memorials of the Babylonians as embracing a period of 470,000 years, and Pliny cites Ephorus as saying that they were able to furnish astronomical observations extending on baked bricks, extending

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
5¢ extra per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Advertisements must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected advertisements will not be returned.

SATURDAY, JAN. 25, 1879.

The recent movement of the ex-office holders, a few disappointed aspirants for office, and their friends, as developed by their meeting at Raine's Hall in Baltimore, on the 8th inst., has manifested and brought to public notice the secret cabal that has for years fomented all the dissensions and contentions in the Republican party in this State.

Having for sixteen years enjoyed the beautiful of official positions under the government, with all the power that official patronage controlled, they ruled the party with remorseless tyranny; at their dictation all official nominations were made from the primary meetings to county, district and State conventions, and the unlucky member of the party, who dared to express an opinion or maintain an idea in opposition to them was forced into the obscurity of private life; none could stand before them. When the scourge of civil war was ended and the whole nation was rejoicing in the prospect of restoration of peace and fraternal relations with our unfortunate and erring brethren, and was disposed to give them the Prodigal's Welcome Home, these dictators, more fierce and voracious than the soldiers who had conquered on the battle field, met the vanquished when they returned to their homes with bitter and vindictive denunciations, refusing to listen to the proposition of restoring to them or their sympathizers the right of citizenship, fearing that if suffrage were restored they might lose the control and power that had been so long wielded by them. But peace had been too long desired by many Republicans who were disposed to make any concessions that were just and honorable, and many of these in doing what they conceived to be their duty to their fellow man were driven into the Democratic party, thereby destroying the supremacy of the Republican party in this State. Regardless even of this they continued to pursue the same policy and steadily the rank and file grew smaller, until even the stronghold of Republicanism, the Sixth district, succumbed under their machinations, and there remained not a Representative of our party in the State.

What mattered it to these Barnacles, the destruction of the party in the State, so long as the nation was Republican and the spoils of office could still be held by them?

The ruler of this clique, John A. J. Creswell, was made U. S. Senator by them—thence a member of the Cabinet as Postmaster General. Having besuiched his reputation by advocating the great Chompening fraud, he resigned the Postmaster generalship, (no doubt by request) his power waned, and with him fell his adherents, although sufficient remained for his own personal aggrandizement in securing for himself a position as one of the trustees of the defunct Freedman's Bank. This source being nearly exhausted, his attention is turned to the presidential nomination for 1880, and a struggle is now being made by him and his adherents for the control of the party leadership so that he can "lead the Maryland delegation to the next Republican National Convention, and if Grant is the candidate, and elected, to place himself in the same attitude in relation to Maryland offices as he did from 1869 to 1875." Under his control scarcely a vestige of party success was left, and since his forced retirement during the past three years, under the management of our present leader, there has been considerable life and vigor infused into the party, with a probability of future success. During the last campaign this patriot gave no aid in the canvass and had it been a failure he and his followers would now be howling about its mismanagement, but they have nothing to complain of and are compelled to come before the public with the specious pretense of a more thorough organization which must not be delayed for a day—else the interests of the party will suffer—i.e., their interests. Primary meetings must be held in every county district, county conventions must be held, every county, county delegations at their own expense must be sent to a State convention, a State convention must be held to select a new State committee;

a new State committee at their own expense must meet. For what? To more thoroughly reorganize the party? Not to depose our present chairman, the Hon. R. Stockel Mathews, and put in his stead a tool, a thing that will obey the behest and bidding of John A. J. Creswell. Then will the decapitated Barnacles rejoice in glowing anticipations of being relegated from the obscurity of private life again to official power and everything will appear lovely and roscate to them.

They know that Mr. Mathews, with his many qualifications, possesses integrity, stability and so strict a sense of honor and honorable dealings that he will not allow himself to be made the tool of any one, or will he allow even his best friend to use him against the interest or welfare of the Republican party, and for that reason, and that reason alone they intend, if possible, to move him out of their way. They dare not question his qualifications or efficiency, but under the cry of peace, reconciliation, &c., mean to depose him—if they can.

The Baltimore American of the 20th inst., justly says: "The Maryland Republican Central committee has received its third order from Washington (the headquarters of J. A. J. Creswell,) to change its Chairman. These orders always come at intervals of four years, about the time for preparing to choose delegates to the National Convention. They are always given under the special plea of 'harmony' and 'reorganization', but the main object is to get control of the delegation to the National convention: to be manipulated for the special benefit of certain parties. We scarcely think it possible or probable that the Republicans of the State can be induced to enter the train which is being set to ensure them and will take care to send a delegation that cannot be manipulated by any one."

We feel a pride in stating that Garrett county had no representation in this factional meeting in Baltimore, and we have yet to find the first Republican in the county that sympathizes with them, and we oppose and discountenance this absurd attempt to subject the party to these numerous and expensive meetings at so disadvantageous a season of the year, which, under no circumstances can result in any good.

Our district has always held itself aloof from participating in the factional quarrels in Baltimore and we maintain that this movement if carried out will tend to disintegration and be apt to destroy our prospects for success in our local elections next fall. We want none of these experiments and shall continue to oppose the call of any convention or committee outside of the legitimate and duly authorized channel and repudiate its expediency at the present time.

If these gentlemen with their followers, the remnant of an army of over five thousand applicants for positions in the Custom House and Post office in Baltimore, now dwindled down to about three hundred ex-office holders and their friends, must have a convention let them call one of their own—let them form a party of their own. We will bid you God speed and be glad of your riddance, but do not attempt to call yourself the Republican party or attempt with your convention to control the voters of our party, for we warn you that the Republicans of Western Maryland will not submit to being controlled by a small faction of ex-office holders, and you will find that you have not fully counted the cost of your desperate attempt to control, if you think we will quietly submit to your dictation. We can and will do without you and for every one of you that leaves the Republican party our ranks will be increased by accessions of good and honorable men who for years have been disgusted with your actions and whom you have deserted from becoming Republicans.

We regret that we have been compelled to use so plain language, but the necessity of the occasion demands it, and we cannot expect to place in jeopardy our local interests for the gratification of the personal ambition of any one.

The Washington correspondent of the Rockville Sentinel says, "It is authentically reported that Mr. Gorman and a portion of his friends have agreed to support Mr. Hamilton for Governor, whilst Hon. Pinkney Whyte, backed by Mr. Bamon, will put forth the names of Hons. Archer or Walsh. Strange amalgamation of political elements—and if true, such a jangling of old bones and counting of spirits were never heard or seen before in your political brotherhood."

Robinson, the Baltimore Judge of election, who was sentenced Monday to $100 fine and four months in jail, plead that he was crazed with drink, but the judge ruled that no excuse, saying that being a Judge of election he should be sober.

The Maryland Republicans.

The committee appointed at the Republican meeting at Raine's Hall, January 8th, to take action for the reorganization of the party, waited on Saturday on Mr. R. Stockel Mathews, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and laid before him the resolutions of the Raine's Hall meeting, requesting him to call a meeting of the State Committee on or before February 24th, with a view of holding a state convention at an early day. The members of the committee present were Messrs. Henry Stockbridge, chairman, J. Emory Weatherby, John B. Askew and J. C. Fortie. The committee, through Mr. Stockbridge, stated the object of their visit and submitted their instructions, saying that the Raine's Hall convention considered it important that a state convention be held as early as possible, with a view of making an effective campaign this year. Mr. Mathews, after cordially welcoming the committee, stated that several questions ought to be considered in the calling of the State Central Committee at this season of the year. Navigation was closed, and it would be exceedingly difficult, if not utterly impossible, for some of the members of the committee residing in Southern Maryland and in some of the other sections of the state to attend a meeting of that body in mid-winter. Many of the members would be compelled to ride about twenty-five or fifty miles to the nearest railroad station, and would otherwise be greatly inconvenienced. It would cost not less than $1,000 to call a meeting of the State Central Committee at this season of the year. In addition to this serious objection, what would be gained by holding a state convention before the month of May? The conventions to nominate candidates to be voted for in November ought not to be held before September, for good and sufficient reasons, and what was then the use of calling a meeting of the State Central Committee in winter and hold a convention before May?—that month, in his opinion, being early enough.

A member of the Raine's Hall committee replied that as far as the expenses were concerned, it had always been customary for the members of the State Central Committee to pay their own traveling expenses in attending the meeting of that body, and the party would not be compelled to bear the burden of the costs of transportation. As far as the difficulty of reaching the city from the southern and some of the Eastern Shore counties was concerned, it would perhaps, even under these circumstances, be possible to secure a large representation if a meeting of the committee is called, and there would perhaps be a larger attendance if due notice was given than there was at some of the meetings of that body held during last year. It was not designed that the state convention to be called by the present State Central Committee should nominate the candidates of the party to be voted for at the next state election. The intention of the Raine's Hall meeting was that the convention to be called next month should select a new state central committee, to whom shall be confided the work for the campaign, and that it was deemed necessary that the new committee should be appointed as early a day as practicable. Another member suggested that it was the sentiment of the meeting, which was composed of Republicans from different sections of the state, that the convention should be held at an early day.

Mr. Mathews still thought that May would be early enough for a convention. Mr. Mathews, however, does not evidently concur in the opinion that the Raine's Hall meeting represented the almost unanimous sentiment of the Republican party in the state. He has therefore expressed himself to the effect that his correspondence proves that many prominent Republicans in different sections are not in harmony with the sentiments of the Raine's Hall convention, and the Republican newspapers in the Sixth District, the strongest Republican district in Maryland, appear to be opposed to the meeting. The largest representation at that meeting was from the Second District, which did not nominate a Republican candidate last fall. The conference between Mr. Mathews and the members of the committee lasted for about an hour. Mr. Mathews stated that he would give the committee's request further consideration before taking any decisive step in the matter. It was agreed that the committee shall meet Mr. Mathews in the latter part of the week, when the matter will be again discussed and a conclusion reached.

"The members of the committee were not unanimous as to whether the result of the interview was, on the whole, satisfactory. One member of the committee was not entirely pleased with the result, but thought that in the end all will be right, and that the question at issue will be satisfactorily settled. Another was entirely satisfied with the conference, as far as it went. Mr. Askew, however, did not fancy the conference at all. In answer to a reporter's question, he said that he did not know when another meeting would be held, or whether it would be held at all. He did not wait till the end of the interview, as he had more important business requiring his attention at his office. He could not tell when a satisfactory settlement would be reached, or whether it would be reached at all. He knew that no conclusion had been reached, but he had his own opinion as to what Mr. Mathews is likely to do, although he did not care to express it.

Funding Operations by the Government.

We cannot better illustrate how largely the resources and ability of the United States treasury have been underestimated, even by those who ought to be best informed about them, than by comparing the treasury's present extensive operations with some prognostications made upon the subject in May last by one of the leading and best informed houses in Wall street. This house then gave out, as the financial "probabilities," that the five-twenties of 1867 would likely be called in and redeemed "in from three to twelve months; the five-twenties of 1867 in from one to four years; the five-twenties of 1875 in from three to five years; the sixes of 1881 after all the five-twenties have been redeemed—or in from five to eight years." The circular of the leading Wallstreet house further notes that "the above estimates are based upon the assumed average of $100,000,000 per annum as the rate of redemption," and says, moreover, "that it is more difficult to conjecture in what order the two classes of five per cent. bonds, viz., the ten-forties and the fives of 1881, may be paid off, as there is no legal requirement now existing to govern the action of the Treasury Department in that respect." This was written in May last, and already the Treasury Department is calling for the 5 20s of 1867; already, since January 1, 1879, the subscriptions to the 4 per cent. loan amount to $29,432,000, and the calls to $70,000,000. The subscriptions to the 4 per cent. in the past three days have exceeded $25,000,000, and there is no indication whatever of the cessation of the sale. It is noteworthy, in this connection, that 90 per cent. of the subscriptions to the new 4 per cent. are made in the shape of deposits of six per cent. bonds sold in for redemption, so that only about ten per cent. of the enormous transactions of the treasury on this redemption account are in coin. This greatly facilitates operations, of course, and prevents a great many hitches. At the present rates of subscription and call all the outstanding 5 20s of 1867 and 1868 will be called in by the middle of March, and then the case of the 10 40s, supposed in the quotation made above, will raise. This case was attempted to be met yesterday, in the House committee on banking and currency, by an amendment offered by General Ewing to the pending bill for the repeal of the resumption act, in which it was provided "that any sale of bonds of the United States shall be applied only to the redemption of other bonds bearing the highest rate of interest and subject to call."—Balto. Sun.

The Balance of Trade.

To many persons the above expression is mysterious, or conveys no clear and definite meaning. If a farmer buys more than he sells, (spends more than he earns), the balance of his dealing is against him, and he becomes a debtor. If his credit is good this process may go on for some years, and he may become a debtor to a large amount, but it inevitably leads to hard times with him and ultimately to bankruptcy. But if our farmer sells more than he buys, earning more than he spends, the balance of his dealings is in his favor, and he prospers, grows rich, and becomes a creditor.

So it is with a Nation. If its people sell abroad their products of the soil, mill and manufactory, called exports, in greater aggregate quantities and value than their aggregate purchases abroad of such things as they do not produce at home, called imports, then the net balance or excess of purchases over sales is called the balance of trade, and is against that Nation, and the amount of that balance is the amount of debt contracted by the Nation, and due abroad. With good credit this process of debt contracting may go on for years, as it did from 1863 to 1873, in this country, until the balance due from us was over $1,000,000,000. And just as in the case of our farmer, it brought on hard times, and bankruptcies, because we could not pay the debt when called for.

But let a Nation sell (export) more than it buys, (imports) and it becomes the creditor of other nations. Its business prospers; its people grow rich, and times are easy. The balance or excess of sales (exports) over purchases (imports) constitute the balance of trade, and is in favor of that Nation. This balance has grown in our favor since 1873, to over $500,000,000, or more than half enough to pay off the balance that had accumulated against us to that date.

The aggregate of individual and corporate extravagance produced the balance against us with the hard times. The aggregate of individual and corporate economy and savings, compelled by the hard times, is now creating a balance in our favor, and is the surest precursor of good times.

They are all for Hamilton now.

It was reported some time ago that Mr. George Peter and his friends were denouncing Hamilton as responsible for the former's defeat, and declaring that he was a traitor to the party, but it seems that this was a great mistake. Mr. Peter now publishes a card deeply deplored the columns circulated in regard to such a great and good man as Mr. Hamilton. He trusts and hopes his friends will be cautioned against heading any such statements. In his opinion, "they have their origin with certain parties seeking to sow the seeds of discord and dissension in the Democratic party." For his own part he must declare that, "after the nomination, throughout my whole campaign I had his earnest support, his friendly counsel and his kind hospitality. In addition to this he made a personal canvass of his own country, and to some extent in other portions of the Congressional district in my behalf." There is a beautiful harmony in the Democratic party on the gubernatorial question just now. Those who have been roaring like a lion now are like a turtle dove.—Baltimore American.

The appointment of Mr. Alex. B. Haguer, of the Annapolis bar, to the position of associate judge of the Supreme Bench of Washington, vice Judge Olin, resigned, is one which will commend itself to every one acquainted with the appointee and the court as eminently appropriate. It is understood that the President had expressed himself favorably to the proposed appointment of an Ohio lawyer for the place, but that the Attorney General insisted upon Mr. Haguer, and the President graciously yielded. The appointment is certainly an excellent one. The laws of the District of Columbia, and the great part of the pleadings, practice and process which are in use there, are derived directly from the Maryland law and practice. So much so is this the case that, before our code was adopted Maryland law and District law were precisely identical, and it was the rule of the parties in power at Washington to select Maryland or District lawyers to preside over the courts of the District. The appointment of Mr. Haguer indicates an intention to return to this whole some precedent, and no more unexceptional nomination could have been made. Mr. Haguer's standing as a lawyer has been fully established during a steady and industrious practice of almost thirty years near the court of highest jurisdiction in the State. His policies have always been of that mild, conservative sort which makes a true more friends in the opposite party than adherents in his own, and he has every social connection and requirement which are useful in establishing a high judicial position. Mr. Haguer has illustrated, on numerous occasions of great importance, at once the confidence of his clients in him, and his signal ability as a lawyer; he is an excellent speaker, and, we need not add, a gentleman of the most unimpeachable private character. If the appointment should be confirmed, as it will be, of course, the bench of the District will gain very largely.—Balto. Sun.

Even the Vicksburg, (Miss.) Herold feels compelled to make some remarks upon Louisiana bull-dozing. It says: "We should have been rejoiced if Governor Nichols had taken this spirit of bull-dozing that he says exists in some parts of Louisiana by the throat and choked the life out of it, even if it necessitated the free use of hemp to do it. He, his courts, and his legislature must do this, or confess that the Republicans are fully excused for interfering to protect voters in their rights."

Secretary Sherman says.

In explanation of the fact that the Government is only paying gold for coupons in New York, that "the time has passed when bondholders have privileges over other people. We cannot carry gold over the country to every man's door who happens to hold a bond." Greenbacks are as good as gold, so what is the difference?

Gorman and Hamilton.

The Baltimorean, a Democratic newspaper, takes a glance at coming political events and says: "Politics are not merely simmering, but they are actually commencing to bubble. As we predicted in our last issue, the Hon. William T. Hamilton is fast coming to the front as the Democratic candidate for Governor, and the conviction seems now to be general that he will receive the party nomination. Undoubtedly Mr. Hamilton has been put forward by one or the other of the Democratic factions, but by which one, few persons are in a position to do more than guess. The general guess, however, is in the direction of Mr. Gorman, and it is probable that the popular supposition is not wrong."

It has been rumored during the past week that Mr. Gorman had been suddenly seized with a love of rural life, and would for the present, at any rate, seek the retirement of his farm.

"We are not inclined to put much faith in any story that withdraws Mr. Gorman from active politics. He has no idea of retiring anywhere, although he may have an idea of retreating somewhere else. The appearance of Mr. Hamilton thus early in the field possesses a significance that ought not to be mistaken by those interested. Mr. Gorman's hand, we believe, is in it, and on Mr. Hamilton's shoulders, Mr. Gorman will seek to climb—higher. We do not consider it, however, by any means certain that the programme will be successful, or that Mr. Hamilton will receive the Democratic nomination. At present he appears to have it all his own way, but it is a good while before the nominating convention, and there may be now at work that will derange the best laid plans. There are so many personal issues, as well as fat offices in the coming campaign, that things will be very much mixed, and the situation not a little complicated."

It is expected that Mr. Potter or, in his absence, Mr. Morrison, will introduce the resolution passed by the Potter Committee over a week since asking for authority and the necessary funds to conduct an investigation of the cipher despatches. A lively discussion may occur. Indeed, it will be strange if such an excellent opportunity for a political debate is permitted to escape. No one really exists for the first part of the resolution since it is conceded that the committee is already vested with a complete jurisdiction in the premises. But the committee doubtless feel somewhat ashamed about asking for more money after having wasted its $20,000 in grinding out more pedigned testimony than any Congressional committee since the formation of the government, and gladly availed itself of the request to be permitted to investigate the ciphers as a pretext for replenishing their empty cash-box. It is reported that Mr. Stenger attempts to rise to question of privilege in the House to-morrow to reply to the charges advanced against him by Mr. St. Martin. The latter gentleman is very anxious to be summoned as a witness, and may ultimately demand to be sworn.

In London a few days since there was a little incident which is highly interesting as indicative of the excited public temper. Such a thing might easily have occurred in Dublin, where, as the jovial Harry Loriquet relates, a man can draw a crowd of twenty thousand persons, create a mob and get half a mile of streets torn up by simply carrying on a conversation down a sewer with an imaginary victim beneath the pavement. But such things do not often happen in London. Yesterday, however, there was a trifling row in front of a London bank; a cabman was obstreperous, a crowd gathered, the very sight of the bank created suspicion, and a "run" began upon the institution at once. The incident is not worth recalling save as indicative of the feverish and suspicious temper of the British people to-day. This disstate of the immediate past and distresses and uncertainties of the present have so saturated the public mind that it is in constant anticipation of worse evils to come, and prepared to believe in the possibility of any sort of disasters.

Money is a human kind of a man. It is a pity that more public men have not nerves of about the same tension, and which will vibrate to the touch of sorrow and want and the multitudinous cares that are common to this life. In a sermon recently preached in Baltimore he said: "I have often pitied those poor mothers who cannot afford nurses, and who are kept from church because they have to mind the baby. Suppose they do cry; we don't mind it at home, and I don't see why it should be so awful here. There are some filigaty people who don't like babies, but then I think they are the ones who ought to stay at home. I hope the time is coming when it will be the fashion to bring babies to church."

In the United States Senate on Tuesday, the House bill approving of the act of the Maryland legislature in transferring to Allegany and Garrett the control of the national turnpike through those counties was reported to the Senate from the Judiciary Committee.

LOCAL NEWS.

—H. A. Rasche, Esq., of Deer Park, moved to Oakland on Wednesday.

—The pay car of the B. & O. railroad passed through Oakland on Monday.

—The Oakland jail has now seven inmates, two having been added within the last week.

—Thos. J. Peddie, Esq., has been attending the Cumberland court during this week.

—Plant your advertisements in THE REPUBLICAN and reap a large business harvest therefrom.

—Rev. Mr. Laughlin, of the Deer Park circuit, is holding a protracted meeting at the Glade Valley church.

—We received a call from Mr. Ballard, of Shriver's printers' supply house, Wheeling, one day last week.

—Mr. H. B. Wolfe has now on hand and for sale, every day, the very best corn fed beef. His shop is near the Postoffice.

—In the advertisement of the "Promised Land" farm, the number of acres should be 625, more or less, instead of 274.

—We are sorry to announce that Mr. W. H. Tower is again seriously ill. We hope, however, to see him about in a few days.

—As a cure for chapped and chafed hands, nothing equals Koller's Roman Liniment. For sale by all druggists. Price 50 cents.

—There are eight candidates for the position of clerk of the Circuit Court for this county, the given name of each one being William.

—Dr. De Haas will lecture in the Centre street M. E. Church, Cumberland, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, January 27th and 28th.

—The Piedmont Herald says that it is rumored that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad contemplate making another change in the divisions of the road, reducing the four to two, with the terminus of both at Cumberland.

—About half past three o'clock Monday morning a tenement frame house in Lanesdown, the property of James T. Brady, was destroyed by fire, the work of an incendiary. The building was insured for $1,000.

—At Falling Waters, on the Cumberland Valley R. R., a large double dwelling house and store, one side occupied by young Mr. L. V. V. of Baltimore, was destroyed by fire, the occupants being compelled to abandon even their clothing and wrap their children in blankets.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 6 o'clock by Rev. B. Ison.

New Stock.

We desire to call the attention of all persons to the fact that we have just purchased a large stock of jobbing and printing material consisting of envelopes, visiting and all other varieties of cards, paper of all kinds, roster paper, letter heads, statements, &c., &c., and in fact every variety of material. We can do work as cheap as any—and as good. We invite inspection of our stock and work, without fear as to the result. Give us a call. Office near the depot, over Osbourne's store.

Band of Hope.

The Band of Hope held another meeting in the M. E. Church, on Thursday evening, 16th instant, at 7 o'clock. A fair audience was present. The meeting was presided over by Rev. B. Ison. The exercises were as follows: Selection, Miss Mattie Kenner; essays, Norman Cunningham and Geo. Mason. Prof. Richardson's choir furnished the music. The audience was attentive and all were well entertained. After a few remarks by Revs. Ison and Davis the meeting was dismissed.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's mother, near Urbana, Pa., Tuesday evening, Jan. 14th, 1879, by Rev. A. M. Smith, Mr. Theodore Bush, of Oakland, and Miss Allie Davis, of the former place.

The happy couple made a short visit to Baltimore, returning to Oakland Tuesday morning last, and on Tuesday evening they were called upon by a large number of friends, including the members of the Oakland cornet band, all of whom were handsomely entertained.

Theodore and his lady have our sincere wish for a long life of happiness and prosperity. "Crescete et multiplicamini."

In the Near Distant.

The officials of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are close-mouthed in their business affairs, and the public very seldom learns of their arrangements until about being consummated. But when they propose important changes, which take considerable time to perfect them, the very preparations to that end convey to the reasoning mind the company's purposes, and gradually they become generally known.

That the company proposes soon to make some radical changes comes to us from a credible source, in which we have much faith. From the information we have received, we draw the conclusion that the company will divide the road into two grand divisions, and that the Pittsburgh and Connellsville road will be the main stem to connect with the West, until the Hemfield connection is made, work on which will be pushed with vigor, on the opening of spring. The road from Cumberland to Baltimore will constitute the Eastern grand division. The city of Cumberland will be the terminus of the two divisions, and most of the works at Martinsburg and Piedmont will be removed here. On the completion of the Hemfield road, a short cut west of 49 miles will carry much of the trade by way of Wheeling.

The above are the reports as they come to us, and we have cause to believe they are correct. The favors of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad should be bestowed upon this city for the frequency of the road, Cumberland has been its strong advocate. She subscribed money for its construction, donated property for its use, and offered every possible inducement to prevail upon the company to make this an important point on the road. Until recently she had never entertained a proposition to construct works inimical to their road. Yet in our immediate vicinity works have been erected, division termini have been selected, and Cumberland has received the benefit. It is certainly to the city's interest to give some consideration to our city. It will also be to the road's interest to cultivate the good will of Cumberland, and where benefits are to arise to both, it is to the interest of both to work together. We trust the above reports shall prove correct, and that the company will make use of its extensive grounds in this city by the erection of works which will advance its good as well as that of Cumberland.—Cumb. Times.

SWANTON, Jan. 15, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN.—The friends and parents of the children met on Tuesday, 14th inst., at Little England school house for the purpose of seeing how the teacher, L. M. Davis, was getting along with the scholars, when we found a well organized school, twenty-six in number, quiet, orderly and attentive. Rev. W. E. George delivered a short address which seemed to delight the scholars very much. The scholars seem to have entered upon their studies with the most sanguine expectations of finding in every branch of study an exhaustive fund of delight and seem to pride themselves in the prospect of that success which must ultimately crown their attention to the instructions given. After the school was dismissed the friends present talked about the propriety of making a regular visit, at least once to each month, believing it would be beneficial to themselves as well as to the school.

Yours, truly,

ONE OF THE VISITORS.

NEAR OAKLAND, MD.,

Jan. 21st, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN.—Will you be kind enough to give the following a place in your thrice welcome visitor, THE REPUBLICAN?

Under letter form we will endeavor to show to the unaware the advantages of an incorporated town as we see them exposed to view in the town of Oakland. If you want a complete fall all that is required is to get on the side walk, let go of the fence and turn your head to speak to a friend; then if you don't get it you are accommodated by a dirty faced archer who will trip the most active, to say nothing of the aged and infirm. They will also afford amusement for themselves by frightening your horse, or trying to sting your ear, (as they call it,) without touching your head with the hard, leek-like snow ball; and if they see you pass you may look for a half dozen or more to hang to your sled, and if gently refused will compliment you by tossing your hat or by stinging your ear; they are sure to insult you in some way. If you stop your team you may look, but not in vain, for from one to a dozen crows eagerly devour what you may have on your sled; and if you have a dog to goad your affairs, when you come to look you may find snow, stones, dirt, sticks, &c., which have been thrown at him to cause his departure.

We might fill a page telling you of the incorporation and its laws. Though the above may be amusing to read and also to practice by the street boys and also young men, yet they are made liable facts.

If a corporation is needed elect your men, make your laws, and allow low and degrading habits to be practiced by your own citizens, large and small; but watch the countryman or stranger; let him be imposed upon, and if you see him make the least attempt toward the violation of your laws, take him up—make him pay his "five dollars fine," and send on his way rejoicing, and watch for the next, and thereby gain a good reputation for your lawmakers and officers.

VISITORS.

TELEGRAPHIC.

FLORIDA ELECTION FRAUDS.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 18.—Noble A. Hall, Lieutenant Governor of Florida has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury for conspiracy with others in obtaining false returns of elections in Brevard county. Hall was the Democratic candidate for Congress at the late election from the Second district, and holds a certificate of election from the governor. He is President of the State Senate, now sitting at Tallahassee, and has telegraphed that he will be here to-morrow, without being served with a warrant.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Jan. 20.—Lieut. Gov. Hall has given bond in the sum of $3,000 to appear on day to-day at the United States Circuit Court. His case will probably be tried this week. In the United States Circuit Court the case of the canvassing board of Brevard county, charged with making false returns in the late congressional election, has begun. Several precinct inspectors testified to the alteration and forgery of certificates of election made by them.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Jan. 21.—In the case of the Brevard county canvassing board to-day J. H. Allen, a lawyer, testified that he went to Brevard county on account of a letter purporting to have been written by N. A. Hall, the Democratic candidate for Congress, for the purpose of obtaining a majority of 200 necessary to elect Hall. He had authority to draw for what money he needed to accomplish the purpose. The writs detailed how the arrangements were perfected, and said a plan was agreed upon to burn records of the board after it was accomplished. The work of changing the returns was done, he said, by the deputy of Lee, one of the defendants.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 20.—In the United States circuit court to-day, Judge Bond, presiding, Wm. Robinson, a judge of election in the 15th ward at the late Congressional election, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with having assaulted and hindered a deputy United States marshal while in the discharge of his duty. Judge Bond sentenced him to pay a fine of one hundred dollars and to four months' imprisonment in the city jail.

GOVERNOR HOYT INAUGURATED.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 21.—Henry M. Hoyt was inaugurated Governor of Pennsylvania this morning to succeed Governor Hartranft. The city has been thronged with visiting clubs and political organizations for some days, and the inaugural parade this morning was the largest ever held in this city. It was formed into five grand divisions—the first comprising five brigades of the National Guards of Pennsylvania, numbering about five thousand men; the Governor, Governor elect, Lieutenant Governor, heads of departments, and members of the legislature, escorted by the Washington troop of Chester county; the third and fourth, the various political organizations of the State, numbering over three thousand men; and the fifth, the first department of Harrisburg and the visiting companies.

The Governor's inaugural rejoices at specie resumption, that henceforth we are to produce and exchange actual things, and not gamble in fictitious values. With regard to the maintenance of government by ballot with equal political rights for all, the address says Pennsylvania's attitude on this question is known wherever her name is known, and she will insist upon its enforcement in every State, as certainly as her mountain peaks point to heaven and her rivers roll to the sea.

ARREST OF UNITED STATES OFFICIALS IN ALABAMA.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Information has been received at the Department of Justice of the arrest by warrant of State or United States authority in Alabama, of United States Marshal Turner, the latter being now in jail, and the former having been released on a writ of habeas corpus issued by United States District Judge Bruce.

The circumstances are that a municipal or State court in Selma issued subpoenas to District Attorney Mayer and Marshal Turner, and Mr. Diamond, clerk of the court, commanding them to appear and bring before it the ballot-boxes and ballots used in the elections of last November. These ballot-boxes and ballots were at the time in question being used by the grand jury of the United States Circuit Court sitting at Montgomery as evidence in certain cases therein, pending indictment for violations of the election laws of the United States.

The State court assumed that they were required by it at Selma for similar uses in certain cases, for violation of the State election laws. The officers made due return to the process served upon them to the effect that the ballot boxes and ballots were not in their possession or under their personal control, but were in the custody of the United States Circuit Court. When the process had been thus returned to the State court the judge of the latter instantly issued writs of attachment for the bodies of Mayer and Turner, and directed their commitment for contempt. District Attorney Mayer at this juncture telegraphed to Attorney General Devens for instructions, and was advised to prepare himself for a release under a writ of habeas corpus in the event of the execution of the threat to arrest him.

This he did, and being arrested at Huntsville last Saturday, whether he had gone in attendance upon his official duties, he was released upon a writ issued by Judge Bruce. But Marshal Turner, who was not thus forewarned, was arrested and committed to jail. At the latest accounts he was yet in custody, and under the laws of the State regulating commitments for contempt of State courts would remain in confinement for five days, subject to immediate recommitment as soon as released for another five days so long as the contempt rests against him. Meanwhile the ballot-boxes and ballots remain in the possession of the court, and the cases in which they are to be used as evidence have been adjourned until the April term.

A SICKENING DISEASE FOR POTTER.

WASHINGTON, January 15.—The National Republican of to-morrow will announce the discovery of the fact that the names of the seven electors of Arkansas in 1876 are all signed on the back of the envelope containing the electoral certificate in the handwriting of the same person. The story runs that when Acting Vice President Ferry received the Arkansas certificate he discovered an irregularity therein in the absence of signatures of the electors from the back of the envelope, and permitted it to be sent back to the State for correction, the same as he did in the case of the Louisiana certificate. When it was returned to him he presented it to the two houses in joint convention, and the seven votes of the State were counted for Tilden and Hendricks.

A SEVERELY BULLDOZED PELICAN.

NEW ORLEANS, January 16.—At the session of the Teller Committee to-day Mr. A. J. Bryant, colored, senator from Tennessee, testified: No Republican ticket was nominated because of threats of whites, who said they would consider such action a declaration of war. The night before the election a party of whites, including Messrs. Buckner and Handsborn, came to my house, took me out in my night clothes, carried me to a quarter of a mile and threatened me, saying I had sold out to the blue parties. I denied this, and stated I had not seen any of the leaders of the blue party. They let me go after promising to go to the polls the next day and vote the regular Democratic ticket. I complied with my promise. The party had a rope with them, and said if they were satisfied that I sold out to the blue party they would "put me through."

SENATORIAL CONTEST.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Jan. 20.—The Democratic caucus to-night nominated D. W. Voorhees for United States Senator for the long term by a unanimous vote. For the short term George W. Julian and Mr. Voorhees were put in nomination. Julian received 5 votes and Voorhees 67. Seventy-five votes will be necessary to elect. The Republicans have nominated General Ben. Harrison for the long term and Hon. Godlove S. Orth for the short term.

MILWAUKEE, January 20.—The Republican caucus at Madison re-nominated this evening. Up to midnight twenty-five ballots were taken, with varying results. The prospects are good for an all-night sitting. The twenty-fifth ballot stood—Keyes 20, Carpenter 23, Howe 20, Washburn 5, McFarbridge 1.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLS., January 20.—The Democrats of the legislature in caucus to-night nominated General J. C. Black for United States Senator. The National members held a caucus and nominated Hon. Alex. Campbell, of LaSalle.

HARRISBURG, PA., January 20.—The Democrats of the Pennsylvania Legislature met in caucus this evening, and after several ballots decided to cast their votes for Hon. Heister Clynner for United States Senator.

ALBANY, N. Y., January 20.—The Republican caucus to-night unanimously nominated Roscoe Conkling for the United States Senate. The Democratic caucus is sitting in secret session.

NEW ORLEANS, January 20.—In the Louisiana senatorial caucus the following vote was taken without a choice: Eastis, 32; Kenner, 26; Jonas, 21; Lewis 8. The rest were scattering.

ALBANY, N. Y., January 20.—The Democratic caucus nominated Lieutenant Governor Dorsheimer for United States Senator.

In France denunciation of the blighted bondholder is never heard. When some time ago M. Leon Say, the French Minister of Finance, proposed the refunding of the debt at a lower rate of interest the great leader of the people, Gambetta, successfully opposed the scheme on the ground that those who evicted their patriots by lending their money to the government in her hour of need and trial were entitled to all the interest originally allowed, and should not be compelled to take a lower rate. In some parts of this country the fact of having lent money to the government is treated as a species of rascality; bondholders are reviled and despised, and the dead cats and rotten eggs of journalistic denunciation would fall thickly upon a statesman who would dare utter such a plea in behalf of the bondholders as did Gambetta. Why is there such a difference in popular sentiment between France and this country? Simply for the reason that in France the people have a universal habit of blotting themselves with the securities of their government. At least half the families in France have money invested in government bonds. The French notes can be had in denominations of $20 and upwards, and it is considered an honor to have one's name registered as a creditor of the government. The French loan of 1872, issued to pay off the indemnity to Germany, was so eagerly sought for that the popular subscriptions amounted to thirteen times the amount of the loan. No one would dare do so much as even to branch Pendletonism in France, and a party that would promulgate such doctrines as has the Democratic party in this country for a number of years past would be reprobated as worse than Communards and wiped out of existence. The wide diffusion of government securities among the people of this country would undoubtedly quell a great deal of rampant demagoguery on financial questions, and we think the proposition for issuing 3 per cent. certificates for greenbacks in amounts as low as $10, convertible into 1 per cent. bonds, is a good scheme to accomplish this purpose. It would constitute an absolutely safe mode for the investment of savings and encourage habits of thrift.

ONE WAY TO LIVE CHEAPLY.

Some of the working people of Gaston, Virginia, are evidently not descendants of Micawber. They do not "wait for something to turn up," but turn it up themselves by forming a co-operative association which "furnishes all its members with constant employment at fair wages and boards them all in one large family, thus reducing the cost of living one half." A report, which does not state clearly the scheme of the association says that none of their members have been idle a day during the past nine months. They have a farm and garden, and, after providing each other with the necessities of life, have something left to sell. Schemes of co-operation like this are not new. In the hands of earnest, conscientious men, they can undoubtedly be made successful when they do not attempt too much interference with the personal liberty of their members. The family, however, is a large enough society to try the experiment with.

DESOLATION OF PALESTINE.—In

Palestine you are nearly as much in the Wilderness as in Arabia; as to the inhabitants, they are precisely the things which do not exist, for all you can tell, except in the towns and villages you pass through. You can ride on day after day, and you rise over each hill and sink into each valley, and except an occasional solitary traveler with his servant and his muleteer, or a Turkish officer with his party, rarely does a moving object appear upon the landscape. No cattle are on the land and no passengers on the highways. The loneliness strikes you more like that of the desert, for it seems unnatural, because here there should be life and there is none. Sometimes you may make out at a distance on the hillside a single figure, a man on a donkey. It is the only moving thing you can detect all around. From Jerusalem to Beyrout you can scarcely light on one single scene of rural industry—not one scene of life that can be compared with those on the Arab pastures from the top of Jebel el Safar to the wells of el Milen. There, in places, the country was full of people, and children and flocks and herds—a rejoicing picture of pastoral existence in all its wealth; while here in the country of tillage, and town, and villages, the whole land seems to lie under a spell.

ONE WAY TO LIVE CHEAPLY.

Some of the working people of Gaston, Virginia, are evidently not descendants of Micawber. They do not "wait for something to turn up," but turn it up themselves by forming a co-operative association which "furnishes all its members with constant employment at fair wages and boards them all in one large family, thus reducing the cost of living one half." A report, which does not state clearly the scheme of the association says that none of their members have been idle a day during the past nine months. They have a farm and garden, and, after providing each other with the necessities of life, have something left to sell. Schemes of co-operation like this are not new. In the hands of earnest, conscientious men, they can undoubtedly be made successful when they do not attempt too much interference with the personal liberty of their members. The family, however, is a large enough society to try the experiment with.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT, OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS, GRAIN CHAFERS, A SPECIALTY. Also an Improved Hand Sown Sower. J. L. Y. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 16th, 1879. Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland,

On Monday, Feb. 10th, 1879, at which time Road Supervisors' bonds will be approved, and such other business transacted as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

1 18 3

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 15th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will receive Sealed Proposals, until 12 o'clock M., February 10th, 1879, for the building of a Bridge across Yough River, in District No. 2. Known as the Pike Bridge, between Guard's and Selby'sport.

Said bridge to be built according to the following plan and specifications: To be built on the present abutments, but raised one foot higher; length 20 feet; width of span 16 feet; stone pier in center, said bridge built on the same plan as the Friendsville bridge. Timbers and pier to be of the same dimensions as above bridge. To be as wide as present abutments will allow, and covered with good pine shingles.

Said bridge to be completed on or before the first day of July next, amount to be levied at annual levy of 1879.

The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order County Commissioners.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

1 18 3

Estate of Henry Walter, Deceased. THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters of Administration on the estate of HENRY WALTER, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 1st day of July, 1879. They may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hand this 11th day of January, 1879.

MARGARET A. WALTER, Administratrix.

1 18 3

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

An effort to increase the pay of the Philadelphia teachers has just been defeated.

The first Church Almanac in America was published by William Bradford in 1704.

In 1860 the Catholic population in this country was 3,000,000, now it is 6,400,000.

Good teachers are so plenty in Boston that the normal school, which annually costs $64,000, will be abolished.

Thirty-one Presbyteries vote in favor and eighteen against the overture for reduction of representation in the Presbyterian General Assembly.

Many of the Methodist pastors of Chicago expect to follow the Week of Prayer with continued religious meetings, and the Northern Christian Advocate thinks the conditions for a good revival are ripe.

Archbishop Carroll, of Cincinnati, has asked the Pope for the appointment of a coadjutor Bishop. The Archbishop is now seventy-nine years of age, and feels the need of some relief in managing the financial interests of his diocese.

The Catholic churches of Rome represent, in a certain sense, the trades of that city. There are churches for cochmen, for stablemen, butchers, carpenters, clock-makers, plasterers, book-binders, bakers, wine-sellers, tanners, tailors, boot-makers, butchers, inn-keepers, boatmen and scores of other trades.

The Congregational ministers of Chicago in discussing popular amusements at their meeting last week generally agreed that cards, billiards, theater, dancing, etc., were not evils in themselves, but had become evils, and that the line of true reform lay, not against amusements per se, but in overcoming evil with good.

Missionaries of the Sunday-School Union in the Northwest have organized since March 1, 275 new schools, and added 985 others, all of which have a membership of 29,000; 1,061 religious meetings were held, and 2,799 families visited. The noble work has been done at less than one-half the cost of similar criminal conviction in a Western court of justice.

There has been an increase of 439 schools in South Carolina during the past year. The school attendance is 116,249; of this number 62,121 are colored pupils. The increase in attendance since last year is 13,813. There are 2,091 white teachers and 1,026 colored ones, only forty-nine of the whole number being Northerners. Male teachers receive average monthly wages of $12.16, and female teachers the disproportionate amount of $8.70.

The English revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament completed Dec. 13 their second and final revision. The company have eighty-five sessions and have spent 337 days on the work, having commenced in June, 1870. The total number of the company is twenty-four, and the average rate of attendance throughout has been fifteen. There were no suggestions of any further suggestions that may be made by the American company, and the adjustment of some questions which have been reserved till the end.

The Man Who Reinforced Grant in Chattanooga and Altered the March to the Sea.

Major Gen. Donald Craig McCullum, who died at his home in New York, recently had been aiding since Decoration Day, when he took a severe cold while riding with Gen. Hancock and Gen. Schofield. His disease terminated in erysipelas of the liver and abdominal dropsy, and he suffered from hemorrhages. Gen. McCullum was a Scotchman. His father had emigrated to this country, and settled down as a tailor in Rochester, N. Y. As young Donald did not like his father's trade, he started out in the world for himself, with his entire property, consisting of clothing, tied up in a handkerchief. He had, however, a definite determination to learn the carpenter's trade, and he worked his way to London's Lane, where he settled and married Mary McNabb. On his return to Rochester, with his wife and one child, he began business as a carpenter, and went to work on the Erie Railway. He was gradually advanced in the department of the Erie Railway, but he suffered from hemorrhages. Gen. McCullum was a Scotchman. His father had emigrated to this country, and settled down as a tailor in Rochester, N. Y. As young Donald did not like his father's trade, he started out in the world for himself, with his entire property, consisting of clothing, tied up in a handkerchief. He had, however, a definite determination to learn the carpenter's trade, and he worked his way to London's Lane, where he settled and married Mary McNabb. On his return to Rochester, with his wife and one child, he began business as a carpenter, and went to work on the Erie Railway. He was gradually advanced in the department of the Erie Railway, but he suffered from hemorrhages.

When Grant was cornered near Chattanooga, in 1863, it became necessary to send him some veteran troops in haste. President Lincoln determined to send the Eleventh and Twelfth Army Corps from the Army of the Potomac, but some old army officers estimated that it would take six weeks to forward the troops. Gen. McCullum was sent for, and he said he could transport the troops to Grant's headquarters in seven days. His confident assertion was bolstered by some of the officers, but the President and Secretary Stanton intrusted him with the undertaking. He worked night and day, sending off train after train with troops, and in the specified time he had the two army corps in Chattanooga in time to meet the emergency, and for this service he received the thanks of the Department. In the performance of this undertaking, Gen. McCullum was obliged to arrest Maj. Gen. Carl Schurz for interfering with his arrangements. Gen. McCullum constructed over 2,000 miles of railroad, and expended over $12,000,000 in his department. He very materially promoted the success of Sherman's march to the sea, and it is remarkable that Gen. Sherman, in his "Memoirs," has said nothing of the Department of Military Railroads, to which he owed so much.

At the close of the war, the men employed on the United States Military Railroads service found an unexpected hospital fund on hand amounting to about $10,000. A committee was appointed to dispose of it, consisting of Maj. O. H. Stevens, Jacob Van Dyke and John Wyman, who finally concluded to purchase a handsome diamond pin for $7,000. This was presented to Gen. McCullum, a dinner given in Delmonico's. Subsequently James Fisk, Jr., persuaded Gen. McCullum to sell the pin to him. That is the history of Jim Fisk's celebrated pin. Gen. McCullum was privately known to be something of a miser. Among his possessions was "The Water Mill," with the refrain:

The mill never grinds again with water that has passed.
A small volume of these poems was privately published for circulation among his friends in 1870. But while he was in business the General always said he did not wish it to be known that he wrote poetry, and he should be taken for an old fool. N. Y. Sun.

A Remarkable Murder Case.

There is now pending in the Circuit Court of this county the case of the State of Missouri against Adam Bollinger, the history of which will "point a moral, or adorn a tale." The defendant is a negro, about thirty-five years old, quite black and positively illiterate, although his physiognomy indicates plainly a low order in the moral scale, yet there is nothing indicative of any marked degree of murderous instincts in him. He was raised in this county by Mrs. Nancy Bollinger, who was up to his emancipation. In October, 1862, being eighteen or nineteen years old, he committed the offense with which he is charged, the victim being also a slave, and the property of Judge John J. Mathews. Both the men had wives, the woman being the late C. Y. Buford's slave, who resided three miles northeast of Fredericktown upon his farm. It is said that the trouble which led the negro into the fatal deed arose out of some undue familiarity which Jack, the murdered man, had taken with Adam's wife. It is believed to be pretty certain that for some length of time before the killing there had been a very bad state of blood between the men. On the evening of Oct. 20, 1862, the men were making their way to the home of their wives at Buford's farm. Adam was in company with a slave of Mr. T. J. Nibling, near De Jarnes, H. Gosch's farm, on the road, near the bridge; Jack went into this road out of the one which led from his master's and just ahead of Adam in the direction of Buford's. Adam saw Jack, followed and seized him in a violent way; some conversation ensued, and then an altercation, when Adam sprang upon Jack with an ordinary butcher knife and, it is thought, stabbed him several times. Jack got away and started to run, at the same time appealing to Adam not to kill him; Adam pursued, and in running, Jack fell, when Adam leaped upon the prostrate man and stabbed him to death. Adam then fled, and was not heard of by the authorities until some time in July last, nearly sixteen years after the deed of blood which impelled his flight. His arrest was effected through the instrumentality of the son of the murdered man, who for all that period of time had made it his duty to hunt the murderer of his slain father. Adam was found in St. Louis, where he had been for some time under the assumed name of John Allen, was brought to this court for trial and—excepting whilst here during court—has been confined in the Farmington jail. During the court held in December, the adjourned September term, after a continued session, the defendant, upon his application and by consent of the Prosecuting Attorney, had the continuance set aside. Hereupon the defendant offered to withdraw his plea of "not guilty" and plead guilty to murder in the second degree. The Prosecuting Attorney accepted the offer, and upon his statement the court ordered the plea of guilty of murder in the second degree to be entered, after which the court granted the defendant to imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years. The defendant then moved an arrest of judgment upon the ground that the plea entered would not support the judgment, and that being at the time of the commission of the alleged offense a slave, and the deceased being also a slave. The court sustained the motion and arrested the judgment, and from which the defendant appealed to this court. The case presents many intricate points of law, and many problems of law and morals. The law questions presented are these: At the time of the killing, was it an offense against the laws of Missouri for one slave to kill another slave; if so, what was the offense and what was the punishment? Criminal laws are construed strictly; an act, though defined to be an offense when committed by a person capable under the law, is not an offense when committed by one wanting the legal status at the time, nor can it be, by analogy or otherwise, construed into an offense.

The Constitution of Missouri then in force provided that "prosecutions for crimes slaves shall not be deprived of an impartial jury; and a slave convicted of a capital offense shall suffer the same degree of punishment, and no other, that would be inflicted on a free white person for a like offense; and courts of justice before whom slaves shall be tried shall assign them counsel for their defense; and, "any person who shall maliciously deprive of life or dismember a slave shall suffer such punishment as would be inflicted for the like offense if it were committed on a free white person." The statutes then in force provided that "every murder which shall be committed by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, burglary or other felony, shall be deemed murder in the first degree." All other kinds of murder at common law, not herein declared to be manslaughter, or justifiable or excusable homicide, shall be deemed murder in the second degree." Persons convicted of murder in the first degree shall suffer death; those convicted of murder in the second degree shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than ten years." "When any slave shall be convicted of felony, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, the court before whom such conviction shall be had shall sentence the offender to receive on his bare back any number of stripes, not exceeding thirty-nine." The State does not, and neither does the Constitution, anywhere define the term "person" in such a way as to include a slave, or are the terms "slaves" and "person" anywhere used in the statute as synonymous when applied to the slave.

The question then is—was a slave under the then law "a person" or "a reasonable creature in being," or was he mere property, or, as the negro him self put it, "could he, being property, like a horse, be any more guilty of property, than would one horse in killing another horse?" There is no case of the kind in the Supreme Court reports. Fredericktown (Mo.) Journal.

Notable Persons Who Have Passed Away in 1878.
January.—Alfonso Della Marmora, Emperor of Italy, in his 58th year; Gen. John O'Neal, the Fenian leader; Demetrius Bulgariis, the Greek statesman; Samuel Bowles, of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, 56; Sir Edward Creasey, author of the "Sixteen Decisive Battles of the World," and other histories, 67; Sir W. Stirling Maxwell, writer on Spain, and second husband of the Hon. Mrs. Norton; Bishop Domenech, of Pittsburgh; Dr. John Hildebrand, the metaphysician, 90; N. A. Nitrasoff, the great Russian poet, 56.
February.—George Cruikshank, the caricaturist, 83; Pope Pius IX, 86; Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy; Alexander Duff, the noted missionary, 71; A. M. Conrad, Secretary of War under President Fillmore, 73; Father Saechi, the Jesuit astronomer, 59; Townsend Harris, ex-United States Consul General, 73; Claude Bernard, the French physiologist.
March.—Julius Robert Meyer, discoverer of the mechanical equivalent of heat; F. W. Hacklander, the traveler, 61; B. F. Wade, in the 78th year of his age, one of the Adams printing press, 73; Count Schlopiss, Italian statesman.
April.—Ex-Chief Justice Tyler Bigelow, of Massachusetts, 67; Rev. George Putnam, leader of Unitarian ministry, 71; W. M. ("Boss") Tweed, 55; William Orton, Western Union Telegraph Company, 52; the Earl of Leitrim, 72, murdered.
May.—Earl Russell, 86; Catharine Beecher, 77; Robert Grant, English statesman, 71; Charles Morgan, the steamboat proprietor, 83; John Morrissey, 47; Murray Hoffman, the jurist; Jonathan Walker, Whittier's "Man With the Branded Hand"; John May, son of John May, in his 84th year; Dr. Charles Hodge, the Princeton theologian, 80; Marshall Baring, D. Hilliers, 83; Mercedes, Queen of Spain, 18; the ex-King of Hanover, 73; Sarah Helen Whitman, poetess, 53; the Emperor of Morocco, 47; Sir George Back, the English Polar voyager, 81; Judge Sydney Brees, of Illinois, ex-United States Senator.
July.—Dr. John Bowler, anti-Catholic, 83; Dr. James C. Ayer, 60; Circuit Judge Elkan Shipley, 57.
August.—President Raymond, of Vassar College, 64; George Gilliland, the Scottish author; Mrs. G. L. Prentiss, a popular religious writer; R. Upkink, author of the Cyclopaedia of American Literature; Maria Christina, widow of Ferdinand VII. of Spain, 72; ex-Gov. Padelford, of Rhode Island, 71; J. A. Inglis, President of the South Carolina Secession Convention.
September.—The King of Borneo; Julius Mueller, the German theologian and metaphysician; ex-Gov. Haught, of California, 74; H. Petermann, the German geographer.
October.—Lord Chelmsford, ex-Chancellor, 81; Rear Admiral Paulding, U. S. N., 81; Gideon J. Pillow, C. S. A.; Duplein, Bishop of Orleans, 76; the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, 64; L. A. Cardinal Cullen, of Ireland, 73; J. H. Kilpatrick, Ohio agriculturist, 55; deev Nemehiah Adams (Dr. "Southsirk"), 72.
November.—J. S. Fahy, Swiss "dictator," Oliver Phelps Brown, "the physician whose sands of life were nearly run out," Saybrook, Conn., 55; Theodore Helm, German rationalist theologian, 63; Lewis Tremain, New York politician, 59; L. Z. Gooley, of the Lady's Book, 74; T. B. Powers, the Philadelphia chemist, worth $10,000,000, 65; Heller (W. H. Palmer), "the magician," 48; George H. Lewis, English literature, 61.
December.—Bishop John Wilmer, of Louisiana; Bayard Taylor, 51; Alice, Grand Duchess of Hesse Darmstadt, 53; ex-Congressman Williams, of Michigan; ex-President Leonard Woods, Jr., of Bowdoin College, 71; Sir Wm. Hayter, chief clerk and manager of the Liberal party in England, 87; Henry Dawson, the English landscape painter; Mrs. Eliza Everett, daughter of Robert Burns' oldest son and namesake.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Mrs. Jones, how is your health this morning? Thank you, madam, much improved. I bought a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup last night, and after the first dose my cough has been checked. I slept well and have not coughed since this morning.

Let a man set for two years on a barrel at a political corner grocery, and he is apt to think himself good enough to be appointed judge.—New Orleans Picayune.

A colored man who emigrated from South Carolina to Liberia writes home, complainingly, that it is impossible to get land, and roast monkey without land is mighty dry eating.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.
—Perhaps it is not generally known that the wicks of all kinds of lamps, if steeped in vinegar and then well dried, increase the brilliancy of the light ten per cent.
—King Cake.—Three quarters of a pound of butter, one and a quarter pounds of sugar, one nutmeg, six eggs, and cup of milk; flour to make an ordinary batter.
—Potato Crust for Meat Pies.—One teaspoonful of cream to six good-sized potatoes boiled and mashed fine; add salt and flour enough to roll; handle it as little as possible.
—Poverty Cakes.—One pint of milk, one teaspoonful of saleratus, two eggs. Make them just still enough with Indian meal to work into balls, and boil them in hot fat. To be split open and eaten with butter.
—Beef Loaf.—One and one-half pounds of beef-steak chopped very fine and free from gristle; two cups of rolled cracker, fine; one cup of cold water; one-half cup of butter; salt and pepper to suit the taste; bake till done.
—Corn-Starch Cake.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, two cups of flour, two cups of corn-starch, four eggs; one cup of milk; one teaspoonful of soda, and two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar; pinch of salt; flavor to taste.

—It used to be the custom to soak lard in cold water for twenty-four hours before "trying out." This was thought necessary to remove the blood and make it white and clean. More modern housewives, some of them, have learned that it is just as well to omit the soaking, as the lard purifies itself during the boiling process.
—When wet boots are taken off fill them quite full with dry oats. This grain has great fondness for damp, and will rapidly absorb the least vestige of it from the wet boots. As it quickly and completely takes up the moisture, it swells and fills the boot with a tightly fitting last, keeping its form good and drying the leather without hardening it.

Some of the most valuable constituents of the wheat are left in the bran, and the fine flour is not sufficiently laxative to meet the requirements of most systems, so it is advisable to take frequently or systematically a coarser diet. Graham, cracked wheat, or rice will generally meet this want, or a fair supply of berries or fruits will answer the purpose. Proper attention to the diet will generally obviate the necessity of a resort to physic, and is by far the most forcible course in every aspect of the case.

Castor oil is undoubtedly the best, and therefore the cheapest, for iron axes—which should always be wiped clean. Col. Curtis informs us that his market-wagon would run only two or three miles before requiring to be regreased, when lard was used, but with castor oil it ran sixty miles, and was good for twenty more—a big difference, and worth remembering. He further remarks that "when the wheels are greased with lard, the axle is greased, and wear is lost again, a gain of 150 per cent." by the liberal use of oil.

It is evident that the changed condition of our agriculture must soon compel the employment of skilled hands, and these skilled hands must be educated before they can be employed. Agricultural laborers are composed too largely of a floating, unsettled class, and this must be changed before amendment of the law can be of any avail. They must be composed of a class with settled and definite ends and aims, who are educated to the business as earnestly as mechanics. With such assistance agriculture will be a safe investment. Skilled labor is the immediate demand of the future in agriculture.

Size of Dairy Stock.
The profits of dairying consist not exclusively in the production of milk for dairy goods, but in most economically disposing of the rejected stock, or culling purposes also. In other words, quite a large percentage of our cows unavoidably have to be turned over to the shambles every year by reason of age; loss of one quarter or more of the bag; contracting vicious habits; not suited to the average standard in product of milk for butter or cheese from the amount of live weight and consequent food consumed; looking their milk, milking hard, sucking themselves or various causes, habitual aborting, not keeping in good condition by reason of weak digestive organs, not imparting color pigmentation to their milk so as to make gilt-edged goods, as well as many other facilities that all dairy men have to meet.

Now if we had none of these "outs" to contend with! If the average life of a cow's usefulness was ten years, as many able writers claim, then we would admit that for culter purposes alone so many sections from the small or moderate sized breeds are admissible and even desirable, especially for the South and West, as small cattle will resist heat by radiation better than large ones, and for the same reason large cattle will resist cold better than small ones, which in the dairy belt or latitude gives the preference to large cows. In weeding a well-regulated dairy, about twenty-five per cent annually he thrown out for various causes, and as their rejected value should be subtracted from their first cost, and the loss accounted for, it will readily be seen that a less loss occurs from keeping large cows, as their value for culter purposes is very much more than for small cows of the same age, condition and aggregate weight.

But cows should not be kept as a rule till they are old, and make gilt-edged goods from worn out stock is impracticable; like trying to raise a successful crop from a wornout soil, it is a losing business. Then, too, the insinuation of old cow feed would be avoided. These are the leakages which all dairy men have to meet, and he who looks well after his interests will, when his sheet is properly balanced, find that the large breeds justly lay claim to precedence in handling cows during which time I have had nearly all the improved breeds, and have paid as high as $250 for a cow and as low as $14, and both

WHEAT AND MESS FLOUR.

The present low price for wheat in the New York market is the subject of much comment, and the statement is made that the price now is lower than it has ever averaged before for cash wheat in January. The following tables of average prices for wheat and mess pork in the New York market, for the month of January for the past fifty-three years have been prepared, after much labor and patient research by Mr. Alex. Ray, of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce:

Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.
1829	$1 01	1852	$1 09
1830	1 00	1853	1 02
1831	1 00	1854	1 01
1832	1 15	1855	1 07
1833	1 15	1856	1 07
1834	1 01	1857	1 12
1835	1 25	1858	1 07
1836	1 25	1859	1 07
1837	1 10	1860	1 41
1838	1 05	1861	1 45
1839	1 10	1862	1 45
1840	1 10	1863	1 45
1841	1 10	1864	1 45
1842	1 10	1865	1 45
1843	1 10	1866	1 45
1844	1 10	1867	1 45
1845	1 10	1868	1 45
1846	1 10	1869	1 45
1847	1 10	1870	1 45
1848	1 10	1871	1 45
1849	1 10	1872	1 45
1850	1 10	1873	1 45
1851	1 10	1874	1 45
1852	1 10	1875	1 45
1853	1 10	1876	1 45
1854	1 10	1877	1 45
1855	1 10	1878	1 45
1856	1 10	1879	1 45
1857	1 10	1880	1 45
1858	1 10	1881	1 45
1859	1 10	1882	1 45
1860	1 10	1883	1 45
1861	1 10	1884	1 45
1862	1 10	1885	1 45
1863	1 10	1886	1 45
1864	1 10	1887	1 45
1865	1 10	1888	1 45
1866	1 10	1889	1 45
1867	1 10	1890	1 45
1868	1 10	1891	1 45
1869	1 10	1892	1 45
1870	1 10	1893	1 45
1871	1 10	1894	1 45
1872	1 10	1895	1 45
1873	1 10	1896	1 45
1874	1 10	1897	1 45
1875	1 10	1898	1 45
1876	1 10	1899	1 45
1877	1 10	1900	1 45

Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.
1829	$13 57	1852	$14 43
1830	11 55	1853	13 43
1831	11 55	1854	13 43
1832	11 55	1855	13 43
1833	11 55	1856	13 43
1834	11 55	1857	13 43
1835	11 55	1858	13 43
1836	11 55	1859	13 43
1837	11 55	1860	13 43
1838	11 55	1861	13 43
1839	11 55	1862	13 43
1840	11 55	1863	13 43
1841	11 55	1864	13 43
1842	11 55	1865	13 43
1843	11 55	1866	13 43
1844	11 55	1867	13 43
1845	11 55	1868	13 43
1846	11 55	1869	13 43
1847	11 55	1870	13 43
1848	11 55	1871	13 43
1849	11 55	1872	13 43
1850	11 55	1873	13 43
1851	11 55	1874	13 43
1852	11 55	1875	13 43
1853	11 55	1876	13 43
1854	11 55	1877	13 43
1855	11 55	1878	13 43
1856	11 55	1879	13 43
1857	11 55	1880	13 43
1858	11 55	1881	13 43
1859	11 55	1882	13 43
1860	11 55	1883	13 43
1861	11 55	1884	13 43
1862	11 55	1885	13 43
1863	11 55	1886	13 43
1864	11 55	1887	13 43
1865	11 55	1888	13 43
1866	11 55	1889	13 43
1867	11 55	1890	13 43
1868	11 55	1891	13 43
1869	11 55	1892	13 43
1870	11 55	1893	13 43
1871	11 55	1894	13 43
1872	11 55	1895	13 43
1873	11 55	1896	13 43
1874	11 55	1897	13 43
1875	11 55	1898	13 43
1876	11 55	1899	13 43
1877	11 55	1900	13 43

Year.	Price.	Year.	Price.
1829	$13 57	1852	$14 43
1830	11 55	1853	13 43
1831	11 55	1854	13 43
1832	11 55	1855	13 43
1833	11 55	1856	13 43
1834	11 55	1857	13 43
1835	11 55	1858	13 43
1836	11 55	1859	13 43
1837	11 55	1860	13 43
1838	11 55	1861	13 43
1839	11 55	1862	13 43
1840	11 55	1863	13 43
1841	11 55	1864	13 43
1842	11 55	1865	13 43
1843	11 55	1866	13 43
1844	11 55	1867	13 43
1845	11 55	1868	13 43
1846	11 55	1869	13 43
1847	11 55	1870	13 43
1848	11 55	1871	13 43
1849	11 55	1872	13 43
1850	11 55	1873	13

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1879.

NUMBER 49.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEUGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

L. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
Second & Third Sts. E. of Town.

N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Alder & Main Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Fruit, etc., 312 Second St.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
First St., between Town's Mill and Station.

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second streets.

GEORGE BOLLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.

MILLS.

GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.

OAKLAND WOOLLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

WM. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEORGE F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Snouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

MASON.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First street.

LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumes, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MEIKILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars, and Tobacco, French Confectionery, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, Md., and in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
negotiation of mortgages and collection of debts. Lenses negotiated.

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 20-1879.

THO. J. PEDDER, A. B. GOSDER,
P. D. COLEMAN & SON, JR.,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of
West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 20-1879.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the
Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
Jan. 20-1879.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his usual large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,

Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,

which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and hence their assurance for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

By All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

VALUABLE MILL PROPERTY

AT OAKLAND

FOR SALE.

The subscriber offers at private sale a Valuable Mill, situated on the Yorkhock river,
in the town of Oakland, and now doing a successful business. In connection with its water falling water power, it has also a good
and almost new 20 Horse Power Engine to
which a saw mill can be attached. Its location renders it the most desirable one for general milling purposes of any in the country.
There are also five acres of land, well adapted
for building lots, attached, which will be
sold together or separate at the option of the purchaser. Also a Two and a half story
FRAME DWELLING HOUSE, in good order
and pleasantly situated, with all necessary
buildings attached; either of which will be sold separately or together. Price VERY LOW, and terms easy.

For further particulars, address,
W. A. DAILY,
532 14 Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

850 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.

Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

Serious Times in Europe.

Affairs all over Europe begin to wear a really threatening aspect. In England there are strikes and rumors of more strikes; among the rich financial failures and disasters, and among the poor widespread want and threatened starvation. Outside of the little island the situation is even gloomier. Not to speak of the menacing condition of affairs in Russia,
the whole face of the continent
seems overshadowed with the clouds
of political revolution.

Italy, we are told, is "borne on by a Democratic flood, not to be diked
by the intrigues and make shifts of vulgar mediocrities or petty parliamentary tricksters; the governing classes are hurried irresistibly toward the extremes of radicalism."

Was the last rampart of parliamentary Liberals, and ere long the King and his people will stand face to face.
Unless the King should strengthen his hands before that time, that is likely to be an awful meeting for royalty. It is rarely that a King and his people do come face to face, but when they do meet in the darkness and tumult of a revolution this coming together isapt to be a solemn one for the King. Italy is now said to be going through the same experience that marked the history of France prior to 1789.

Passionate attempt was but one indication out of a hundred. Those acts of outrage and disorder are everywhere, which are the sure forerunners of popular outbreaks.
The King himself is said to have expressed his fears to a foreign ambassador, and private letters are represented as containing apprehensions of a "near catastrophe." The condition of the country "may be summed up in three words—disaffection, indignation and blank terror as to the morrow." How far the Italian Government is responsible for the troubles that are gathering around it cannot be rightly estimated at this distance and with only a general and incomplete knowledge of facts.

The internal condition of German politics is perhaps better known in the United States than that of any other European country. Her communist differ from the communists of Italy and France, both in the causes that have called them into being, and in the objects which they have in hand. They are none the less in earnest for that reason, however, and alt over the empire the mutterings of not distant trouble are to be heard. In Spain and Portugal, too, Socialism has lifted its head, and in France, in spite of Republic anism, Communism in its worst form, instable in its demands, is still crying "give!"

The progress of Republicanism is unable to keep up with its demands, and even M. Gambetta is being left behind by the Radical wave that is sweeping over the country. A partial explanation of the reappearance of the revolutionary spectre in France is to be found in the extreme depression and destitution from which its people are suffering. The great exposition that was to have done so much for France has only increased the general distress, and in the language of the French journals,
"business which went on badly before the exhibition now don't go on
at all."

The prices "of the mere necessities
of life have nearly doubled; strikes and failures have thrust thousands of artisans into the streets, where they must starve or die, and the salaries of those who can still find employment have been diminished." Female labor can now command only from 20 to 25 cents a day, and even the male population, the backbone of France, is said to be becoming discontented and impregnated with communistic doctrines.

Poverty and distress are naturally
the food on which Communism feeds and grows, and the distinctions between mine and thine have not much force to a hungry or starving man.
But the demon of political unrest
which has tormented France so often before, and which, no matter how often cast out, invariably returns to its garish dwelling place, is probably unsuicidal for the dangerous and restless spirit which her politics
are once more beginning to manifest.
England alone of all these countries
would seem to be free from the evil
power and influence of Communism,
and though she is burdened down
with the anxious care of a suffering and overworked population, she has so far been delivered from the awful spectre that is causing the throes
and Powers of the continent to tremble.

The Great Army.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys
are marching," how many of them?
Sixty thousand. Sixty full regiments, every man of which, before twelve months shall have completed their course, will lie down in the grave of the drunkard! Every year during the past decade witnessed the same sacrifice; and sixty regiments stand behind this army ready to take its place. "Tramp, tramp, tramp,"
the sounds come to us in the echoes of the footsteps of the army just extinguished; tramp, tramp, tramp, it comes to us from the camp of the results.
A great tide of life flows restlessly to its death. What in God's name are they fighting for? The privilege of pleasing an appetite, of conforming to a social usage, of filling sixty thousand homes with shame and sorrow, of loading the public with the burden of pauperism, of crowding our prison-houses with felons of detaching from the productive industry of the country, of ruining fortunes and breaking hopes, of breeding disease and wretchedness—of destroying both body and soul. There is no question before the American people to-day that begin to match
in importance, the temperance question.

The question of American slavery was never anything but a baby by the side of this; and we prophesy that within ten years, if not within five, the whole country is awakened to it, and divided upon it. Temperance laws are being passed by the various legislatures, which they must sustain or go over, soul and body, to the liquor interest and influence. Steps are being taken on behalf of the public health, morals
and prosperity, which they must approve by voice or act, or they must consent to be left behind and left out.
There can be no concession, and no compromise on the part of temperance men and no quarter to the foe.
The great curse of our country and of our race must be destroyed.—Dr. J.
G. Holland.

A COUNTY WITHOUT A DRAM
SHOP.—The inhabitants of Edward County, Illinois, do not support any temperance societies or temperance lectures, or spend their time talking about temperance. They decided 25 years ago that no liquor should be sold in the county, and since that day they have sent one person to the penitentiary, and he committed a crime while drunk with whiskey procured in an adjoining county; they support but two paupers, and their jail is empty most of the time. Their taxes are 32 per cent. lower than the adjoining counties, and their terms of a suit occupy three days in the year, while their tax rolls show that they return more property than any other in the State of equal population. This is a case where the minority cannot complain of an invasion of private rights, for the people are unanimously opposed to license
under any circumstances. Families seek the location coming from other parts of the State, as a good place to bring up their children. When confronted with the statistics of the model county, even old timers admit there is something in it—but it evidently is not whiskey.

NORTH CAROLINA'S LIQUOR BILL.
—The Raleigh Observer figures up
the matter as follows: "If the population of the State be 1,070,120 souls,
our people pay $8,500,000 for liquor,
about $1,000,000 for education, and for their religion $269,830. That is, they think eight times as much of whiskey as of Christian faith. This is a most humiliating confession for us to make; and yet we are compelli-ed to admit its truth, for what people give their money for they certainly appreciate. Let us now compare the cost of spirituous or fermented liquors with some of the great farming interests of the State. There are 200,000 bales of cotton raised in North Carolina annually. These bales will average 400 pounds. At 19 cents per pound, this cotton will bring $8,000,000. All the cotton grown in the State will not pay her liquor bill by $600,000. The wheat crop of the State amounts to 1,251, 611 bushels. At $2 a bushel, all the wheat of the State will not pay for about half her liquor bill. The corn crop, which is 18,451,611 bushels, at 60 cents a bushel, will bring but one-third more than is expended
each year for that which impoverishes the State and degrades her people."

The Florida Democratic Returning Board have been returned to the penitentiary.

A HEAVY CONTRACT.—It was mentioned yesterday in The Sun, as a matter of general news, that Clark, Reeves & Co., the contractors for the N. Y. & E. elevated railroad, had arranged with the Phoenix Iron Company, of Phoenixville, Pa., for the manufacture of 80,000,000 pounds of iron girders, columns, braces, &c., for the New York Metropolitan Elevated railroad and its proposed extensions along Eighth and Ninth avenues to the Harlem river. In these times of slack industry a contract covering 40,000 tons of manufactured metal deserves to be more particularly noticed. The Phoenix Company concluded the contract in November, and has already been able to supply about 5,000 tons of the metal needed. The total quantity of iron needed, if manufactured into railroad iron of 56 pounds to the yard, would furnish rails to equip a road 400 miles long. The Phoenix Company, to complete this contract, will be able to give full work, in night and day relays, to from 1,500 to 2,000 hands. The company's shops and mills have a capacity of 1,000 tons a week, and the completion of the contract will realize to the company about $3,000,000. The night gangs will work under the cheerful glare of two of Brush's electric lighting machines. In regard to the method of construction of three new branches of the Metropolitan railroad, (and the simple fact of the speedy extensions proves the success of the plan,) we learn that it will be placed in the centre of all streets over 55 feet in width from curb to curb,
leaving space for carriages on each side, and with space underneath the elevated track for a double-track street railway. Where the street is less than 55 feet between curbs, the columns will be placed on the edge of the sidewalk, and the girders will span the street, leaving the roadway entirely unobstructed. The columns on which the girders are to rest will average in height about 16 feet, the shortest being 12 feet and the longest over 56 feet; these are to be placed where the ground is depressed, so as to carry the road on a level. All the iron used in constructing these roads
is required to stand a test of 50,000 pounds to the square inch, and the iron for the rivets must stand 60,000
to the square inch, and the stretch
before breaking 15 per cent.

The alarming prevalence of diptheria in this country this winter has turned the attention of the medical fraternity to the malady with renewed vigor and there is a hope that one of these days we will know more about its pathology and treatment.
The disease derived its name seventy years ago from Britton, who had given it considerable attention on account of the epidemic at Tours.
Some authorities claim that the disease has been in existence ever since medical science had a place in the world, while others gave it a more modern origin. One thing is certain, and that is that while no specific has been found for the treatment of the disease it is not necessarily fatal, as it was once thought to be, and the percentage of cure is growing larger every year. Dr. Parr, of Liverpool, England, who has given considerable attention to diptheria, declares that it belongs essentially to cold weather and is more likely to affect the healthful portions of cities than those which are under the sanitary standard. It is his belief that diptheria cannot exist where other forms of fever are indigenous, and he holds that there is no prevention for it save isolation. The fact that children are more generally attacked than adults
is attributed to the gregarious nature
of children and the opportunities which are afforded for contagious contact in the schools. The reports of the Registrar General of England
shows some remarkable statistics concerning this disease. From 1855, the year when the malady raged so fiercely in France, down to the year 1876 the deaths in England numbered 81,361, or 78 per cent. of the whole mortality. The disease was most virulent in 1859, when it caused 3
per cent. of the aggregate mortality, and the mildest in 1872 when the deaths were only 42 per cent. of the whole. In the decade between 1861 and 1871 there died in England from diptheria 18,467 males and 20,987 females. Of this number 40,000 were children under five years of age and 25 per cent. were between five and ten years of age. These figures give an approximate idea of the ravages of the disease in thickly populated communities. It is the experience of the medical men of England that there is no preventive like the closing of schools when once the malady

gains a foothold.

Changing a County Seat.

GRAFTON, Jan. 21.—At the State election in October last, the question of removing the county seat of Taylor county to Grafton was submitted to a vote of the people. It requiring three-fifths of the vote cast to carry it. The result of the vote cast was 1115 for, and 800 against. The court, at the November term, composed of a majority of the Justices, they refused to make and declare Grafton
the county seat, they being opposed to the removal, and thus the matter stood until the January term, which commenced to-day. Meanwhile, States Attorney McCormick, attorneys Mason and Rollbaugh, of Grafton, and Col. Morrow, of Fairmont, determined on a grand-coup d'etat,
which was successfully planned and carried out yesterday. They procured a mandamus from the Judge of the Circuit Court, hired three teams to haul the records in, and twenty men had been summoned from Grafton in cases they knew nothing about,
proceeded to Pruntytown, the former county seat, five miles distant, and opened courts as usual. [The Pruntytown people suspecting no raid on their "idol," the county seat, nor did Armstrong, late County and Circuit Court Clerk, the shrewd and most active opponent against removal.
The docket was called, but Prosecuting Attorney McCormick either objected or was not ready for any case until the Court House case was reached, when Colonel Morrow stated
the case and presented the mandamus.
Justices Martin and Poe made the order declaring Grafton the county seat, and ordering its immediate removal. Justice Gray, President of the Court, excitedly and solemnly protesting. Court was adjourned to meet at Grafton at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The books and records were loaded in the wagons amid the greatest excitement and contestation prevailed among the Pruntytown people, who gathered in large numbers to see what was going on and how it had been done. As the teams, accompanied by some thirty men, part mounted as an escort, approached the edge of our town, some four engines in the yard commenced blowing their whistles, and pandemonium reigned supreme for several minutes. Every man, woman and child came rushing to the doors
to see the fire, this being our signal for fire. The court opened at Brinkman's Hall just three hours from the time it left Pruntytown. The new courthouse will be erected early in the spring.

An old Balton is negro, who had emigrated to Liberia years ago, ordered a quantity of Dr. Hull's Cough Syrup a short time ago, stating that although Coughs and Colds were not frequent in Africa he would not like to be without it in his family.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old and Reliable "STANDARD." The
price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the at-
tachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people, far beyond that ever yet attain-
ed by any other machine at any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are leaving the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "STANDARD." Knowing from
experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can outsell
all other Machines, where the super-
ior quality and low price is made
known. This splendid Machine
combines all the improvements. Is
far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a Serviceable Sewing Machine. In
every particular, that will outlast
any Machine, and at a price far down
below any other. It is thoroughly
warranted for five years. Kept in order free of charge. And sent to any part of the Country for examination
by the customer before payment of
the bill. We can predict equally as
large a demand for them in this
section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured
should write direct to the Factory.
And enterprising persons wishing to
seize the chance should apply for so
desirable an agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper.
Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor., Broadway and Clinton Place, New York.

—Geo. M. Walter, No. 108 George St., Baltimore, used every remedy for Rheumatism he ever heard of,
until he tried Keller's Roman Liniment, which entirely cured him.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
IN ADVANCE.
TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion $1 per square of 10 lines;
if continued for each additional insertion, 50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

SATURDAY, FEB. 1, 1879.

Two of the Florida Democratic election rogues who had been sentenced to the penitentiary escaped from the county jail at Jacksonville last Friday night.

The President has signed the arrears of pensions bill, as passed by Congress, and now that body will have to provide means to meet the outlay, variously estimated at from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000.

The only really able editorial on the Mathews side of the Republican split, outside of Baltimore, is that of the Oakland REPUBLICAN. It is positive, erudite and vindictive—yet able within.—Cham. Times.

The rapidity with which the new four per cent. bonds are being purchased, is almost phenomenal. What makes it all the more remarkable is the fact that the large sales that have been made since the first of the month have been made on the merits of the bonds themselves, and have not been owing to any extraneous aids. Within a period of two weeks, no less than seventy million dollars worth of these bonds have been subscribed for, and judging from the record of the first month, it seems highly probable that the syndicate will not find a large amount of unsold bonds waiting for it after the 30th of June. The most influential syndicate that was ever formed, could not have pushed the sale of these bonds as they have pushed themselves, and the eagerness that has been displayed on all hands to obtain them, possesses peculiar interest and significance.

The commissioner of pensions on Tuesday issued a circular letter with reference to the bill granting arrears of pensions, approved by the President on Saturday last. The circular notifies all pensioners entitled to the benefits of the bill that they will not require the assistance of a claim agent in obtaining the amount due them, and that no claim agent will be recognized in the matter. This is the proper course for the commissioner to take, although it will not be relished by the claim agents, to whose efforts in stirring up pensioners the passage of the bill may be mainly attributed. The claim agents expected to get at least half of the amount to be drawn from the treasury. Under this bill a private soldier who may have lost two limbs will be entitled, it is said, to arrears of pensions amounting to the sum of over $11,000.

South Carolina is financially in a very unfortunate condition, according to this from the Charleston News: "There is no money in the state treasury except what is put there to be paid as interest on the public debt. All the appropriations made by the last legislature are exhausted, and the various salaried officers of the state will have to wait for their next month's salaries till the taxes come in in April or May, or borrow money at 1 or 11 per cent. a month at the banks."

Louisiana is in default upon the January interest on the state debt. The debt in round numbers amounts to $12,000,000—about a million less than before the war. The Warmoth and Kellogg governments met the interest payments, but the Nichols government, which was to do so much, fails. There is a growing repudiation sentiment in the state, particularly in the northern parishes, and there is a mania for a constitutional convention, which will probably make another sealing down of indebtedness.

On Wednesday of last week two Democrats assisted in furnishing to the public a definition of the sort of loyalty that backs Southern war claims, which the people would do well to ponder over. Our extracts are made from the Congressional Record. General Bragg, of Wisconsin, said:

"Loyalty is a sentiment. There are gentlemen upon this side of the House who served in the Confederate army who can furnish more proofs probably that they were loyal to this government than we could who fought upon the Federal side, because they can prove by witnesses that what they fought for and what they sought to maintain was a government upon the principles of our fathers, and that we Northern men had seen fit to attempt to tear down the structure that our fathers left us, and that they were loyal and we were disloyal."

"Loyalty is a sentiment; and when you undertake to prove by depositions that this man was loyal or that that man was loyal, you can bring up one of his field hands to swear that he heard old massa say when he did not get proper pay for stores that the Confederates had taken from him, or when his son was refused as a soldier in the Southern Government, and that such tyrants as old Bragg, who shot down soldiers for visiting their homes when passing on the march, should not be upheld as loyal representatives of the government. You can prove by that negro how he heard old massa say that day he was opposed to the Confederates. Now, that is ex parte testimony. The affidavits do not cover the whole ground, and it is not in our power to sift such evidence. Only the other day I heard a gentleman, a member of this House from North Carolina, say he knew of a woman from North Carolina who had proved a large claim in the Court of Commissioners of Southern Claims and had established her loyalty; while, if they had called upon him, he could have proved to the court, conclusively, that she and all her family and friends were, heart and soul, friends of the Confederacy."

Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, said:

"Now, I agree with the member from Wisconsin (Mr. Bragg) that the percentage of 'loyalty' in the Southern States during the war was a good deal less than one per cent. I understand to say that the Southern man who was born there, who was reared there, and who was identified with the Southern people, could have only been loyal when he entered the Confederate army and did his full duty as a soldier in the armies of the South. Such men were the only loyal men in the South. They were loyal to their country; they were loyal to their God; they were loyal to the noblest and highest and holiest emotions that ever animated the human heart."

It was well said by Gen. Bragg in the course of his remarks that no nation is responsible for the destruction of property in the course of war in insurrectionary territory. Congress should now and forever bar all war claims from consideration.

The Local Option Party Revived.

While the Democratic managers are making sates for the state campaign which may yet be broken, the Temperance, or Local Option, party is quietly planning for what they hope to be a successful fight for the legislature, which they will ask to pass a law for local option throughout the state, or the greater portion of it. While no meeting of the City Convention of the party has been held since December, the work of organization is quietly, but persistently, being prosecuted. It is the intention of the more conservative of the temperance leaders that prominent merchants, though they may not belong to any temperance organization, or be identified in the movement, shall be nominated by the party as candidates for the legislature. The nominations are to be irrespective of party, and the object is to secure good men for the General Assembly, instead of the ward politicians who now infest the state capital at every session of that body. The men to be chosen are expected to give their votes for the passage of a local option bill, leaving it to each ward of the city and each district in the counties to vote for "liquor or no liquor."—Balto. American.

It looks at present as though Hamilton was high in favor with his party, and we read of his frequent leaves at Barnum's with the work-workers, who are said to be all powerful in party manipulation. But he should not be too confident of the result. He has already experienced the mortification of being deserted by his friends, when his need of them was greatest. The same trick may be played again, doubtless would be if sufficient prospects of success present themselves.

Nomination is not exactly equivalent to election. If the new Supervisors of Election carry out their promises the opportunities for fraudulent voting in Baltimore will be largely diminished, and a vigorous effort made by a united Republican party may return a Republican as Governor. The result is possible and should be kept in view. The people are growing restive under Democratic rule, and its overthrow in this State is not unlikely at an early day.—Fredrick Examiner.

Mr. Moody is entirely satisfied with the result of his work in Baltimore. At a meeting Monday night twenty-five converted young men, one of them formerly a skeptic, related their experience and gave praise for their conversion. Mr. Moody said he "had labored for years in Chicago, and as he thought with success, but he had not seen anything to equal the feeling which is being manifested in Baltimore."

More pig iron was sold last year than in any year since the panic.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27, 1879.

From the tone of discussion during the past week, it seems evident that a majority of the House are about prepared to vote for a square reversal of our foreign commercial policy but the Bourbons of the Senate seem disposed to throw themselves back on a party dogma to justify the opposition they are making to any change from the old rule in which we have been revolving since the beginning of the war. It shows the pitiable straits to which they have been reduced by the trade statistics of that period and by the steady decadence of our shipping interests which has reduced us from one of the first to one of the most insignificant among the maritime nations of the world in less than two decades. One of the most telling speeches since the discussion began was that of Mr. Blaine advocating an immediate abandonment of a policy that has annihilated our merchant marine. His criticisms on our practice of spending millions annually on a naval establishment for which we have no use, was especially effective. The cautious manner of his opponents, striving to give the appearance of answering him while only intent on evading his points, is pretty good evidence that they regard them as unanswerable. Certainly any one can see without Senatorial aid that we have next to no shipping, save that engaged in coastwise trade, to require protection, and that it certainly requires very little naval supervision. It only requires a glance at the enormous aggregate voted to our navy since the war to verify the correctness of all he has alleged in that direction; and many who have made the matter a special study agree with him substantially that if only a small part of that vast aggregate had been judiciously applied to maintaining a few steamship lines to South America and other continents, markets for every surplus product of our farmers and manufacturers would long ago have been established, which would in turn have reacted to restore our old time supremacy on the seas. The matter of the transportation of our exports and imports has such a vital bearing that it cannot be winked out of sight. It is outraging itself in any and every plan for a revival of our ante-war prosperity.

The present extremity of our European competitors would seem to be our opportunity to wrest from them the carrying trade of the world, if we are not so bull-headed as to refuse to see the exceptional chance offered us in the existing situation. Mr. Blaine seems to have demonstrated that we are nearing that tide in national affairs that leads on to fortune if taken at the flood; and that we shall always have to bewail the stupidity that led us to withhold our hand, if we allow the opportunity to go by without profiting by its proximity.

The grandmotherly old Bourbons who charge themselves with preserving peace in the family—among them Thurman—have to some extent recovered from the hysterical turn that Bragg gave them by his mutinous conduct last week, though still nervous over the situation. With the aid of Randall, who made ducks and drakes of rules, precedents, the regular order, etc., in order to hold back the infuriated Confederate brother who longed to strangle Bragg for his temerity, the warring factions have been kept from a second encounter. Bragg, though elected to represent a Wisconsin Democratic district, has never won the Confederate sashes with humility; and when they have full possession of both Houses and come to push the avalanche of rebel claims awaiting at that time, it looks as though Northern Democracy might contribute enough Braggs with the Republicans to seriously interfere with the cut-and-dried programme. The chances for a fatal family rupture may be quoted as from good to fair and still growing.

The Committee on transfer of the care of the Indians to the War Department fails to recommend such an innovation. It consisted of 8 members—3 Senators and 5 Representatives—and it is understood they were a tie, Republicans voting against the proposition. There is hardly a crime known to the Statutes that the report of those favoring the transfer (Democrats) do not charge to the existing management of the Indians under the Interior Department. It is also denied that the Indians have made any marked progress towards civilization. The Republican or dissenting report has not yet been made.

Prof. Gange's method of freezing out Yellow Fever is booming. He seems to have secured the endorsement of all the scientific Government officials, and now Mrs. Thompson, the well known philanthropist, is heartily co-operating to secure its adoption.

UNDINE.

The Election Cases.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27, 1879.

The convictions in the United States Circuit Court during last week of individuals who were proved to have been engaged in the business of interfering with the execution of the federal laws at the election in November last, have stirred up somewhat of a storm among our Democratic contemporaries. We have from them some vigorous expressions of their opinion that the law under which the suits are brought is unconstitutional; that all proceedings in accordance with it ought to be null and void; that the evidence against the accused persons partook of falsification and perjury, and that the presiding judge has unduly inclined toward the side of the prosecution. All the changes possible have been rung upon this assumed condition of facts; but they have no argument to offer except the one that they do not think the law to be in harmony with the Constitution. That is a point which belongs to the Supreme Court to decide, and we have no doubt as to what its decision will be. The law stands good so long as its effect has been more than gratifying here in Baltimore.

What faces elections have been in this city for a number of years past everybody knows. Some very instructive facts regarding the stuffing of ballot boxes, the use of pudding tickets and the voting on fictitious names have been brought out in the testimony in the trials before Judge Bond. It has been shown that the true reason why the Ring's judges and clerks of election objected to the presence of the federal officers was that the latter were witnesses to the rascality that was being practised. They saw what a very large percentage of illegal votes was being polled, and that there was no guardianship of the purity of the election save what they might supply. When they exerted themselves to fulfil the duties for which they were made responsible by the law they were confronted with the antagonism of the men who have just been brought up in the United States Court. There has been no lack of evidence in these cases, and the Court has been most careful in passing sentence. The slight tints imposed, and the imprisonment directed in one instance, were the lightest penalties possible, but they constituted proof that in elections where the United States Statutes have force there is a chance of breaking up the system of fraud that has prevailed for many years past.—Balto. American.

Democratic Modesty.

We beg our Democratic friends not to embarrass themselves with false modesty. If there is anything on the premises of the Republican party for which they have a fancy by all means let them take it. Far be it from us to renege at the appropriation of our property, or think it unreasonable if the crop which we planted and tilled, and protected with great trouble from the attempts of the Democracy to nullify it by the roots, is claimed by this same Democratic party as soon as it has been garnered. The country is getting used to this sort of thing; and though we cannot go so far as to pretend that we like it, the time has passed when it would cause us any surprise.

Just now a branch of the eastern Democrats are laboriously arguing that they brought about the resumption of specie payments, in spite of the pestilent efforts of the Republican party to perpetuate suspension. Secretary Sherman, say they, has all ways opposed resumption, the Federal administration has steadily favored an inflated and irredeemable currency; the Radicals in Congress have been distinguished by their opposition to hard money; nothing has saved the country but the steadfastness and common sense of an honest and united Democracy. "Now that the Republicans are beginning to talk over resumption," says one organ of the opposition, "perhaps the Democrats may come by their own." We hope they may; but at present the things they seem most anxious to come by are ours. In the St. Louis platform of 1876 they denounced the resumption clause of the act of 1875 as a hindrance to resumption, and demanded its repeal; and to this professed of financial faith they remained tolerably faithful up to the last of January, 1879, when resumption was duly accomplished according to the terms of the act. They have not condescended to explain the apparent inconsistency of claiming the credit of an achievement which they have done their best to prevent; they only bid us get out of the way and remember that it is their procession.

If it had not been for the Republican party the United States would have gone to pieces at the beginning of the war. In suppressing the rebellion and restoring the Union we had to deal not only with an armed foe in front, but with an armed and hardly less dangerous foe in the rear, who obstructed the operations of our soldiers, denounced every attempt to save the constitution as unconstitutional, and opposed the abolition of human slavery as a violation of human rights. But having, in spite of Democratic resistance, restored the Union and liberated the slave, we are now requested to stand aside and let the Democratic party manage reconstruction and take care of the negro. We are told that it is a gross outrage on our part to claim any share in the heritage we have preserved or to do anything for the protection of the weak and ignorant whom we have liberated. The Democracy is going to look after the South. It has got out its rifles, shot guns, masks, red shirts and tissue ballots; it has organized its buggy brigades and advisory committees; it has put a complete stop to negro suffrage. If the Republican North remonstrates, it is informed that the solid South has always been the personal property of the Democratic party, and that the party does not mean to be interfered with by negroes, and if we venture to enquire if Southern Republicans have no rights which Democrats are bound to respect, the Democracy, from Senator Thurman down to Alderman Purroy, is shocked at a question which betrays such a depth of sectional hate. Well, gentlemen, don't be bashful; take whatever you can lay your hands on; and if you don't see what you want, ask for it.—N. Y. Tribune.

Ballot-Box Influences.

The way of the ballot box stuffer and of the offending election judge is hard when they get into the United States Courts. The result of the trials that have been in progress of late in the Federal tribunals shows that those who sing against the purity of elections and United States Courts different from those of the State. The last election was a fair election—that is, comparatively speaking, as elections are conducted in Baltimore. There were too many United States supervisors about to render it safe or expedient to attempt any open violations of law, and yet in spite of this we have had quite a batch of offenders in court during the last week or so.

The fact that these frauds and offenses were attempted under the very nose of Uncle Sam himself makes it more than probable that when the fear of Federal law and Federal Courts are not before their eyes the agents of the Court House Ring indulge in election infractions to their hearts' content. If they attempt such things at a Federal election, what do they not accomplish in the freedom of a State election?

But after all, the poor wretches who have been found guilty in the Federal Court, were only instruments in the hands of greater villains than they. Such men as these are merely puppets in the hands of the members of the Ring, and simply executed the commands of their political masters. Unfortunately the law is not always complete justice, and very often those most deserving of punishment slip through its fingers.

The true criminals were not at the bar of the Federal court; the men who came under the condemnation of the law were not the principal offenders. There will come a time probably in the history of this city when the "gentlemen" who now move only behind the scenes will find the curtain rudely torn from before them, and will have their political operations exposed to public gaze. In the meantime they will continue to draw the chestnuts from the fire by means of the conventional cats' paws that are so ready to do their work for a small consideration. They are not burned—why should they care?—Baltimorean.

The New Pension Act.

It is not remarkable that President Hayes is plunged into a quandary as to what to do with the Pension arrears bill. On the one hand is the plea that it is a measure of justice to the disabled soldiers of the war and the heirs of the dead; on the other hand there is the enormous expense it must entail upon the country and the suspicion that Hancock had a great deal to do with its passage. The ciphering with regard to the bill has been going on with vigor in administration circles, and some astonishing and gloriously uncertain results have been figured out. The Secretary of the Treasury calculates that if the bill now in the hands of the President becomes a law, it will take about $150,000,000, and he can very plainly see in consequence a deficit at the end of the year. But the Secretary of the Interior, on the basis of a calculation made by the Commissioner of Pensions, estimates that the amount required to satisfy the demands upon the Treasury in case the bill is approved will be about $50,000,000. The real fact of the matter probably is that, owing to the design of the authors of the act to conciliate as many voters as possible by means of it, it is simply impossible for any one to make any accurate estimate with regard to the amount of money that will be required. The chances are that $50,000,000 is the very least sum that the Treasury will be called upon to disburse, and the taxpayers of the nation will be lucky if Mr. Sherman's figures—$150,000,000—represent the extreme limit of the disbursement that will have to be made. Persons who have got on the pension rolls during 1878 will have back pay to the time of their discharge from the army. Some of them will receive back pensions for seventeen years; others who were placed on the lists in 1876 or '77 will draw pensions for fifteen or sixteen years back and so on. Some men or their heirs will draw $50; others $500 or $1,000, and some as high as $1,600, and sums of every amount between the extremes. No provision has yet been made by Congress for paying the money. There are three propositions looking to that end. One is to suspend the sinking fund and divert the surplus revenue heretofore applied to reducing the public debt to the liquidation of these pension gratuities. Another proposed plan is to sell bonds and use the proceeds thereof to pay the back pensions, and add the bonds to the national debt. The third scheme is to restore the duties on tea and coffee, and employ the income to pay the gift to the pensioners. This would be the best way of raising the money if the thing is to be done at all. The tax would not be seriously felt, and it would avoid the necessity of issuing more bonds, and thus increasing the public obligations, or of ceasing to pay off any of the debt by diverting the sinking fund from that object.

Large sums of money will inevitably be needed for several decades of years to settle back pensions on the principle just established by Congress. Whether we shall need at first fifty millions of dollars or three times as much for the purpose, the sum would really only be the first instalment of payments. Thousands of new names will be placed on the pension lists between the present time and the close of the present century, and as time runs the amount of back-pay will ever increase. The average for new pensioners added this year, according to the Commissioner, will take about $1,500 per man. Those who go on ten years from now will get an average of $2,500, and those who are admitted to the rolls twenty years hence will draw between three thousand and four thousand dollars each. If claim agents—and they are the gentlemen at the back of the whole business—should demand six or eight per cent. interest on all back pensions, perhaps they might carry such a bill also, and that would add fifteen millions or twenty millions to the amount the present act calls for, and double, triple or quadruple the pension arrears of those who may hereafter get on the rolls, as the interest for sixteen years will equal the principal. A reasonable duty on tea and coffee steadily maintained will perhaps yield enough revenue to meet the annual demands on account of the bill, and it seems the only means of escaping from increasing the national debt.

Now that Congress has thrown this burden upon the Treasury it is incumbent upon the Senators and Representatives to provide the resources for meeting it. Perhaps, when they have to face that question fairly they may repent of their hasty action in passing the measure. A thoughtful message from the President pointing out what it involves might produce a change of mind in the majority. There is a strong savour of demagoguery about the measure, and we think the President should lay his veto upon it, as did President Grant in the case of a similar measure—the equalization of bounties—which also passed both houses by large majorities.—Balto. American.

A NOVEL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

possible by means of it, it is simply impossible for any one to make any accurate estimate with regard to the amount of money that will be required. The chances are that $50,000,000 is the very least sum that the Treasury will be called upon to disburse, and the taxpayers of the nation will be lucky if Mr. Sherman's figures—$150,000,000—represent the extreme limit of the disbursement that will have to be made. Persons who have got on the pension rolls during 1878 will have back pay to the time of their discharge from the army. Some of them will receive back pensions for seventeen years; others who were placed on the lists in 1876 or '77 will draw pensions for fifteen or sixteen years back and so on. Some men or their heirs will draw $50; others $500 or $1,000, and some as high as $1,600, and sums of every amount between the extremes. No provision has yet been made by Congress for paying the money. There are three propositions looking to that end. One is to suspend the sinking fund and divert the surplus revenue heretofore applied to reducing the public debt to the liquidation of these pension gratuities. Another proposed plan is to sell bonds and use the proceeds thereof to pay the back pensions, and add the bonds to the national debt. The third scheme is to restore the duties on tea and coffee, and employ the income to pay the gift to the pensioners. This would be the best way of raising the money if the thing is to be done at all. The tax would not be seriously felt, and it would avoid the necessity of issuing more bonds, and thus increasing the public obligations, or of ceasing to pay off any of the debt by diverting the sinking fund from that object.

Large sums of money will inevitably be needed for several decades of years to settle back pensions on the principle just established by Congress. Whether we shall need at first fifty millions of dollars or three times as much for the purpose, the sum would really only be the first instalment of payments. Thousands of new names will be placed on the pension lists between the present time and the close of the present century, and as time runs the amount of back-pay will ever increase. The average for new pensioners added this year, according to the Commissioner, will take about $1,500 per man. Those who go on ten years from now will get an average of $2,500, and those who are admitted to the rolls twenty years hence will draw between three thousand and four thousand dollars each. If claim agents—and they are the gentlemen at the back of the whole business—should demand six or eight per cent. interest on all back pensions, perhaps they might carry such a bill also, and that would add fifteen millions or twenty millions to the amount the present act calls for, and double, triple or quadruple the pension arrears of those who may hereafter get on the rolls, as the interest for sixteen years will equal the principal. A reasonable duty on tea and coffee steadily maintained will perhaps yield enough revenue to meet the annual demands on account of the bill, and it seems the only means of escaping from increasing the national debt.

Now that Congress has thrown this burden upon the Treasury it is incumbent upon the Senators and Representatives to provide the resources for meeting it. Perhaps, when they have to face that question fairly they may repent of their hasty action in passing the measure. A thoughtful message from the President pointing out what it involves might produce a change of mind in the majority. There is a strong savour of demagoguery about the measure, and we think the President should lay his veto upon it, as did President Grant in the case of a similar measure—the equalization of bounties—which also passed both houses by large majorities.—Balto. American.

The New Pension Act.

It is not remarkable that President Hayes is plunged into a quandary as to what to do with the Pension arrears bill. On the one hand is the plea that it is a measure of justice to the disabled soldiers of the war and the heirs of the dead; on the other hand there is the enormous expense it must entail upon the country and the suspicion that Hancock had a great deal to do with its passage. The ciphering with regard to the bill has been going on with vigor in administration circles, and some astonishing and gloriously uncertain results have been figured out. The Secretary of the Treasury calculates that if the bill now in the hands of the President becomes a law, it will take about $150,000,000, and he can very plainly see in consequence a deficit at the end of the year. But the Secretary of the Interior, on the basis of a calculation made by the Commissioner of Pensions, estimates that the amount required to satisfy the demands upon the Treasury in case the bill is approved will be about $50,000,000. The real fact of the matter probably is that, owing to the design of the authors of the act to conciliate as many voters as possible by means of it, it is simply impossible for any one to make any accurate estimate with regard to the amount of money that will be required. The chances are that $50,000,000 is the very least sum that the Treasury will be called upon to disburse, and the taxpayers of the nation will be lucky if Mr. Sherman's figures—$150,000,000—represent the extreme limit of the disbursement that will have to be made. Persons who have got on the pension rolls during 1878 will have back pay to the time of their discharge from the army. Some of them will receive back pensions for seventeen years; others who were placed on the lists in 1876 or '77 will draw pensions for fifteen or sixteen years back and so on. Some men or their heirs will draw $50; others $500 or $1,000, and some as high as $1,600, and sums of every amount between the extremes. No provision has yet been made by Congress for paying the money. There are three propositions looking to that end. One is to suspend the sinking fund and divert the surplus revenue heretofore applied to reducing the public debt to the liquidation of these pension gratuities. Another proposed plan is to sell bonds and use the proceeds thereof to pay the back pensions, and add the bonds to the national debt. The third scheme is to restore the duties on tea and coffee, and employ the income to pay the gift to the pensioners. This would be the best way of raising the money if the thing is to be done at all. The tax would not be seriously felt, and it would avoid the necessity of issuing more bonds, and thus increasing the public obligations, or of ceasing to pay off any of the debt by diverting the sinking fund from that object.

Large sums of money will inevitably be needed for several decades of years to settle back pensions on the principle just established by Congress. Whether we shall need at first fifty millions of dollars or three times as much for the purpose, the sum would really only be the first instalment of payments. Thousands of new names will be placed on the pension lists between the present time and the close of the present century, and as time runs the amount of back-pay will ever increase. The average for new pensioners added this year, according to the Commissioner, will take about $1,500 per man. Those who go on ten years from now will get an average of $2,500, and those who are admitted to the rolls twenty years hence will draw between three thousand and four thousand dollars each. If claim agents—and they are the gentlemen at the back of the whole business—should demand six or eight per cent. interest on all back pensions, perhaps they might carry such a bill also, and that would add fifteen millions or twenty millions to the amount the present act calls for, and double, triple or quadruple the pension arrears of those who may hereafter get on the rolls, as the interest for sixteen years will equal the principal. A reasonable duty on tea and coffee steadily maintained will perhaps yield enough revenue to meet the annual demands on account of the bill, and it seems the only means of escaping from increasing the national debt.

Now that Congress has thrown this burden upon the Treasury it is incumbent upon the Senators and Representatives to provide the resources for meeting it. Perhaps, when they have to face that question fairly they may repent of their hasty action in passing the measure. A thoughtful message from the President pointing out what it involves might produce a change of mind in the majority. There is a strong savour of demagoguery about the measure, and we think the President should lay his veto upon it, as did President Grant in the case of a similar measure—the equalization of bounties—which also passed both houses by large majorities.—Balto. American.

A NOVEL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a specified time. In the scope of the society there is a suggestion of the absent-minded professor who first cut a large hole in the grate for the big cat and then a little one for the kitten, but certainly no one will be the worse off for subscribing to either of the pledges.

Under the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation," a society has been incorporated in New York to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic liquors and beverages, promote a knowledge in science and statistics relative to their manufacture and sale, exert its endeavors to induce retail liquor dealers to keep non-alcoholic beverages for those who do not use stimulants, as well as encourage the establishment of free or cheap places of recreation or amusement where no intoxicating liquors are allowed. The society offers the public the choice of three different kinds of pledges, viz., a total abstinence pledge, good for a year and renewable at its expiration, if desired; a moderation pledge not to drink intoxicating beverages during business hours for a specified time; and finally a pledge not to "treat" or "be treated" for a

LOCAL NEWS.

—Beautiful weather.
—The "beautiful snow" has given place to the miserable mud.
—Invest $1.50 in THE REPUBLICAN. You will never regret it.
—Messrs. J. W. Veitch and G. W. Delawder were in Baltimore this week.
—The recent mild weather has melted the snow, and it is now a thing of the past.

—Mr. S. L. Townshend was summoned to Mountville Sunday by the sickness of his sister.
—Hon. John S. Combs of Allegany county, was in town Monday and Tuesday, visiting his father.

—We understand that Mr. J. W. Veitch has purchased the Eastern property on Oak street, Oakland.

—W. H. Tower, Esq., has so far recovered from his late indisposition as to be able to walk about town.

—We would call attention to the properties advertised by H. W. Combs. Some rare bargains are offered.

—Capt. Jarboe is taking advantage of the favorable weather, and has resumed work on Mr. Bailey's new hotel.

—The Literary society held a very interesting meeting on last Saturday evening. It meets to-night (Saturday) at 7 o'clock.

—W. H. Hall, Esq., who had his leg broken about two months since, is now able to walk without the aid of crutches.

—If any one wishes to keep posted in town, county, State or American news let them subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN, the best newspaper in the county.

—W. L. Boughner, Esq., of Morgantown, W. Va., was in Oakland on "court" business during the latter part of last and the first of this week.

—The funeral sermon of Rich R. White, late of Anson, West Va., will be preached in the Oakland M. E. Church, February 9th, at 10 o'clock A. M.

—Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Rev. B. Ison will preach the funeral sermon of the late Samuel Harned, at 10 A. M.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

Oakland's Yellow Fever Contribution.

The following acknowledgment was received by Mayor Offutt Tuesday last, although he had been briefly notified of the receipt of the money in October:

HOWARD ASSOCIATION, MEMPHIS, TENN., Jan. 25, 1879.
To D. E. Offutt, Esq., Oakland, Md.

DEAR SIR:—We return you our heartfelt thanks for your sympathy in this our hour of affliction, and pray that God may bless you for it. We enclose herewith receipt for your donation, $86.75, received from citizens of Oakland, which is hereby acknowledged.

Very gratefully yours,
J. H. SMITH, Secretary.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending January 31:

Archibald Chisholm, Jr., to John G. Steyer and Charles R. Steyer, Military Lot No. 293 and 199; $300.
Simon Biddinger and Florissa Biddinger to James Bower, a tract of land called "Mount Airy," containing 50 acres of land; $750.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 25th inst. Present, Hon. Jos. De Witt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges and Wm. L. Rawlings, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings:

Gilmer S. Hamill, guardian to Mary C. Pike and others, settled his fourth account.

John W. Harvey, administrator of Elisha Harvey, dec'd, settled his first and final account.

Court then adjourned until the 11th day of February, 1879.

As It May Happen.

A Story of American Life and Character. By TREND. 1 vol., 419 pp. Philadelphia: Porter & Coates.

"As It May Happen" is a new publication which will be greatly enjoyed by all who are at all fond of novels. It is neatly bound in cloth, and contains over 400 pages. The oddity of the name is an index of the style of the book. There is so much sameness about many of the novels of the period that it is often remarked that one can anticipate the whole story by reading a few chapters. With this it is different. The interest is kept up from page to page and from chapter to chapter. The diversity of character in the persons represented shows the author to be a student of human nature. The manner in which the peculiar traits of the different individuals are kept before the readers reminds one of Dickens; yet there is less repetition than with Dickens, interspersed through the book is a great deal of sound logic, not enough, however, to make the book prosy.

The Value of Advertising.

Does it ever occur to our merchants, professional men and others, of what incalculable benefit a little advertising is? Do they ever think how many people are thus brought directly in contact with their business? Do they know that they can greatly increase their business by keeping their name and occupation continually before the people? By judicious advertising they would be more than repaid for the little outlay. People do not buy, or transact business where they are not invited; and the man that advertises invites and receives custom. Keep your name and business before the people, and our word for it, you will be well repaid. It costs but little and at least would do no harm to try it, and you will be surprised how much your business will improve in a short time.

TELEGRAPHIC.

ARMING THE SUB-TREASURY.

New York, Jan. 25.—Work will soon be begun under a contract already awarded "for the better defence of the Government Treasury building," on the corner of Wall and Nassau streets. The vaults are to be about twenty feet below the street, enclosed in solid masonry, and in the interior of the silver vault alone about 500,000 pounds of chilled steel will be used. On the Nassau street side will be twenty-four openings, with as many more in the basement. All these will be protected with bullet proof shutters pierced for musketry and arranged to swing out at any desired angle, so as to command any portion of the street adjacent. There will be three turrets on the roof with steel plates three quarters of an inch thick, and with loopholes for musketry on all sides. The officials at the treasury building yesterday said that the details of the proposed plans were not known to them, all of those affairs being settled at Washington. There was no doubt, however, that such a contract had been given out, the contractor being a Boston man whose name they did not know. He has been to the building during the past week and had taken some measurements, but was not at present in the city. No attack, so far as is known, is contemplated by any belligerent or armed force, but it has been decided that the depository of the government money cannot be made too secure. In the event of a riot, in case the police were overpowered, the first point of attack it is suggested, would naturally be the building containing the government money if the rioters had any sense of propriety.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

WASHINGTON, January 25.—There is considerable criticism of the course of the Potter Committee with regard to the investigation of the epidemic. The most ingenious plan seems to have been devised to so delay the investigation that no report can possibly be made this Congress. The Democrats themselves apparently admit the genuineness and authenticity of the cipher despatches. Potter in the committee has said as much. And even if they are not genuine it would be a simple thing to summons the supposed authors of them. Even Polton has returned from his Canada retreat, and Messrs. Fox, Woley and Coyle and all the rest are within the jurisdiction of the committee. These gentlemen could easily be summoned, and within three days could affirm or deny the authorship and translation of the despatches, or refuse to answer. Their own testimony—unless they should commit perjury—would, of course, be the most available. But the committee has, on the contrary, selected a Southern-born professor of the Naval Observatory, who was not successful in translating the ciphers of the Tribune, as the expert upon the results of whose researches the action of the committee is to proceed. It will be very strange if the present week passes without witnessing the threatened Democratic family fight in the House of Representatives. The moderate men of the party have exhausted every argument to persuade Mr. Mills, Gen. Chalmers and other irate Southerners who are still smarting under Gen. Grant's loyal speech, to consent to a cessation of hostilities. But thus far these humble attempts have failed, and the champions of the Southern "idea" have refused to be pacified. Mr. Mills tried again yesterday to obtain the floor for the purpose of opening fire on Gen. Bragg, but the Speaker, who is evidently determined not to permit the discussion to take place if he can possibly prevent it, ruled that the Postoffice Appropriation bill was the regular order of the day, and its consideration was accordingly proceeded with and consumed the entire day. Mr. Mills and his friends have declared that they will persevere in their efforts to obtain the floor until they succeed. Gen. Bragg does not appear at all disturbed by the attitude the Southerners have assumed towards him. On the contrary, he is preparing to repeat the threatened attack, and it is said that his next shot will produce greater damage than the first.

The bill granting arrearsages of pensions was signed by the President yesterday, as anticipated in these despatches. As the measure makes no provision for the payment of the claims that may be awarded under it, a special appropriation by Congress will be necessary to carry the measure into effect. It doubtless possesses friends enough in both houses to correct the omission. The Treasury Department still adheres to the opinion that the new law will call for one hundred and fifty million dollars out of the public treasury. One of the probable results of the approval of this bill will be the defeat of all propositions to reduce the revenue. It may ultimately end in reviving the income tax.

THE PLAGUE IN RUSSIA.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The British Medical Journal publishes the following: "Russian and German medical journals state that the east of Europe is in a state of great alarm at the progress of what they allege to be the plague, which is rapidly making its way upward toward the north and east of Russia from the Caspian Sea, along the course of the Volga. According to an article, dated January 16, published in the Winter Medizinische Wochenschrift, No. 3, it has reached Nijni Novogorod. As far as regards the origin of the disease, it is now ascertained that it was imported by two regiments of Cossacks who had lately returned from the war in Turkey, and, in spite of strict orders to disinfect everything, probably had a part of their body, which, without doubt, contained the germs of the infection. When the disease first showed itself it was rather neglected, and looked upon merely as a variety of typhus fever, and it was not until the mortality began to assume alarming dimensions that the local authorities began to feel it to be their duty to do something toward arresting its further progress. Accordingly a strict quarantine was enforced, but the inhabitants of Astrachan, seized with a panic, had begun to fly in different directions, scattering on their way germs of the disease, which advanced to the north over the provinces of Samara and Saratoff, and reached Tsimiz. This last-named place ought especially to have been protected, being a very important trading town on the Volga, connected by rail with almost the whole of Russia, and through it with the rest of Europe. Having once passed that place, the plague went on spreading till it reached Nijni Novogorod, which is but a few hours distant from Moscow, the centre of Russia."

FREEZING OUT THE YELLOW FEVER.

WASHINGTON, January 21.—As a practical issue to the yellow fever investigation set on foot by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, that lady is devoting much attention and giving countenance and encouragement to a project for proving the effects of artificially produced frost in limiting the spread of the disease. She has taken up and earnestly supports the proposition of Professor John Garrigue, of London, to provide a refrigerating and ventilating ship, to be propelled by steam and fitted up with powerful refrigerating apparatus to be stationed at New Orleans, and moved thence from point to point, as required, and test the effects of low temperature in extinguishing the germs of fever on board infected ships and other localities. It is urged that Surgeon General Woodworth should have means of proving, once for all, whether frost kills or only scotches the deadly virus, and to that end Congress is asked to make the necessary appropriation.

HAS PIRACY BEEN RENEWED?

LONDON, January 21.—The owners of the ship Ralston, Richardson & Co., of Glasgow, whose captain is credited with the letter to the Admiralty, published in part yesterday, reporting suspicious acts of an unknown steamer fifty miles west of Fastnet, announce their conviction that the affair is either a hoax or a delusion. Captain Adams, in addition to what was published yesterday, says: "Astounded at being warned to keep on my course, or I would be harnessed, too, I kept on under easy sail. An hour after daylight I observed the same steamer coming as-term. She hailed me, asking me where I was going. I replied that I was bound for Cork. The officer on deck who spoke to me told me to be sure not to mention a word about having seen the vessel on fire, and that they had her crew aboard. He also said: 'If you make any statement or report about what you have seen you had better look out for yourself on your next voyage out.' The steamer was built of iron, was painted black, was low in the water, had black pole masts, black funnels between fore and main-masts. I observed that she had several boats at the davits, more than steamships usually carry. The two on the starboard bow were steam launches. The steamer did not appear to me to have at all the appearance of a war vessel or merchant steamer. I was close to her. I could not see any guns or gun ports."

TILDEN'S DEFENCE.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—Graphic special from Washington on the cipher dispatch investigation, says Tilden's line of defence will be the denial of all knowledge of the dispatches, that he never encouraged the use of money and refused to allow the use of money or bribes of any sent in his name. Polton will swear he submitted the financial propositions to Tilden who indignantly rejected them. This does not help Marboe or other co-partners, but it is believed Tilden intends to cut loose from the whole band and allow them to shift for themselves. The Republicans will attempt to secure copies of the cipher dispatches Tilden sent to Michigan while his books were in litigation, to show they were the same ciphers as used in the Florida dispatches, but the Democrats will refuse to have this outside matter brought up.

A CANVASSING BOARD SENT TO PRISON.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 23.—In the United States Circuit court today, Judge Settle sentenced the Brevard county canvassing board, convicted of making a false return of the elections. Lee, the county clerk, was sentenced to three years, and Bright and Johns, sheriff and justice respectively, to one year each, in the Albany penitentiary. Lee is also a state senator from Brevard county. All other election cases have been continued to the May term of court.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The bill to regulate the immigration of Chinese passed the House this afternoon by more than two-thirds majority. There was a great deal of Democratic trickery in connection with the passage of this measure. Last night the Democrats held a caucus, at which it was determined that no Republican should be allowed to speak except against the bill, and that no amendment should be permitted to be offered. The Democrats also determined that Martin J. Townsend, of New York, who was the only Republican who had shown a desire to speak against the bill, should have the entire half hour that would have been the disposal of the Republican side. When the bill came up the Democrats refused to allow even technical amendments, as was requested by several Republicans. All suggestions of that sort were voted down. The previous question was carried, and Mr. Townsend was given his half hour. Of this, Mr. Page, of California, was allowed ten minutes to favor the bill, and was the only Republican permitted to speak in favor of it. The effect of this partisan management on the part of the Democrats was that many Republicans voted against the bill on account of the management, which was the result of the Democratic caucus, believing that the Republican Senate would so amend the bill that they could vote for it on the final passage. The bill was considered by Mr. Conger and others as being imperfect in many respects. It is feared that it can be construed to prohibit the entry into our harbors of a Chinese vessel of war or of commerce. Such vessels would carry more than fifteen persons, the maximum allowed by the bill, and that it would even prevent the entry of a Chinese embassy that had more than fifteen Chinamen in the suite. That, moreover, it would interfere with many humanitarian purposes, such as a possible wrecked vessel. Gardfield objected to the bill, as he desired to have it settled as a question of treaty, and so amend it by declaring through the proper diplomatic channels that after July first next, the Burlingame treaty should be declared abrogated. Of the seventy-two votes against the bill, fifteen were Democratic. When the bill returns from the Senate the Republican representatives predict that it will receive nine-tenths of the Republican vote. The Democrats by thus making the Chinese bill a party measure profess that they will be able to carry the Pacific coast next spring against the Republicans.

The New Pension Bill, facetiously styled the "arrears pension bill," as if it were a bill to pay the legitimate debts of the government, instead of to voluntarily assume new obligations and bestow a gratuity in money belonging to the people upon some classes of persons who have already been fairly dealt with, and on as good terms as others who have gone before them, has been signed by the President and is now a law. This bill provides that all pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, which have been granted or which shall hereafter be granted, shall commence from the date of death or discharge from the service of the United States. It is in the nature of a provision for "back pay." The estimates for the next fiscal year for pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted during the late war of the rebellion are as follows: Invalids $13,400,000; widows and dependent relatives $12,000,000; total $25,400,000. The total number of pensioners on the rolls on June 30, 1877, was 232,101. The average annual value of a pension is therefore about $109. In 1865, at the close of the war, the number of pensioners was 85,986. The number of pensioners, therefore, to whom one year's arrearsages will have to be paid under the new law will exceed 140,000, and the arrearsages will amount to not less than $15,000,000. The number who will draw two years' arrearsages will reach 100,000, and their back pay will exceed $20,000,000. These figures will illustrate the enormous sums to be taken from the treasury by this bill, which was passed without debate and without consideration. No one can examine the last report of the commissioner of pensions, and particularly the tables showing the number of pensioners on the rolls at the termination of each fiscal year since 1861, and resist the conclusion that the arrearsages under this bill will amount to at least $90,000,000, and may exceed $150,000,000. The question arises where is the treasury to find this money, and from what sources will Congress provide it? Will the party now in power in the Senate vote to increase the national debt in order to make this new law effective? No matter how we look at the subject, the difficulties seem to thicken in connection with this most inopportune and unnecessary measure. Nor do the charges put upon the treasury end with the arrearsages in pensions now upon the rolls. There are now pending in the pension bureau 88,655 applications for new pensions, of which at least 20 per cent. will be granted, and upon each of these arrearsages of from twelve to thirteen years will have to be paid at the present increased rates of pensions, which are much higher than formerly. The whole thing to us seems to indicate more the cowardice of politicians, or their self-seeking, than anything else.—Baltimore Sun.

A WONDERFUL MOTOR.—An application was recently made before the English patent office for a patent for a new motor. In the specification that has been filed it is described as "an improved apparatus for raising water and obtaining motive power." The principle upon which this new motor is founded is that "an apparatus raising water twenty feet will raise twenty times as much water as is necessary to work itself, less friction, the apparatus being connected with and worked by the inventor." In other words the machine has set out to prove that a motor can be made which will not on its work itself, but generate sufficient power to work any fixed machinery or propel vessels. Next to perpetual motion, and akin to it, this new self-acting device, if its practicability can be demonstrated, would be one of the most remarkable yet recorded in this age of great inventions.

NEW ADVERTISEMENT.

Collector's Sale.

I hereby give notice that on SATURDAY, Feb. 23d, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M. in front of Cockington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, Md., I will expose for sale the following property, assessed to and owned by HENRY WALTER, of Garrett county, Md., which I have seized and levied upon, to satisfy the State and county taxes hereon for the year 1877, now due and assessed to H. W. Walter, namely:

One (1) Bull, 3 years old;
One (1) Two year old Heifer;
Four (4) Head of Cows;
Four (4) Head of Calves.

A. MILLER,
Collector of State and County Taxes for the year 1877.

213

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

1185

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties

have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 1.

One-half acre of ground in the town of Oakland, improved by a

Two-story new framed dwelling house. Good location. Title indisputable. This property will be sold very low.

NO. 2.

One-half acre of ground in the centre of Oakland, improved by a Large Frame Dwelling House and out buildings. A well of excellent water in the yard. This is one of the handsomest properties in the town. Can

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

SUBSTITUTION.

There is an island, flowered and green,
Lashed in the arms of a blue, waveless sea,
Not in the track of great ships—hidden, unseen,
And life thereon is joy and reverie.
It is an island—mine! In my flushed youth,
When all my sails were stainless and full set,
Strong in the might of hope and faith and truth,
I sailed in quest of it; but never yet
Though often from the main's high top I lean,
Or perch upon the deck on leeward knee,
In slender pajamas, high in the clear blue net,
That island lies behind me. Long ago,
When I but knew it as the fair Isle of Be,
One night those ancient, hazy, misty shores,
Kept by a white mist, more dreamy yet, more
While I mused wondering what this mist could mean.

Sometimes I pierce it with swift glances keen,
Harassed by doubts and fears withouten let,
I should I describe a rock which I must lose,
A barren ledge, sharp-fanged and moorish;
And so I stand, and stare, and wonder,
And never can come near my island yet.
It lies behind those breakers, to my right,
And I was forced to land 'mid' great snow,
I never toward that kingdom fair may go,
Never may stretch the white and full and free,
To the dear country of my heart to see,
Ah, there I might have reached, a crowned queen!

Sometimes on clear nights, just my right to what,
Sound from the furtherward, so full of gloom,
So rich in all-pervasive mystery,
That I through some of wrong, myself de-
mean.
And like a sick child murmuring fret,
And now I call that note my might have been!

I was the heir; I did not abdicate,
By force of fraud my own was led to me;
Yet from misty some gain we often see,
And good and evil have one parent tree.
And now I stand in the light of my own
O, often from a black and bitter note,
Surges and catches in a flower fair and sweet;
And I tell that for my last estate.
A word like one of my old sailor's,
And I am at last, to the long and weary
Strangely suddenly a pen of pure praise—
A perfect, now mine in later days.
Better and braver than the king of old,
Sweeter and truer, and more of ignorance,
Fruitful of knowledge, not of ignorance,
So much can parallel the heart's true tale,
Of how when with a flower fair and sweet,
To drive the Mayflower toward Plymouth's
rock.

Those ancient fathers, cheated in their plan
To seek a climate that was kind to man,
Accepted all the risks of that stern shore,
Land and used the frozen and their own,
And ever grew to love the land and sea,
Despite the hardships and the tempest's shock,
Till love of land and love of fatherland
The ancient fathers' hearts were so engrossed,
No man's beginning or the end could Do any more than think he should pause
and seek.
To reveal our little old life's years,
And I, who saw my new land with my tears,
Going about my work with patient cheer,
Repulsed and gladness from perils and fears,
Though backward looking I am sometimes weak.
Since the old yearning sometimes fills my heart
Even with the yearning which fulfilled could see,
It is a kind of love that grips the heart,
And each could reach his life of the 19th Century to his heart's true tale.
And never repaying it with a lie,
Never with lying heart toward it lean,
And never leaving it to others' hands,
I am sure I will to each fellow
Of unknown hearts that live too happily,
The book's closed and I know the answer key.
Howard Clayton, in Lippincott's Magazine for February.

THE RECENT GREAT FRENCH DUEL.

Much as the modern French duel is ridiculed by certain smart people, it is in reality one of the most dangerous institutions of our day. Since it is always fought in the open air, the combatants are never sure to catch cold.

M. Paul de Cassagnac, the most invested of the French duelists, has suffered so often in this way that he is at last a confirmed invalid; and the best physician in Paris has expressed the opinion that if he goes on dueling for fifteen or twenty years more—unless he forms the habit of fighting in a comfortable room where damp and draughts cannot intrude—he will eventually end his life by catching cold.

He is so stubborn in maintaining that the French duel is the most health-giving of recreations, because of open-air exercises it affords. And it might also be said that the French duelists and duelists and socialist-hated monarchs being the only people who are immortal.

But it is time to get at my subject.
As soon as I heard of the late duel between M. Gambetta and M. Fourton in the French Assembly, I knew that trouble must follow. I knew it because a long personal friendship with M. Gambetta had revealed to me the desperate and imprudent nature of the man. Vast as are his physical proportions, I knew that the thirst for revenge would penetrate to the remotest frontiers of his person.

I did not wait for him to call on me,
but went at once to him. I found the brave fellow steeped in a profound French calm. I say
French calm, because French calmness
and English calmness have points of difference. He was moving, swiftly,
back and forth, the details of his
frustrations, now and then staving chance
from the remotest frontiers of his person.

I went at once to him. I found the brave fellow steeped in a profound French calm. I say
French calm, because French calmness
and English calmness have points of
difference. He was moving, swiftly,
back and forth, the details of his
frustrations, now and then staving chance
from the remotest frontiers of his person.

I went at once to him. I found the brave fellow steeped in a profound French calm. I say
French calm, because French calmness
and English calmness have points of
difference. He was moving, swiftly,
back and forth, the details of his
frustrations, now and then staving chance
from the remotest frontiers of his person.

for a consumptive, but not suited to the exigencies of the field of honor. We wrangled over a good many ante-mortem outbursts, but I finally got him to cut his obituary down to this, which he copied into his memorandum-book, pur-
posing to get it by heart:

"I HAD THAT FRASER MAY LIVE."
I said that this remark seemed to lack relevance; but he said relevance was a matter of no consequence in last words
—what you wanted was thrill.

The next thing in order was the choice of weapons. My principal said he was not feeling well, and would have that and the other details of the proposed meeting to me. Therefore I wrote the following note and carried it to M. Fourton's friends:

Sir: M. Gambetta accepts M. Fourton's challenge, and authorizes me to propose Plessis-Piquet as the place of meeting; tomorrow morning at daybreak as the time, and axes as the weapons. I am, sir, with great respect,
Monsieur.

M. Fourton's friend read this note, and shuddered. Then he turned to me and said, with a suggestion of severity
in his tone:

"Have you considered, sir, what would be the inevitable result of such a meeting?"

"Well, for instance, what would it be?"

"Bloodshed!"

"Now, if it is a fair question," I said,
"your side proposing to shed?"

"I had him, there. He saw he had made a blunder, so he hastened to explain it away. He said he had spoken pejoratively. Then he added that he and his principal would enjoy axes, and indeed prefer them, but such weapons were barred by the French code, and so I must change my proposal.

I walked the floor, turning the thing
over in my mind, and finally it occurred to me that Gatling guns at fifteen paces would be a likely way to get a verdict on the field of honor. So I framed this idea into a proposition.

But it was not accepted. The code was too strict again. I proposed rifles; then double-barreled shot-guns;
then Colt's navy revolvers. These being all rejected, I reflected awhile,
and sarcastically suggested brick-bats
at three-quarters of a mile. I always hate to feel away a humorous thing on a person who has no perception of humor; and it filled me with bitterness when this man went solemnly away to submit the last proposition to his principal.

He came back presently and said his principal was charmed with the idea of brick-bats at three-quarters of a mile,
but must decline on account of the danger to disinterested parties passing between.

"Well, I am at the end of my string,
now. Perhaps you would be good enough to suggest a weapon? Perhaps you have even had one in your mind all the time?"

His countenance brightened, and he said with alacrity:

"O, without doubt, Monsieur!"

So he fell to hunting in his pockets—pocket after pocket, and he had plenty of them—muttering all the while:
"Now, what could I have done with
them?"

At last he was successful. He fished out of his vest pocket a couple of little things which I carried to the fight and discovered to be pistols. They were single-barreled and silver mounted, and very dainty and pretty. I was not able to speak for emotion. I silently hung one of them on my watch-chain and returned the other. My companion in crime now unrolled a postage-stamp containing several cartridges, and gave me
one of them. I asked if he meant to signify by this that our men were to be allowed but one shot apiece. He replied that the French code permitted
no more. I then begged him to go on and suggest a distance, for my mind
was growing weaker and confused under the strain which had been put upon it. He said sixty-five yards. I nearly lost my patience. I said:

"Sixty-five yards with these instruments? Pop-guns would be deadlier at fifty. Consider, my friend, you and I are banded together to destroy life, not to make it eternal!"

But with all my persuasion, all my argument and importuning, I was only able to get him to reduce the distance to thirty-five yards; and even this concession he made with reluctance, and said with a sigh:

"I wash my hands of this slaughter;
on your head be it!"

There was nothing for me but to go home to my old lion-heart and tell my humiliating story. When I entered,
M. Gambetta was laying his last lock of hair on the altar. He sprang toward me, exclaiming:

"You have made the fatal arrangements,—I see it in your eye!"

"I have."

His face paled a trifle, and he leaned over the table for support. He breathed thick and heavily for a moment or two, so tumultuous were his feelings;
then he hoarsely whispered:

"The weapon! the weapon! Quick!
What is the weapon?"

"This!" and I displayed that silver-mounted thing. He caught but one glimpse of it, then swooned ponderously
to the floor.

When he came to, he said mourn-
fully:

"The unnatural calm to which I have subjected myself has told upon my nerves. But away with weakness!
I will confront my fate like a man and a Frenchman."

He rose to his feet, and assumed an attitude which, for sublimity has never been approached by man, and has seldom been surpassed by statues. Then he said, in his deep, bass tones:

"I am ready; reveal to me the distance."

"Thirty-five yards."

I could not lift him up, of course;
but I rolled him over, and poured water down his back. He presently came to,
and said:

"Thirty-five yards—without a rest?"

But why ask? Since murder was what man's intention, why should he palter at small details? But mark you one thing: In my fall the world shall see how the chivalry of France meets death."

After a long silence he asked:

"Was nothing said about that man's family standing up with him, as an offset to my fall? But no matter; I would not stoop to make a suggestion; if he is not noble enough to suggest it himself, he is welcome to this advantage, which no honorable man would take."

He now sank into a sort of stupor
of reflection, which lasted some minutes;
after which he broke silence with—

"The hour—what is the hour fixed for the collision?"

"Dawn, to-morrow."

He seemed greatly surprised, and immediately said:

"Insanity! I never heard of such a thing. Nobody is abroad at such an hour."

"That is the reason I named it. Do you mean to say you want an audience?"

"It is no time to bandy words. I am astonished that M. Fourton should ever have agreed to so strange an innovation. Go at once and repair a later
hour."

I ran down stairs, threw open the front door, and almost plunged into the arms of M. Fourton's second. He said:

"I have the honor to say that my principal strenuously objects to the hour chosen, and begs that you will consent to change it to half-past nine."

"Any courtesy, sir, which it is in our power to extend is at the service of your excellent principal. We agree to the proposed change of time."

"I beg you to accept the thanks of my client." Then he turned to a person behind him, and said: "You hear,
M. Noir, the hour is altered to half-past nine." Whereupon M. Noir bowed, expressed his thanks, and went away.
My compliance continued:

"If agreeable to you, your chief surgeons and ours shall proceed to the field in the same carriage, as is customary."

"It is entirely agreeable to me, and I am obliged to you for mentioning the surgeons, for I am afraid I should not have thought of them. How many shall I want? I suppose two or three will be enough?"

"It is the customary number for each party. I prefer to chief surgeons;
but considering the exalted positions
occupied by our clients, it will be well
and decorous that each of us appoint several consulting surgeons from among the highest in the profession. These will come in our own private carriages. Have you engaged a horse?"

"Bless my stupidity, I never thought of it! I will attend to it right away.
I must seem ignorant to you, but you must try to overlook that, because I have never had any experience of such a swell duel as this before. I have had a good deal to do with duels
on the Pacific coast, but I see now that they were crude affairs. A horse—sho! we used to leave the electing jury around loose, and let anybody cord
them up and cart them off that wanted
to. Have you anything further to suggest?"

"Nothing, except that the head undertakers shall ride together, as is usual. The subordinates and nutes will go on foot, as is also usual. I will see you at three o'clock in the morning, and we will then arrange the order of the procession. I have the honor to bid you a good day."

I returned to my client, who said:
"Very well; at what hour is the engagement to begin?"

"Half-past nine."

"Very good indeed. Have you sent the fact to the newspapers?"

"Sir! If after our long and intimate friendship you can for a moment deem me capable of so base a treach-ery!"

"Tut, tut! What words are these,
my dear friend? Have I wounded you?
Ah, forgive me; I am overloading you with labor. Therefore go on with the other details, and drop this one from your list. The blood-maddened Fourton will be sure to attend to it. Or I may say—yes to make certain, I will drop a note to my journalistic friend, M.
Noir."

"O, come to think, you may save yourself the trouble; that other second has informed M. Noir."

"If I might have known it. It is just like that Fourton, who always wants to make a display."

At half-past nine in the morning the procession approached the field of Plessis-Piquet in the following order:
First came our carriage—nobody in it but M. Gambetta and myself; then a carriage containing M. Fourton and his second; then a carriage containing two poet-orators who did not believe in God,
and these had MS. funeral orations projecting from their breast pockets; then a carriage containing the head surgeons and their assistants; then a carriage containing private carriages containing consulting surgeons; then a hack containing the coroner; then the two hearse-drawers; then a train of assistants and nurses; then a carriage
containing camp followers, the police, and citizens generally. It was a noble turnout, and would have made a fine display if we had had finer weather.

There was no conversation. I spoke several times to my principal, but I judge that he was not aware of it, for
he always referred to his note book,
and muttered absently: "I die that France may live."

Arrived on the field my fellow second
and I paced off the thirty-five yards,
and then drew lots for choice of position.
This latter was but an ornamental ceremony, for all choices were alike; each wound private carriages containing consulting surgeons. These preliminaries being ended, I went to my principal and asked him if he was ready. He spread himself out to his full width, and said
in a stern voice: "Ready! let the batteries be charged!"

The loading was done in the presence of duly constituted witnesses. We considered it best to perform this delicate service with the assistance of the lantern, on account of the state of the weather. We now placed our men.

At this point the police noticed that the public had massed themselves together on the right and left of the field;
they therefore begged a delay, while they should put these poor people in a place of safety. The request was granted.

The police having ordered the two multitudes to take positions behind the duelists, we were once more ready.
The weather growing still more opaque,
it was agreed between myself and the other second that before giving the fatal

signal we should each deliver a loud whoop to enable the combatants to ascertain each other's whereabouts.

I now returned to my principal, and was distressed to observe that he had lost a good deal of his spirit. I tried my best to hearten him. I said: "Indeed, sir, things are not as bad as they seem. Considering the character of the weapons, the limited number of shots allowed, the generous distance,
the impenetrable distance of fog, and the added fact that one of the combatants is one-eyed and the other cross-eyed and near-sighted, it seems to me that this conflict need not necessarily be fatal. There are chances that both of you may survive. Therefore, cheer up; do not be down-hearted."

This speech had so good an effect that my principal immediately stretched forth his hand and said: "I am myself
again; give me the weapon."

I laid it, all lonely and forlorn, in the center of the vast solitude of his palm.
He gazed at it and shuddered. And still mournfully contemplating it, he muttered, in a broken voice: "Alas, it is not death I dread, but mutilation."

I heartened him once more, and with such success that he presently said:
"Let the tragedy begin. Stand at my back; do not desert me in this solemn hour, my friend."

I gave him my promise. I now assisted him to point his pistol toward the spot where I judged his adversary to be standing, and cautioned him to listen
well, and further guide himself by my feelings. Then I stepped myself against M. Gambetta's back, and raised a rousing "whoop-ee!" This was answered from out the far distances
of the fog, and I immediately shouted:

"Two little sounds like spit! spit!
broke upon my ear, and in the same instant I was crushed to the earth under a mountain of flesh. Buried as I was,
I was still able to catch a faint accent from above, to this effect:

"I die for—perdition take it,
what is I die for—oh yes—FRANCE!
I die that France may live!"

The surgeons swarmed around with their probes in their hands, and applied their microscopes to the whole area of M. Gambetta's person, with the happy result of finding nothing in the nature of a wound. Then a scene ensued which was in every way gratifying and inspiring.

The two gladiators fell upon each other's necks, with floods of foam and happy tears; that others sound embraced the surgeons, the orators, the undertakers, the police, everybody embraced, everybody congratulated everybody, and the whole atmosphere
was filled with praise and with joy unsuspected.

It seemed to me then that I would rather be a hero of the French duel than a crowned and sceptered monarch.

When the commotion had somewhat subsided, the body of surgeons held a consultation, and after a good deal of debate decided that, with proper care
and nursing, there was reason to believe that I would survive my injuries.

My internal hurts were deemed the most serious, since it was apparent that broken ribs had penetrated my left lung, and that many of my organs had been pressed out so far to one side or the other of where they belonged that it was doubtful if they would ever learn to perform their functions in such regular and unaccustomed localities.

They then set my left arm in two places,
pulled my right hip into its socket again, and re-elevated my nose. I was an object of great interest, and even admiration; and many sincere well-wishers, and many persons had themselves introduced to me, and said they were proud to know the only man who had been hurt in a French duel for forty years.

I was placed in an ambulance at the very head of the procession; and thus with gratifying eclat I was marched into Paris, the most conspicuous figure in that great spectacle, and deposited at the hospital.

The Cross of the Legion of Honor had been conferred upon me. However, few escape that distinction.

Such is the true version of the most memorable private conflict of the age.
My recovery is still doubtful, but there is no knowing when I shall be able to write.

I have no complaints to make against any one. I acted for myself, and I can stand the consequences. Without boasting, I think I may say I am not afraid to stand before a modern French duelist, but I will never again contend behind one again.—Mark Twain,
in Atlantic Monthly for February.

A Dog Killed by a Mouse.

gentleman writing to this journal relates the following curious occurrence: "I was alone with my laborers
in a field where potatoes were being harvested. My watch-dog was alone with me. I saw him seize a mouse, swallow it, and then lie down at my feet.
I went home to dinner, and while seated at the table was asked what was the matter with the dog. He was turning round and moaning, and something was hanging from his side. I took him up in my arms and found it was a mouse which had just been killed. At first I thought it had merely stuck in the long hair, but on examining closer I saw that one-half of the mouse protruded
from the dog's body. When the aperture was cleared it was found to be an inch in depth. The dog had no front teeth, and had swallowed the mouse, and the hind end of the mouse was gnawing its way out. It was at first stopped by one of the ribs, and had actually burrowed out between the skin and rib.
The dog killed the mouse when it put its head out by munching it with his jaws. The dog died the same day."

Berlin Neue Stettische Zeitung.

"How old are you, sissy?" said a Boston Highland "conductor" recently to a little girl who was trying to ride for half fare. "Nine at home, sir,
but on the cars only six," was the ready reply.

If a farmer or a business man wants to find out how great a spendthrift he is, let him keep an exact memorandum
of all the time idly spent.

Our Young Folks.

A CHILD'S ASTRONOMY.

One luminous sight in winter,
All eyes on the magic stars,
A band of wondering children
Were grouped by the window-sill.
The window looked out northward,
When through the transparent hours
The stars kept falling, falling,
In a ceaseless shower of showers.

Ah! beautiful sight! these children,
As they gazed on the magic stars,
With their tiny hands uplifted,
And their large, bright, unweary eyes,
"What is it?" asked curiously Alfred
Of his elder brother Gus.
"Does you think it is coming nearer?"
If it comes, can it fall on us?"

"So stupid!" in tones determined,
And soon he was tumbled by doubt,
And wished, as the flames waxed brighter,
Whose eyes, like a part of the stars,
Were still they watched the Night:
The hollows and gulfs of Night!

Till at last they all grew frightened;
And the small, dark heads and light
Were bent in a closer circle,
And their tiny hands uplifted:
All but one sturdy archer,
The smallest and shrewdest there,
Whose eyes, like a part of the stars,
Were still they watched the Night:
The hollows and gulfs of Night!

As he looked, with an air quite final,
"It's the Fourth of July, you say,
And the stars are coming nearer,
And the stars are coming nearer,
And the stars are coming nearer,
And the stars are coming nearer,"
—Paul H. Hayes, in the Independent.

BESTIED BY A RHINOCEROS.

"Baas, baas! spoor groed one-horn skellum!"
Such was the, to me, rather unimaginable announcement with which my friend M. Smeets came rushing in just about sunrise one morning, as we were sitting over our breakfast
at the door of the house,—one of those regular old Dutch-built farm-houses,
that one hardly ever sees now, except in South Africa. What he meant by it was, "baas, baas! the trail of a big rhinoceros!"

"Where?" cried M., jumping up;
for he was a keen sportsman, and never lost an opportunity of "putting some skin in a hurry!"

"Out by Hollow Spring, baas!—spoer
good!"

"There's a chance for you, my boy,"
said M., turning to me. "Now you'll be able to see how the elophants of mine do their work; I think you'll find them the right sort."

"Let me try the job by myself," cried
I, eagerly, for, like all "greenhorns,"
I was frantic to do some unlearned man's work, and to show that I was never short a rhinoceros yet, you know."

"Can't, really, my dear boy," said
M., in the most expensively indulgent tone; "when you're a little better used to the African bush you can do it, but I think if I were to let you go alone now, the least I could expect would be a life-long remorse for having connived at a suicide. No, we'll make a party of three to visit our friend, and he'll hardly give the slip to us all, I fancy."

Accordingly, we started out that very night, Swart, the bush-boy, making the third of our party; but I suppose the rhinoceros was too modest to face a slunk for a skin, for although we kept watch till sunrise, there was no sign of him. The next night it was just the same; and at last I got so mad at the idea of losing my chance,—the first I had ever had of the big game,
that, in spite of what M.—had said,
I made up my mind to try my luck single-handed.

I should have told you that the Hollow Springs frequented by my four-footed friend lay about eight miles from the house, in a deep gully, one side of which went up into a steep hog-backed ridge, topped by a big knuckle of rock that overlooked the spring at a range of fifty yards—as pretty a place for a sportsman could wish.

So, when night came, I stole out of the house with one of M.'s vaunted
"elephant-guns,"—a piece carrying a five-ounce "explosive ball,"—steel-tipped, and holding a length of fuminating powder to blow out the spine of a negrotherium. To guard against the recoil of such a charge, the stock was fitted with a thick pad; so, with gun and ammunition together, I had quite enough to load on an eight-mile tramp
through the bush.

I dare say there are ugly thickets in South America and Central Asia; but Africa beats them both. Imagine a forest of fish-hooks, reeling by an occasion of a single knife, and you have it exactly. There's one horrid spiky thing, called by the Dutch
"Wach-em-betje," which the English have corrupted into "wait-a-bit," and it does make you long to wait before you strike. I've known a fellow to be laid up for a fortnight, with a gash from one. So you may think that with masses of this nice stuff all around me,
I had to pick my way gingerly enough.

When I got to the place, I found the hole, the end of my gun had fallen off.
To go back and look for it would have been like hunting for a needle in a haystack; so I filled my handkerchief with wild grass, and tucked it in under the shoulder of my jacket as a substitute,
and then I took my post behind the rock, and waited.

The full moon was just rising over the trees (a glorious sight, I can tell you), when I heard a distant tramping,
like the tread of an elephant, only quicker; for a full-grown rhinoceros, clumsy as he looks, can be active enough
at times, as you'd soon find if you stood up. So I held my gun long to wait before there came a thick snort, and the great brown barrel of a body loomed out in the streak of moonlight, just over the spring. I hardly stopped to take aim,
before I pulled trigger.

The next few seconds were a blank;
and then I awoke to the consciousness
that my shoulder was aching as if it were broken, and that something was grunting savagely a few yards off,
and then I saw the huge snout and great

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, FEB. 8, 1879.

It is understood that the Republican State central committee will be called by Mr. Mathews to meet on the 13th of March.

The lowest rate of county taxation
in Maryland this year is that of Carroll county, 47 cents on the 100, and the highest Queen Anne's, $1.12. The smallest taxation in a town of any size is that of Westminster, 10 cents,
and the highest Baltimore, $1.00.
The lowest taxes in the larger towns is Hagerstown, 40 cents, and the highest Frederick, $1.10.

Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, of Cumberland, is spoken of as the Republican candidate for Governor of Maryland.
It is safe to say that no better selection could be made, and if he should accept the nomination he would poll
the full vote of the party, besides drawing heavily from the opposition.
He is a man in whom the people can repose confidence, and the tax payers of the State would subserve their best interests by electing a gentleman of his high character to that important office.—Balto. Co. Union.

Ben Hill has made a bold stand on the Southern claims question, and has drawn up a platform of three planks which would almost save his party in 1880, were it to be adopted in good faith. It remains to be seen whether he has the back-bone to maintain his stand. He came out with equal boldness on the silver question, but backed down most ignorantly when his position was tested against his position. The pressure will be even stronger than it was then, for there is practically only one sentiment on the claims question, and that is to pay them. The newspapers
do not openly advocate any plan,
but refrain from advocating any plan for making payment impossible and abuse any one who does advocate
one like a pickpocket.

In all ages, in all countries, and among all classes, there are always to be found those persons who, not content with letting people attend to their own business, insist upon helping them. To say that they mind their own affairs would not be correct; for, their time is taken up with other people's. Of this class the Democrats of this country and country form a considerable part. The Republican party was formed in 1856,
and since that time it has steadily
and unflinchingly pursued an onward and progressive course. It has, notwithstanding the advice, counsel and instruction, so called, of the Democratic party, pursued the way it thought right. It is an unpleasant reflection no doubt, to the Democrats
that, instead of the Republicans
taking counsel from them, their advice has been ignored. And strange to say, the Republican party has preserved its unity and strength. To say the least, the Democrats should pay attention to their own cause.
There is certainly great room for improvement in that body, notwithstanding they continually cry "reform," and "fraud," in the ears of the Republicans. It would take too much time, too much space to give the many instances of corruption,
the great amount of wrong-doing,
the endless series of crimes perpetrated by the party that wishes to run our governmental machine. We would simply tell these would-be competents that we are perfectly competent to steer our own boat. And because a few discontents below are trying to make trouble, the Democrat
feels moved to rise and offer consolation (?) and advice (?) While we feel infinitely obliged to our neighbor, we can dispense with both. The consolation we do not need; the advice we do not need. We know it would suit him excellently well did the Republican party meet with defeat. But this is not the intention.
The editor of the aforementioned paper is trying to keep the courage of his subscribers up. Wait until after the election, neighbors; they will need sympathy, advice, condolence, &c., then. Till that time we would advise him to keep his eye on his own party, attend to their business, and not puther himself about the Republicans. They are abundantly able to care for themselves.

The Cattle Shipment Question.

The New York Times says the report which gained publicity in that city for the first time Friday last, to the effect that an order had been issued by the British government prohibiting the further importation into that country of live cattle from the United States, caused a little excitement among cattle dealers and others interested, not only there, but in other parts of the country. It says according to the best information to be obtained among the cattle dealers,
the announcement that such an order had actually been promulgated was at least premature, although the opinion was pretty generally expressed that the order was more than likely to be made should there occur
any circumstance which would for a moment justify it. It is a fact that in the last session of Parliament a very stringent bill was passed known as the "Contagious Diseases (animal) Bill," which conferred upon the privy council large discretionary powers in regard to the importation of foreign cattle. Under that act the privy council, on the 6th of December last, passed an order in regard to the importation of cattle from any foreign country, and establishing the most stringent rules and regulations in regard thereto. The order divides foreign cattle into four classes.

The fourth are those coming from countries which the council considered as at present reasonably free
from contagious, and which are altogether exempted from slaughter or quarantine. These countries are Canada, the United States, Denmark, Sweden and Norway, Spain and Portugal. The owners or charterers of vessels compelled to enter into bonds to obey the rules laid down in the order, and if disease be detected in any of the animals after they are landed it is to be stamped out by measures varying with the character of the contagion. A single case of pleuro-pneumonia, or foot or mouth disease, when occurring in an isolated lot of animals, will compel the slaughter of the whole cargo, and if a single animal from that cargo be allowed to mix with any other cargo,
all the latter will be subject to the same treatment.

The Times further states that veterinary surgeons have been sent out from that city to investigate reported cases of pleuro-pneumonia,
and have reported they found cases
around Washington, in Maryland, Connecticut and Canada. These cases, however, were confined entirely to dairies. J. W. Gadsden, a veterinary surgeon, in a letter in the Washington Star, states that the disease which has prevailed among the cows
in and around the District of Columbia is not "riaderpest," but "contagious pleuro-pneumonia." On a recent visit to Long Island he found a large number of cows suffering with the latter disease.

Secretary of State Evarts, in a notice to the District of Columbia commissioners, informs them that the British legation desires that further inquiry be made for the information of her Majesty's government whether the cattle in the neighborhood of Washington are not suffering from pleuro-pneumonia or lung fever, and if precautions have been taken by the proper authorities to prevent the spreading of such disease.

The struggle for the control and patronage of the New York Custom House was ended in the executive session of the Senate Monday night
by the confirmation by a considerable majority of President Hayes' nominees for Collector, Surveyor and Naval Officer at that port. The contest begun soon after President Hayes' inauguration, and has continued intermittently ever since. It was essentially a struggle between President Hayes and Senator Con-kling for political power in the state of New York, the latter struggling to hold under this administration
the local precedence which was conceded him by General Grant. The recent correspondence between Mr.
Arthur and Secretary Sherman does not show either of these gentlemen
in a very enviable light, as they have both evidently tried to conceal more than they have told, and their statements are so contradictory as to throw distrust upon both. As President Hayes said in his message, the custom house, which does a third of the revenue business of the country, should be conducted on business principles solely. While it does not appear that the administration of Collector Arthur was flagrantly corrupt, it also does not appear that the evils for which he was presumably dismissed have been corrected
under the management of his successor. The chief importance in the result lies in the fact that Gen. Grant lost a point and Secretary Sherman gained one for the next presidential contest.

Hardly one Northern Democratic journal defends General Bragg for his attack on Southern claims. Make a note of that.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 4, 1879.

For a committee organized with no other object than the purification of our politics, the reluctance of its Democratic members to look into the little irregularities charged or imputed to reformers Tilden, Pelton, Marble, Coyle & Co. is unaccountable.
There has been voted to it all the money asked to an exhaustive investigation of the whole matter, and the admiralty with which the reform members undertook to ventilate the republican end of it and the vigor with which they have pushed their inquiries until the last hope is dissipated of making the results contribute to the exigencies of Democracy, led us to hope for the most rigid impartiality. But having exhausted that part of the work, a strange reluctance is manifested to proceed now that they are brought face to face with the late Democratic Presidential candidate and the men alleged to have undertaken to boss the job of buying or sterling enough electoral votes to seat him in the White House. Potter goes on a visit to New York, rendering a suspension of work necessary;
Chairman of the sub-committee that goes to New York he finds that the nature of his public duties will not admit of his absence from the capital; when Hinton is wanted to take the same position it is found he is at Warrenton, Va. "And they all with one consent began to make excuses." I only need add relative to the Republican witnesses that they each and collectively testified like men who had nothing to conceal.
Mr. Chandler's genial way of telling his story rendered the work of the committee a real pleasure while he lasted. But they are called from this temporary diversion to again face the skeleton in their closet.

The Democratic managers found it would be impossible to keep the Chalmers, Hookers and other hot-sides desisting to get at Bragg muzzled to the end of the session, hence they made a virtue of necessity and turned them loose to have it out with the black vulture who had thrown off his allegiance to the Confederate cause, and notified all concerned that he would hereafter antagonize their policy on the Treasury to the best of his ability. But after they had had their say it was found that Bragg wasn't hurt much and it seems the general verdict that he has the best of the fight so far.

Public interests seem to have been almost crowded out of sight by partisan considerations and through the demands made on the time of Congress by the many monopolies represented here and by the personal friends of members who are here in unusually large numbers to look after the private interests for whose advancement legislation is needed.
Though only four weeks are left some of the appropriation bills have hardly yet been touched. Outside of these there are a few matters requiring attention of some kind, but it doesn't seem likely they will get it. It is certainly saying very little for the aggregate wisdom of Congress that in the present condition of our shipping and foreign trade interests it is unable to extend a helping hand, or that it is unable to devise a method
to break down and bring in subjection to the laws a great corporation which monopolizes inter-state trade at will, and does not scruple to paralyze
a large portion of the trade of the world till it forces the acceptance of conditions that leaves little margin
for profit to any concern except itself. Then again what have we to show for all the time and money spent by Mr. Hewitt and his Labor Committee?

UNDINE.

General Rice, the alleged author of the arrears of pensions bill, is one of the candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Ohio.
It appears that some of the General's opponents are trying to rob him of the doubtful honor of being the author of the pension bill at all. This is wrong. If any honor attach to the bill General Rice should have it. In fact it should be pinned to his coattails with all possible security. Any man who hankers after the notoriety
of being the author of a bill to spend necessarily $100,000,000 of the people's money, in times like these,
should get every bit of it and be forced to keep it, too.—Balto. Bulle- tin.

Hon. A. S. Hewitt announces that,
after a careful investigation, he has satisfied himself that the charges of irregularity in fiscal operations which he recently brought against Secretary
Sherman, are not founded on fact.
He had no hesitation, he said, in declaring that in his judgment Mr.
Sherman's fiscal operations were entirely above suspicion. This frank and manly avowal is as honorable to Mr. Hewitt's as to Mr. Sherman's integrity.

Is your life worth 25 cents? If it is do not neglect a cough or cold.
Use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup at once and be cured by that never failing remedy.

The Grasping Southern Temper.

What was said with a tone of menace by Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, has been said again with a tone of ex-postulation and advice by Senator Hill, of Georgia. The Senator tells his Democratic friends at the South
that they are likely to kill the party
very quickly if they open the door for the payment of war claims and the promotion of Southern jobs. His remarks are all the more significant because he is regarded with hostility
by those who claim to lead and rule
the Democratic party of Georgia.
The grasping temper which he assails is nevertheless the temper of the controlling element in Southern Democracy; it is intolerant, uncompromising and desperate, and it means mischief, either to the Democratic party or the public credit.
Yielding to it will bankrupt the Government. Resisting it will disrupt Democracy.

This spirit finds manifestation in many forms. In Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi, we judge from the tone of the Democratic press, the demand for local improvements, for the building of levees, and for completion of a Southern road to the Pacific, is very strong. In Louisiana the same objects are favored, and the establishment of a steamship line to Brazil. In Virginia and the Atlantic States, the special objects favored are different, but the spirit is the same. The Democrats who attempt to check it comprehend and describe it perfectly. They allege, and it is true, that a large number of influential men at the South are Democrats only because they hope to make money thereby. Others are Democrats only because the Democratic party is the most ready to repudiate irksomely debts. Conservative papers like The New Orleans Times, while they assert that the repudiators do not fairly represent the people, are constrained to admit that they have gained the upper hand in Democratic councils; and the same is true in Tennessee, in Virginia, and in other Southern States. To rob creditors and to bare holes into the treasury—
this appears to be the end and aim of the Southern Democracy, if that party is to be judged by its most active and conspicuous representatives in several States.

Against this ruinous tendency there ought to be a general uprising of the honest, intelligent and patriotic elements at the South. Business men and bankers ought to resist it, because they know that repudiation means stagnation. Property-owners ought to resist it, because better prices for property can only come through revival of business and increase of immigration. All tax payers ought to resist it, for the burdens imposed by the Government may be multiplied
many times, without satiating the hunger of claimants and jobbers. All patriotic citizens, whether they were once on the wrong side like Senator
Hill, or on the right side, like Mr.
Bragg, ought to resist a movement which threatens to bankrupt the nation, and end in repudiation and dishonor.

What men ought to do, and what
men will do, unhappily, are not always the same. But there are some hopeful signs of a reaction within the Democratic party. The intolerance of the jobbers, claimants and repudiators will presently drive those who care for the public welfare into still more active resistance, and it is altogether possible that a really conservative and patriotic party may presently begin to show itself at the South.

General Bragg's speech has excited unpleasant emotions in the breasts of the Solid Southern editors, as well as in those of the Solid Southern statesmen. One editor in Charleston tells him he "made an ass of himself,"
and by a remarkable coincidence of great minds another editor in New Orleans remarks that "what the country has needed, long and sadly, is an artistic standard by which to measure idiots, and Bragg comes forward with the article. If Bragg hadn't felt himself to be an ass he wouldn't have brayed so loud." Now, what is all this anger and choice invective
about, if the South hasn't any claims?
The Charleston editor protests that the claims are all loyal, and that Southern Democrats have no excuse for advocating them "except that the money will indirectly benefit their section by being spent there." Precisely; and that is the secret of the whole business. It is the old story of "rebellious the waste places of the South." It is nonsense to talk about the South not favoring these claims, so long as all efforts to head off payment are met by denunciation
like this.

The New York Times says the cause of the recent peace assuring convention of "Northern men" at Charlotte, N. C., was a desire on the part of those Northern men to unload their lands upon other Northern men who might be attracted by peaceful assurances, in order that they might move North again. This explanation is original.

A New President of the French Re- public.

On the 30th ulto., Marshal Mac-Mahon resigned his office as President of the French Republic. The majority in the two Chambers insisted upon the removal of certain prominent officers of the Army, because of their want of full sympathy with Republicanism, but Mac-Mahon refused, declaring that he would not sign any decree removing brave Generals—his friends and companions—whose term of command would expire in five months. His place has been filled by the election of Francois Paul Jules Grevy, the recognized head of the Conservative Republicans of France. Mr. Grevy was born August 13, 1813, and is consequently in his sixty-sixth year.

It does not seem to be generally known, as it shall be, that the present
year's trade will pay off the whole remainder of the outstanding foreign debt. That is the calculation at Washington and New York in consequence of the enormous preponderance of our exports of domestic produce and merchandise. The crisis is therefore one of the grandest in our history. All attempts to create a foreign interest to offset our balance
have failed.—Phil. North American.

An Iowa Greenback legislator recently asked the Superintendent of the State Insane Asylum if he had received any Greenback patients:
"We are not allowed to admit incurables," was the reply, and the greenbacker dextrously turned the subject.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE CIPHER INVESTIGATION.

WASHINGTON, February 4.—General Hinton has consented to take the position of chairman of the subcommittee of the Potter committee which goes to New York, vice Mc-Mahon, who finds himself unable to go and Mr. Reed has been appointed a member of the sub-committee,
vice General Cox, who also declines.
This morning the lithographed copies of the Florida dispatches were given in and General Butler suggested that the sub-committee might commence with them. Mr. Potter thought they had better wait until the whole were finished, for the reason that the same men were mixed up in more than one of the divisions in which the ciphers have been eluded and that to take the dispatches piecemeal would necessitate the calling of these men to the stand perhaps half a dozen times. It was intimated that by this evening the lithographing and the South Carolina dispatches would also be finished and, upon learning this, the majority of the committee were in favor of adopting General Butler's suggestion. The sub-committee, which now consists of Messrs. Hinton, (chairman), Springer, Stenger, Hiseock and Reed, will therefore leave Washington this evening and will commence the investigation of the Florida and South Carolina dispatches at 12 o'clock tomorrow. Mr. Smith Weed will be the first witness called and will be followed by Messrs. Pelton and Marble. Whether Governor Tilden will be called has not yet been decided.

WHY GEN. SHIELDS WAS ELECTED SENATOR FROM MISSOURI.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The election of General James Shields to the United States Senate by the Legislature of Missouri, was effected not to honor and old soldier, but to punish a disobedience of party orders and a breach of party discipline. It is an interesting story.

During the late war General John McNeal was a Union Brigadier in the Department of the Missouri, being in charge of certain military operations within the State from which General Shields has been elected as a "Union Senator." In 1862 a number of prominent Union men disappeared from within the district over which McNeal was in command, and no other means of recovering them
or of learning their fate being available, General McNeal arrested ten of the most notorious bushwhackers,
holding them as hostages for the return of the Union men within a given time, or retaliation would follow. The Union men were not restored to their families nor ever heard of afterward; and, according to promise, the bushwhackers paid
the penalty with their lives—furnishing an example that had the effect on lessening the attractive features of bushwacking.

After the war General McNeal,
who was respected by the people, returned to his home and was elected sheriff of his county. During the second session of the present Congress President Hayes nominated him to be Inspector of Indian Agencies. Soon after his name was sent in Senator Armstrong was notified
by prominent Democrats in Missouri not to vote for the confirmation of McNeal or he himself would be rejected by the Missouri legislature.

Disregarding these threats he did vote for McNeal, and has paid the penalty.

Armstrong has been a life-long Democrat, and, being a man of means, has for years contributed liberally toward the legitimate expenses of his party. Yet having voted for a Union man, in spite of the order not to do so, it caused him to be denounced from the five weeks remaining of the term for which he was appointed by the governor.

While pretending to elect Shields for five weeks, as a compliment to the "Union" sentiment, the Missouri legislature thus put out one whose alliance was voting for a Union official nominated by the President, and at the same time they elected a Confederate brigadier for six years. Yet we are told "the war is over."

COUNTERFEITERS CAPTURED.

WHEELING, W. V., Feb. 3.—A gang of counterfeiters and moon-
shiners have infested Preston county,
this State, for several months, and have carried on their operations in an old unworked coal bank on the Morgantown and Kingwood turnpike, and it was only through the curiosity of a young woman that the discovery was made last Thursday.

The girl, who had been recently hired by David Stenichel to nurse his wife in sickness, noticed in one of the rooms of the residence an old trunk, and through curiosity opened and looked into it. She saw in it a large lot of nickles, quarters, and half-dollars, besides several dies for making the spurious coin. She went home that evening and told her father what she had seen, and he communicated the information to officers, who sent the news to United States Commissioner Henshaw,
of Grafton. Warrants were issued yesterday morning for the arrest of Stenichel, Campbell and Williams, and placed in the hands of United States Marshal Alexander, who summoned a number of men and went into Preston county.

After a desperate fight with the moonshiners the marshal succeeded in arresting all three of them, and late at night started for Clarksburg for the purpose of taking the men before United States District Attorney Golf for a preliminary hearing. On the way Stenichel confessed that he had been made a dupe of by Campbell and Williams—the men who did the counterfeiting, and who had paid him for circulating the money in the neighborhood. His pay was from the money they had made, and so perfect was the spurious coin that experts found it difficult to detect it.
Stenichel was held as a witness, and the other two in the sum of $2,000
each for their appearance before the United States District Court. The moonshiners were preparing to move to other fields when arrested. These men are supposed to belong to a gang that is represented to be in Eastern Pennsylvania.

ONLY A SLIGHT BREEZE.

WASHINGTON, February 2.—The morning hour, which the Southern Democrats have for so long endeavored to obtain, was permitted to come up in the regular order of business yesterday morning. The debate was not as heated as had been expected,
time and political expediency having modified the ardor of the Southern-ners. General Bragg, however, was made the target of attack and ridicule. No one came to his help, but it is understood that at the earliest opportunity the plucky little Northern Democrat will reply. The Southerners taunted him yesterday
with being a Republican in disguise;
with having sought Republican votes; with being now an enemy in the Democratic camp, and with having undertaken a ridiculous thing in threatening that the Northern minority should turn the Southern majority out of the Democratic party.
Chalmers, of Mississippi, insisted that there had been much consistent loyalty to the Union in the South,
and that it was a loyalty which deserved more consideration even than that at the North. Mills, of Texas, however, retorted that the only loyalty in the South was that of snacks, bummers and camp followers, who now seek, in the name of devotion to the Union, the payment of claims.

The most conspicuous fact throughout the debate was reference by every Southern speaker to the loss of four millions of dollars by the liberation of the slaves, and at least the indirect suggestion that the time would come when the South should be compensated for that loss. Indeed two of the speakers reminded the House that the war debt is not yet paid, and intimated that it might not be until there was a better equalization of the results of the federal taxation in the South. It was insisted that the fourteen millions still remaining in the captured and abandoned property
funds belong to the South; that the general government is only trustee of it, and that it must be paid back, and that the threats of bankrupting the government are not worthy of consideration.

LOCAL NEWS.

Subscribers who find an X marked after their names, will understand that they are in arrears, and that we need the money.

—The weather is very unsettled. —The County Commissioners meet on Monday.

—Rev. B. Ison is holding a protracted meeting at Portland.

—Messrs. George Mason and T. J. Pothard have been at Kingwood during the past week.

—Mr. Townsend returned home on Monday. His sister, Mrs. Armstrong, is considered out of danger.

—The familiar salutation in Oakland, when one merchant meets another, is, "have you any empty cigar boxes?"

—There is not a case of Neuralgia which can be at once relieved by the use of Keller's Roman Liniment. At all drug stores. Price 50 cents.

—Messrs. J. K. and A. Matthews started Thursday morning on a trip through the States of Nebraska and Iowa. They will be absent about six weeks. —Cumt. Times.

—The mystery concerning George Lisch still remains unsolved, nothing having ever been heard of him, and it is more than probable that there will never anything further be known.

—The Cumberland Times says that it has been informed that the Cumberland and George's Creek railroad from Cumberland to L. is now being built, and that the necessary funds have already been subscribed.

—The subterranean fire that had been burning beyond Pompey Smith, in Allegany county, is apparently spreading among the veins of coal. A large body of coal belonging to the Consolidation Company is immediately threatened, and if let alone other valuable properties must suffer. To arrest its progress would require much expenditure, and every moment's delay must make the matter worse.

—The Cumberland Times of Thursday says: Mr. George Charles arrived yesterday morning from Washington. His family came with him on the train, but continued on to Grantsville, where they will make a short stay. It is Mr. Charles' intention to remain several weeks in our midst and will perhaps make this his home. We would heartily welcome him back and hope he may decide once more to become a resident of our city.

—Margie, a five-year old daughter of Mr. Etchell Neill, of Cumberland, received a frightful injury on Monday evening. Her brother was engaged in chopping wood in the yard, and the little girl came in the way just as he threw the axe back to make a stroke, inflicting a gash upon her neck, just under the jaw bone, about five inches in length. Prompt medical assistance removed all immediate danger, and it is hoped she will recover. Her brother had a moment before put the child out of the yard, and he had no idea of her being near him.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—The funeral sermon of Rich R. White will be preached by Rev. J. M. Davis, at 10 o'clock.

—Visit of Collector Bruce. Deputy Collector Bruce put in an appearance at Oakland Monday and visited every merchant in town, asking of each, "Have you any empty cigar boxes?" A fine attaches to the use of a cigar or tobacco box for any other purpose than the original intention, unless the stamp is taken off. He found at nearly every store one or more boxes used in violation of law. What will be done about it, is a question which several wait with anxiety to be answered.

—The Rolling Mill. Circumstances have rendered it necessary to increase the force at the rolling mill of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in this city, and we heretofore mentioned that such addition would be made. It seems that the increase will be even greater than we at first supposed, as we are informed that seven furnaces will be started this morning—five in the puddling and two in the bar mill. An intelligent gentleman upon whose opinions we have in times past, found to be very correct, gives us the pleasing assurance that it will not be long before the working force in the mill will be still further increased. It is a fact patent to everybody in the city that the sufferings of the poor in our midst have not been as great, or the destitution as extensive as last winter, though the present winter has already exceeded the past in severity, and we attribute this amelioration in a great degree to the resumption of work in the rolling mill. —Cumt. Times, Monday.

Cipher This.

If our readers are inclined toward deciphering the mysterious, we offer them the annexed puzzle and recommend the original riddle to the careful consideration of those of our readers who think it means them. By a careful and continued application for a time it may be solved, and we cannot think when solved, a very great length of time will pass before the benefit of a solution will be felt in a RYOUR form that we can really appreciate. This conclusion may be problematic, but we anxiously await its determination, trusting it may result in our favor. —Ecchange.

I
FY OUO
WEFO
RYOUR
PAPE
RPA
YU
P

Almost a Fire.

What might have been a serious conflagration began Friday noon last, the chimney of the house occupied by Mr. A. B. Woodcock, on Oak street, being discovered on fire. A breeze was blowing at the time, and but for its discovery and prompt suppression might have resulted disastrously. The "fire department" was promptly on hand and the fire was soon subdued. Some damage was done by water, though not much. Our citizens should be very careful of their dwellings, especially during the winter and spring, when we have such high winds.

Spelling School.

Mr. Geo. T. Porter, teacher of the school at South Point, had a spelling match at that place on Friday night of last week. A party of young gentlemen from town went out, and we learn spent a very pleasant time. Quite a number of persons from the neighborhood were present, and everything passed off pleasantly. After spelling for some time a short recess was taken, after which a debate was indulged in on the question as to whether intemperance or war is the cause of the more misery. The judges decided in favor of war.

The assembly dispersed about half past eleven, each one having spent an enjoyable time, and resolved to be present next time.

The Literary.

The Literary Society met as usual on Saturday evening in Legge's Hall, at 7 o'clock. The meeting was a very interesting one, consisting of the following performances: The Excelsior, read by Miss Ella Peddicord; selections, Miss Kate Spedden, Geo. Porter and Norman Cunningham; essay, H. Wheeler Combs; declamations, Thos. Bosley and Harry Lear. All the performers acquitted themselves well. The society is increasing both in numbers and interest, and is becoming quite an attraction, judging by the audience which was present on the last meeting night. They have now a nice, comfortable room, and the members would be glad to see any and all who desire to attend. You would be repaid by going. A good programme has been selected for Saturday night.

GRANTSVILLE, Md., Feb. 24, 1879. ED. REPUBLICAN:—Will you allow me to say that during the past two months it has been rumored that the game law for Garrett county could not be enforced, on account of some defect in the law. Also that the merchants of Oakland bought venison and shipped it east during the month of December. Such have been the rumors your correspondent has heard, and apparently from good authority. As editors are supposed to know everything, will you be kind enough to give us the law (tho' the column of your valuable paper? If the editor cannot answer, will Mr. G. W. Wilson, Mr. Browning, or somebody else please tell the readers of THE REPUBLICAN what is, and what is not the law? We mean to be law abiding, but if our neighbors kill and sell deer in the month of December, we would like to share in the sport.

Truly yours, B.

[The omnibus local law bill for Garrett county, passed at the session of 1878, has been declared unconstitutional by our Circuit Court, and the question has been referred to the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Pending the decision of that tribunal we would advise our citizens not to violate any of the provisions of the bill. On inquiry we are assured that no venison was bought or shipped from Oakland in December. —ED. REPUBLICAN.]

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending February 6:

A. Hunter Boyd, trustee, to Daniel E. Beckman, a part of a tract of land called "Hinche's Discovery."

L. M. Cresap and wife, to George Ruckie, the interest of L. M. Cresap and wife in and to Military Lot No. 2393; $92.50.

WELLSVILLE, O., Feb. 2d, 1879.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—January opened very cold and stormy, continuing cold and stormy during the first half of the month. The sleighing was excellent, affording the young folks much enjoyment. Singing schools, literaries, &c., were well attended, and "surprises" were the order of the day; or rather, of the night.

I believe very few accidents occurred, considering the amount of travel. A Mr. McEane was one day returning from Wellsville in a sleigh, together with his wife. When about half way home the horse took a fright at something, kicked the sleigh to pieces and then ran away, dragging Mrs. McEane, who had become entangled in the lines, to a considerable distance. She was rescued from her perilous position with but slight injuries.

For two weeks past the weather has been quite mild. Some days the sun shines so brightly and the air is so warm, that one's thoughts turn to spring. Mail has taken the place of the "beautiful snow," making locomotion rather unpleasant.

We are slowly but surely getting on our feet, but so much snow fell during the early part of this winter that I presume it is doubtful if we have much more.

I see that Mr. Randall and the Democrats are still at war. Hope there will be no bloodshed!

KATE.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of January:

Granville Mail to Emily J. Mail. Christian J. Miller and Bertha E. Gange.

Wm. H. B. Hoff and Mahala Lee. Geo. Vagdan and Mary N. Flego.

REPUBLICAN MOVEMENTS AND DOINGS.

Judge H. H. Goldsborough, United States appraiser of merchandise at Baltimore, whose resignation to date from January 31, was asked by Secretary Sherman, still retains his position. Judge Goldsborough had before Mr. Sherman an opinion that under the law as it stands two appraisers are required for Baltimore. The matter was referred to the Attorney General for his decision. In the meantime Secretary Sherman withdrew his request for the resignation. Mr. John L. Lathicum is the other appraiser.

In regard to the judgeship of the United States District Court for Maryland, information has been sent to Washington that John Carson, of the Baltimore bar, is also spoken of in the event of Judge Giles' retirement. He is said to be a friend of Justice Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court. It is stated that a paper is circulating, or will be circulated, protesting against the appointment of Mr. R. Stockett Matthews to the judgeship. Other Republican lawyers are named in connection with this seat upon the bench. The raid against Collector Jno. L. Thomas is also said to be kept up vigorously at Washington. C. Irving Ditty told President Hayes the other day that unless the White House doors were shut against him he would never cease to come and demand Mr. Thomas' removal until he was removed. Secretary Sherman is represented to have said to some Maryland Republicans who saw him that he intended to tell the President there must be a change in the collection at Baltimore, and that either H. W. Hoffman, J. Morrison Harris, Dr. Steiner, or probably E. H. Webster would be satisfactory as collector to the opponents of Mr. Thomas. The friends of Collector Thomas, however, deny the statement attributed to Secretary Sherman, and probably other rumors about are incorrect also, but of one thing there is a certainty—the opponents are aggressive and active, particularly Mr. Ditty, who is untiring. —Ballo. Sun.

Hon. Wm. T. Hamilton, of Hagerstown, has been down again this week, and registered at Barnum's. His name is prominently mentioned in connection with the next governorship of Maryland, and now occupies a large place in the public mind of this State. The politicians seem to have got wind of Mr. Hamilton's whereabouts, and flocked thither like the swallows, "when they homeward fly." Of course they could do nothing more than vote eternal fidelity, unflinching devotion and a determination to "live or die, sink or swim, survive or perish," with their gallant expectant standard bearer.

We say expectant, because it will be recollected that Mr. Hamilton and his friends were equally as sanguine in 1875. They should remember too, that "there is many a slip between the cup and the lip," and that of all the tricky and slippery people in this country the professional politician takes the premium. By all means Mr. Hamilton and his friends should bear in mind that "eternal vigilance is the price of success." —Baltimorean.

A Year of Plenty.

The year 1878 will long be memorable in the United States for the splendid bountifulness of its harvests. In all the great staples of agricultural production the yield was unprecedentedly large, and it is to this munificence of nature that our improved position to day is mainly owing. Had the crops of last year failed, had they even been no more than a fair average we should not yet have climbed out of that slough of despond, in which, for the past five years, we had been painfully groping. It was because Mother Earth had so wonderfully rewarded the industry of our people that resumption became first a possibility, and then a fact accomplished. Emboldened as we were on our superabundance to send abroad an enormous surplus of cereal produce, and to sell it at a profit in the foreign market, the material wealth of the country was largely increased, the balance of trade in our favor was made heavier than ever, until now we stand on firm ground, and are on the high road to such an era of genuine prosperity as the country has never before known.

For this happy result more than to anything else we are indebted to the wonderful productiveness of the soil, of which the report now published by the Department of Agriculture gives the best idea.

As every one knows, the great agricultural staple of this country is Indian corn. For four years immediately preceding 1878 a succession of large crops had been garnered, and we should have done very well had the average of these four years been no more than maintained. Instead of that, however, the aggregate yield for 1878 actually exceeded that of the preceding years. In those States from which the bulk of the supply formerly came there was a slight falling off, but the crops in the Northwest were so prodigious that the decrease elsewhere was not only overcome, but thirty million bushels placed to the good. There had been no such change in the average as could account for this increased yield, which must be attributed to the greater industry and skill of the cultivator, combined with exceptionally favorable circumstances of nature. The oat crop is also described as the largest ever known, which is, however, due rather to increased acreage than to a greater productiveness of the land under cultivation. In the yield of barley the aggregate increase is on the same scale, the total crop secured being in round numbers 42,000,000 bushels, as against 31,500,000 for 1877. The credit for this advance, however, belongs to one State California having increased her acreage from 450,000 acres to 650,000 acres, and nearly doubled her yield. With regard to rye it is the same story, only more so, the entire yield being about six and a half larger last year than it was in 1877, and amounting to nearly 18,000,000 bushels. Particulars of the cotton crop are not forthcoming, but it is known to have been significantly successful. Of hay and tobacco there was also an abundant harvest, the increased yield being estimated at twenty per cent. So far as it regards the potato and fruit crops the report is less satisfactory. The hot, dry weather of last summer had an unfavorable effect upon the first decreasing the yield from 170,000,000 bushels to 121,000,000, while, with the exception of apples, the fruit crop generally failed. In California the yield of grapes shows a great falling off, owing to the ravages of the phylloxera, but it is claimed that the quantity secured will be sufficient for all purposes, and, even if it does not, we can very well afford to make shift with a smaller supply of grapes and California wines when in the cereals nature has been so prodigal.

It is probable that no country since the world began was ever blessed with such a harvest as that which we last year garnered. It is the largest we ever had, and ours are the largest on record. But, while there had never been such a harvest before, it is more than likely that there will be many such again, for the maximum productiveness of the United States is not yet in sight. Every year the resources of the country are being more developed. Through the bitter but salutary teaching of hard times many have learned to look to the land for a living, and so a large proportion of the surplus population with which our great cities have been gorged has gone West. There are also signs of a great revival of immigration. Under the changed conditions from which she is suffering, it is simply impossible for England to sustain her people. Thousands of them will be forced to seek a refuge elsewhere, and for such we have a welcome. There is room for them all, and as they come and fill the country up, we may, under Providence, except such harvests as will throw even that of 1878 into the shade. That agricultural wealth is the sure foundation of national prosperity is a truth which the history of the world has proved. How readily established, then, is the prosperity of these United States! —Phil. Inquirer.

JUDGE RIVES' ALLEGED USURPATION.

—In the Virginia House of Delegates, on Friday last, Peter J. Carter, a colored member, presented a substitute for the report on the alleged usurpation by Judge Alexander Rives, of the United States District Court, of the rights of the State courts. Carter's substitute charges, among other things, that through unequal administration of the laws, of persons indicted and tried for the same class of offenses, two colored men are convicted to one white man; that the terms of imprisonment imposed upon colored men thus convicted are nearly double those imposed upon whites similarly convicted; that in the face of innumerable killing of colored men by whites, it is of rare occurrence that whites are ever indicted for such homicides, and no white man has ever been hanged in Virginia for killing a colored man, while, on the other hand, hanging of colored men is of monthly occurrence. The substitute further states that these facts demonstrate that citizens of Virginia are practically denied equal protection of the laws. On Saturday Carter spoke at length in favor of his substitute.

The dreaded "plague" which, it is asserted, is spreading rapidly through Southeastern Europe, had its origin in the typhus and other fevers which destroyed so many lives at the seat of war in Turkey during the Russian campaign. In view of the severe weather, the unexampled commercial depression, and the mutterings of the Socialists, the announcement that pestilence is to be added to their misery, will intensify the anxiety not only of the people of Europe but of their rulers. Pestilence and famine are even more fatal to thrones than to the lives of individuals. A strict quarantine will, doubtless, be established by the countries which are not as yet affected, but it is doubtful whether the dread disease can be prevented from extending by any human agency.

The government authorities are demanding a revenue tax from all vendors in alcoholic liquors and compounds which have distilled liquors as a basis. Many of those compounds will affect individuals using them in the same manner as Jersey lightning or a meaner article of whiskey, either of which will bring its man if he should approach within the radius of its influence. These tonics are only the old enemy in disguise, and so long as there are those who have a hankering after that which intoxicates, these infractions of the law will be practiced by those who think more of a dollar than they do of the welfare of their fellow men. If not ing else will answer, a tax amounting to a total prohibition ought to be imposed upon all vendors of these vile compounds.

It seems that Col. Pelton, "the nephew of his uncle"—Mr. Tilden—is to be made the scape goat of the cipher business. The preliminary step was taken the other day when, in the New York World, a correspondent from Albany described at full length the peculiar features of the Colonel's past career. In this correspondence, he is described as being a lobbyist, a railroad speculator, a confidential agent who was not to be trusted, and generally as a person of doubtful and rather shady reputation. It is a pity, however, for Mr. Tilden's sake, that all this was not discovered several years ago. The discovery now is hardly in time to do the uncle of his nephew any good.

The Arlington ejection case now goes to the United States Supreme Court. The judgment of the lower court restores the estate to General Lee and calls for the ejection of all tenants who have been in possession since the transfer of the estate under a tax sale in 1863. This includes the United States as a tenant of the National Cemetery, the 15,000 bodies of dead Union soldiers that rest therein and the Government Signal Office and station at Fort Whipple. Gen. Lee having established his claim to the property, is now willing to part with the estate for a fair price. Should the Supreme Court affirm the decision of the District Court, the Government will undoubtedly purchase the cemetery on the estate.

The Anne Arundel county election cases on trial in the United States Circuit Court terminated Tuesday in the conviction of the indicted judges. It is likely that the jury paid the most attention to the substantial fact that in all the maneuvering with the location of the polls in the Eighth district of the county, very good care was taken that they should not be removed from a locality of which the negroes entertained the most thorough dread. Perhaps it was only a coincidence that the polling place was established on the day of election so very near to what was dangerous ground for the colored voters to venture upon, but the concatenation of circumstances is hardly explicable by any theory of chance.

The government received for taxes on spirits for the past year, $50,500,000. This is the direct lever of our crimes, rags and distress. What a source from which a civilized government should receive its support!

Said a landlady of a public house, at the verge of death, "If I had my time to live over again, I would sweep crossings, or beg, or even starve to death, before I would again see the misery which I and my trade have produced."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Collector's Sale.

I hereby give notice that on Saturday, March 1st, 1879, at 2 o'clock P. M., on the Jameson farm, in district No. 2, Garrett county, Md., I will receive for sale the following property, which I have seized and levied upon to satisfy the State and county taxes for the years 1876 and 1877, now due and assessed to H. B. Jamison, namely:

Forty (40) bushels of Oats, more or less.

Eight (8) bushels of Rye, more or less.

Eight (8) bushels of Buckwheat, more or less.

Three (3) bushels of Wheat, more or less.

Twenty-five (25) bushels of Corn, more or less.

A. MILLER, Collector of State and county taxes for the year 1877. 2 8 3

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the roads through which the petition of A. Miller and P. T. Garthright and others, for the road leading from the Lane Stone Quarry of Solomon Turney, to Spence Hollow road, and examine whether the said petitioned road should be located, will meet on the premises, on the 10th day of March, 1879, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said location of said petitioned road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duties in the premises.

W. M. P. GROVES, JOHN SWALE, JAMES GUARD, Examiners. 2 8 4

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT, OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands FOR SALE.

NO. 1.

One-half acre of ground in the town of Oakland, improved by a

Two-story new framed dwelling house. Good location; Title indisputable. This property will be sold very low.

NO. 2.

One-half acre of ground in the centre of Oakland, improved by a Large Frame Dwelling House and out buildings. A well of excellent water in the yard. This is one of the best properties in the town. Can easily be divided into three good building lots. Title good.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 80 ACRES, 70 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House, containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 20 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price, and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

Apply to H. WHEELER COMBS, Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS. GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY. Also an Improved Hand Seed Sower. Jail-y Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 15, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will receive Sealed Proposals, until 12 o'clock M., February 10th, 1879, for the building of a Bridge across Yough River, in District No. 2, known as the Fike Bridge, between Guard's and Selbysport.

Said bridge to be built according to the following plan and specifications: To be built on the present abutments, but raised one foot higher; length 250 feet; length of span 160 feet; stone pier in centre; said bridge built on the same plan as the Friendsville bridge. Timbers and pier to be of the same dimensions as above bridge. To be as wide as present abutments will allow, and covered with good pine slates.

Said bridge to be completed on or before the first day of July next, amount to be levied at annual levy of 1879.

The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order County Commissioners. W. H. HAGANS, Clerk. 1 18 3

The fact that Capt. Paul Boyton was to make a trip up the East River yesterday in his new life-saving suit was kept a profound secret. But somehow or other the matter leaked out that the Captain would make a voyage from the Battery to Hunter's Point in the afternoon, and Castle Garden was besieged by a gazing, eager, jostling crowd of men and boys long before noon.

"Clear the way!" yelled the Captain promptly at one o'clock, and the dense crowd parted for a moment as Paul Boyton darted down to the edge of the dock and looked over.

"Well, boys, I'm off; good-bye," said Captain Boyton, paddling away vigorously. In an instant the air was rent with three cheers for the courageous American, who was rapidly floating around the Battery toward the East River. At the Battery dock a boat put out to accompany Boyton. The Captain pulled out into the middle of the stream, and was soon rocking and tossing on the heavy tide swells. Along the river front could be seen crowds of

When opposite Blackwell's Island the Captain began to lug its shore when suddenly the guard-boat shot out and the voyager was hailed by a striped convict with, "Hallo, there. Who the deuce are you, and what are you driving at?"

"I'm on a little pleasure trip, and expect to go ashore presently."

"You do, eh? Well, I guess so. And what's more, you'll come ashore here. You can't play any roots on me."

A few minutes before four o'clock the crowd which lined the river at Porter's Point caught sight of the bobbing flag and gleaming paddles of the lifeboats. As the boats and all the flags were dipped, while the little speck of the water swayed its colors with a vibrant glow, the crowd on shore broke into a shout. When a few hundred yards off to starboard a rocket was sent up from the landing place and exploded in the air with a terrific roar. Captain Boyton seized his colors, and, standing up on the water tower, waved them high in the air. The cracked beneath his weight. Then he unhooked the bottle string around his neck and took a long and hearty drink while the multitude on shore applauded with cheers and yells.

Migratory Mexicans. The lower orders of the Mexican nation are a strange people. They are ignorant and non-progressive, being content with the simple and satisfying of their wants with the most ordinary food and clothing. You find them today where their ancestry was 100 years ago, having not moved a peg in the social, moral or social progress. They inherit and maintain the customs and manners of yore, but yet live in comparative contentment, evidence of which is that the number of life's pleasures cannot be increased— that their condition is an unalterable one. But it is not our purpose at this time to review the character of this people, but to discuss the country— we are simply going to speak of the manner in which these people travel from place to place, and give a description of a most extraordinary and interesting migration, a novel even upon the streets of San Antonio.

The lower orders of the Mexican nation are a strange people. They are ignorant and non-progressive, living from hand to mouth, and satisfying their ordinary needs for food and clothing. You find them today where their ancestry was 100 years ago, having not moved a peg in the way of mental, moral, or social progress. They inherit a material abundance, and a manner of life, but yet live in comparative contentment, evidently concluding that their share of life's pleasures cannot be increased— that their condition is an unalterable lot. But, before we close this chapter, let us take time to review the character, habits, and customs of the Mexican peasantry—we are simply going to speak of the manner in which these people travel from place to place, and give a brief description of the manner of their attention yesterday—now even upon the streets of San Antonio.

made the others to follow. The preparation for the journey was hurried. The horses were drawn up and repaired, their horses, mules and donkeys are collected and kept within sight, biding the arrival for the day of departure, and when that day comes, packed in the wagons, and away they go in a few minutes. The horses, donkeys and mules are hitched up with harness made for the occasion of ropes and rawhide, and probably a fifteen hand horse and rusty little jacks, and a pair of mules, and a pack of mules, and a pack in the order mentioned, form a train. Something that can pull is wanted—no matter for looks—appearances are at the time disregarded. The supplies for the journey will be carried in the wagons, and on the backs of, a few pounds of salt and some red peppers. Probably a beef has been slaughtered and its flesh dried for consumption on the way if not, the chances are taken of finding an our carriage yesterday. The people were emigrants, and there were seven wagon and cart loads of them. The first wagon was pulled by ten donkeys, the second by eight, the third by a donkey, a horse and two mules, the fourth by four donkeys and the remaining three by six. In the bottom of each vehicle was a small hut, built of mud, in which the driver and his family was their merchandise, and depended upon to give the first start to them in their new home. They and their chickens were stowed away on families, and the children hung on to them as a large quantity of corn sheaves and apparatus in general for tannal and cigarette making. Upon inquiry our reporter learned that the tannal was a small inland Mexican town for New York City. They were told that tannal makers were wanted in that great metropolis by some commercial gentlemen, and that they were to be taken in, and so packed up, lock, stock and barrel, even supplying themselves with the corn sheaves to enfold the tannals

—Does wax-work?

—Firm friends—partners.

—Where is the spelling school?

—Cremation is called a paralyzed industry.

—A cavalry charge is sometimes only slay-ride.

—It is better to give than receive—a bill.—N. Y. Herald.

—The blue-glass insanity has got to Germany and rages there.

—The possession of a dog disqualifies a person from receiving aid from the pauper fund in Chesterfield, England.

—The greenback no longer has a weak back; but we haven't seen a fifty dollar one for a week back.—Norristown Herald.

—Delilah subdued a man by cutting his hair. Most women do it by pulling the man's hair out by the roots.—Chicago Times.

—Probably the first instance of an Indian seeking a divorce is reported from Bangor, Me., where a red man wants to be separated from his squaw.

—New York had sixty-one business failures in December, most of them occasioned by "extravagance in the kitchen and love of dress in the parlor."

The author of "Grandfather's Clock" lives in New York and is well-known. —K. A. New York.

"—salmon." "Howe-Eye.
—An old lady recently directed the attention of her husband to a pair of twins, remarking as she did so, "How much these two children do look alike, especially the one this way."
—Study the classics, young man. It's worse than dime novels or Injuns to raise hair. We have just read that "Ab Hoc et Ab Hae." Cousins, no doubt. "Keokuk Constitution.
—An ordinary shawr farrier can take

—Among other receipts, an exchange gives one to change red hair to yellow. Yet yellow hair has its advantages. Among others it is an excellent match for butter, and that's sometimes surely.

—A Wisconsin student said, in response to a reproof for the lowliness of his position in the class: "Well, Professor, never mind. I presume I am a much to blame as you are." —Exchange

—The California dairymist who put rook in the center of every cheese he shipped to South America was actuated
by the kindest feelings. He thought the buyer of the cheese would want the stone to kill the skippers with.—*Freem.
Press.*

—Out in Nevada they mean business
even when they go to a funeral.
A citizen who went twenty-eight miles
one a few days ago, and who, upon his return, found the deceased

—It is said that the real estate of Manhattan Island has been so taken up that there are not over four hundred building lots for sale above the lower

A close-up photograph of a horizontal metal rod. The rod is light-colored and shows signs of wear and damage. There are two dark, circular spots on the left side, possibly holes or pits. A small crack is visible on the right side of the rod. The background is a plain, light-colored surface.

region that "the climate appears to be conducive to romance and sentiment: people are more loving there, and fall in love more quickly than in any other country I know of." All of which may be true; but does she know a clime where people fall in love more slowly than in any other? While French canny and chewing wax and sleigh-rides and store clothes are as costly, and young men's salaries as low as they are, that's the country many are sighing

A Leper in Chicago.
DR. JAMES NEVINS HYDE repeated to the Medical Society on yesterday afternoon, at No. 188 South Clark street, a lecture delivered by him at Rush Medical College December 11th, in regard to a case of leprosy in this city which he had then just discovered. He exhibited the patient, the first leper that a good many of the doctors had seen, and gave the history of the case. He

DR. JAMES NEVINS HYDE repeated to the Medical Society on yesterday afternoon, at No. 188 South Clark street, a lecture delivered by him at Rush Medical College December 11th, in regard to a case of leprosy in this city which he had then just discovered. He exhibited the patient, the first leper that a good many of the doctors had seen, and gave the history of the case. He

On his next voyage he deserted the ship at Honolulu and stayed there several months. In the course of another cruise he spent five months there, and it must have been there that he contracted the disease, though it did not develop itself till after many years. Leprosy is epidemic in the Sandwich Islands, and a Molokai there is a hospital for lepers.

The patient returned to the United States in 1861 and enlisted in the Fourth New Hampshire Volunteers. In 1862

The disease began to make its appearance four years ago, but he had no idea what it was, and no one else discovered it until Dr. Hyde saw him early last December, a few months after he arrived in this city. His disease is anesthetic leprosy. He has no eyelashes or eyebrows. His hands, feet and legs, as far up as his knees, are utterly without sensation. Neither the lancet nor any degree of cold has any effect on him. The tint of the skin is yellowish brown.

The anæsthetic leprosy is the white or Asiatic leprosy, and is the same that is described in the Pentateuch. Absolutely nothing is known of the cause of the disease. There are not over 10 lepers in the United States. These are found in a small colony in South Carolina, among some of the Creoles in Louisiana, in a Scandinavian colony

BRAZIL and the South American republics receive eighty-five per cent. of their foreign goods from Western Europe and only fifteen per cent. from the United States, chiefly in flour, provisions, petroleum and lumber. England, France and Germany have the advantage on account of their long

The sayings and doings of the country editor are not so notable now a days as in the old times when rural papers were rarely conducted on a cash basis and the plights of the worried fellow on the tripod, who accepted cordwood or dried pumpkins or almost anything eatable or saleable for subscriptions, were frequent and painful and free. Men in desperate straits are afflicted with strange whimsies, and the expression of those diseased literary lights was tained this paragraph: "As we walked past a couple of ladies on the street the other day, one of them, so we were informed, observed a large patch on our pants, and made merry over the discovery. Well, we do wear old clothes; it is true; but we might afford to treat ourselves to better ones if the husband of the woman we refer to would come to the office and pay us $18, which he has been owing for a long time, for his subscription and job work."

THE particulars of the loss of the ill-fated steamer Emly B. Sonder were furnished yesterday by two of the crew, the sole survivors, so far as known, of the wreck, who arrived at this port about noon on the steamer Atlas, from Kingston, Jamaica. They told their story on the dock at the foot of Christopher street, in the very clothes in which they had succeeded in effecting their miraculous escape from a watery grave. The

Every officer and every sailor was at his post of duty, but notwithstanding almost superhuman efforts the water gained on us, first slowly and then rapidly. At five o'clock in the afternoon the melancholy news spread that the fires had gone out, but no one was discouraged. We began to throw cargo and baggage overboard, passengers as well as crew engaged in lightening the vessel as much as possible, and the water gained upon us and from the Souder when she capsized and men and women were seen in the water for the help which no could render.

"The steamer was sinking steadily and tremendous efforts were made to launch the second boat. Of those then on the vessel helped get this boat clear, and we finally succeeded in placing ten persons in it. None of the officers would leave the vessel while a single plank remained left to make whatever preparations could be devised to save life. Anderson and myself were fastening ourselves to the 'boo'ly' hatch (hatch cover) of an elderly gentleman of about fifty years was there, and we induced him to join us. While trying to make the 'boo'ly hatch float, a tremendous sea came along and carried it out upon the water. At that moment the Captain was endeavoring to make a raft for himself and that was the last we saw of him.

we were tossed about on the ocean, and our sufferings during that period can be imagined better than described. We were almost exhausted from exposure, hunger, and thirst, but in this extremity we found tossing about on the waves some canned-oysters which had floated from the Souder, and which gave us great relief.

“On the third day we were sighted by the schooner Herbert Devereux, from Boston for Kingston, Jamaica, and

The seaman Auderson stated that the life-raft on which they saved themselves was swept off the Souder just as she was sinking. They knew nothing whatever about those who had left the vessel in the boats, except that they saw one of the boats turn over; they feared that the rest had perished, about forty of the crew and ten passengers. They were the last on board, and remained

The United States Local Inspectors of Steamships will commence taking testimony regarding the loss of the Souda within a few days. It is reported that evidence will be forthcoming to show that the vessel in question was almost loaded down to the water's edge and husband. On the evening referred to, the married couple had been absent on a visit to some neighbors, and upon returning at a late hour, entering the house, found everything, to all appearance, in usual order, and supposed that Mr. Grover had already retired, and went to bed themselves. Next morning the daughter arose, and having prepared breakfast, went to the adjoining room to call her father, and was horrified to find him lying upon the

Killed by a Meleer.
TUESDAY night last, Leonidas Grove who resided in the vicinity of Newton Fountain County, met his death in a way that is probably without parallel in this or any other country. Mr. Grove was a widower, living on a farm with a married daughter and her husband. On the evening referred to the married couple had been absent a visit to some neighbors, and upon their return at a late hour entering the directly over the breast of the unfortunate man, which was torn through by a cannon shot, and extended downward through the bedding on the floor; holes showed the direction taken by the deadly missile. Subsequent search revealed the fact that the awful calamity was caused by the fall of a meteoric stone, and the stone itself, pyramidal in shape and weighing two pounds and a few ounces, advoirdupois and stained with blood, was unearthed

It's a rule to read messages instantly, before the writer leaves the desk. So you teleglyph 'two and two make five' it's not my place to tell you they make four. I did that once. A tall old man with a cigarette in his mouth, and a tremendous weed on his hat, gave me this message: 'The Fall River bridge leaves the foot of Twenty-third street at 4. Send the donkeys by mail.' I said, 'You're mistaken, sir; the Fall River boat leaves the downtown pier five o'clock, not four. I shall not

A LADY telegrapher says: "I must make it a rule to read messages literally, as they come, before the writer leaves the desk. I received the other day your telegraph 'two and two make five' and I thought, 'it's not my place to tell you your number is wrong.' I did that once. A tall old man came in with a cigarette in his mouth, and a tremendous weed on his hat, gave me this message: 'The Fall River bridge leaves the foot of Twenty-third street at 4. Send the donkeys by mail.'" the pay of the Chief Justice of Massachusetts, and $4,500 less than Chief Justice Waite of the United States Supreme Court receives. But the Judge of the Court of Cassation in France, paid in decorations, so dear to the hearts of Frenchmen.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1879.

NUMBER 51.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

- GROCERIES, &c.
- D. E. OFFUTT, GENERAL MERCHANDISE, Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments, Toys, Trunks, &c.
- G. W. LEGG, GENERAL MERCHANDISE, Cor. Second and Oak sts.
- D. H. LOAR, ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE, General Merchandise, Groceries, Cakes, Jewellery, &c.
- I. W. STALNAKER, Groceries and Provision Store, Corner Third and Oak Streets.
- L. RUSH & SON, GENERAL MERCHANDISE, Cor. Third and Oak sts.
- J. A. GRANT, Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries, SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.
- N. B. WAYMAN, General Merchandise, Cor. Third and Oak sts.
- DAVIS & TOWNSEND, GENERAL MERCHANDISE, Agents Agricultural Machines, Opposite Dulles's Park.
- C. C. MICHAEL, GENERAL MERCHANDISE, Groceries, Cakes, Confectionery, &c., Next to Callahan's Hotel.
- RICHARDSON BROS., GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES, Canned Goods, Fruit, &c.
- HOTELS.
- CORNINGTON'S HOTEL, W. M. CORNINGTON, Proprietor, Main St., Opposite Dulles's Park and Baltimore.
- BOARDING HOUSES.
- MRS. RALPH THAYER, Oak and Third Streets.
- DAVIS HOUSE, Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress, Cor. Oak and Second Streets.
- GEORGE BOSLEY'S, Oak Street.
- LIVERY STABLE.
- THOMAS MARTIN, Opposite Postoffice.
- STOVES AND TINWARE.
- G. A. SHIRER, Oak Street, near Second. A general line of Stoves and Tinware.
- PHYSICIANS.
- DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS, Office on Main Street.
- DR. E. H. BARTLETT, Office Main St., opp. Daily's Park.
- MILLS.
- GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS, PETER MARTIN, Proprietor, Water Street.
- OAKLAND WOOLLEN MILLS, SAM'L LAWSON, Proprietor.
- PLASTERER.
- JAMES ARNOLD, Residence on Fourth Street.
- BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
- W. M. WAGNER, Shop Cor. First and Oak Sts.
- GEO. F. LOUGHIDGE, Leave orders at Express office.
- SURVEYORS.
- J. B. BRANT, Office Opp. Ott's Building, 405 N. H. STREET.
- JOHN HARNED, Address, Post Office.
- JEWELER.
- A. B. WOODCOCK, In Wm. Stouffer's Building, Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.
- MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.
- MRS. M. E. DAVIS, Cor. Oak & Second Sts.
- M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store, Millinery, Gents' Furnishing, and Fancy Goods, and Shoes, Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' Office.
- MAJORS.
- JAS. S. JOHNSON, Residence on First Street.
- LOYD CHAMBERS, Residence on Third Street.
- DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
- GEO. C. STURGEISS, Drugs, Medicines, Perfumery, Toilet Articles, Stationery, Tobacco and Cigars.
- G. W. MERRILL, Near Depot. Fine Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Stationery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Paints, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.
- PAINTING & PAPER HANGING.
- E. J. FRINGER, House and Sign Painter, Leave orders at Daily's Store.
- S. V. B. WARD, HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER, Shop near Davis House.
- BLACKSMITHS.
- CHAS. SINCELL, Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

- JOHN M. JARBOE, Carpenter, Contractor & Builder, Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.
- P. A. CHISHOLM, Carpenter, Contractor, and Builder, Residence next door to Express Office.
- GEO. A. SPEDDEN, Residence opp. School House.
- JOSEPH M. CRIM, Residence on Alder Street.
- A. C. BROOKE, Res. near Republican Office.
- CABINETMAKERS AND UNDERTAKERS.
- A. C. BROOKE, Res. adjoining Gazette Office.
- JOHN SHATZER, Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

- H. WHEELER COMBS, ATTORNEY AT LAW, OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD. Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, Md. Collections promptly attended to. d25y
- GILMORE S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY AT LAW, AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY, OFFICE IN OYSTERS BUILDING, Lower Floor. Particular attention given to conveying, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Louis-Scott, d25y
- J. W. VETTEL, ATTORNEY AT LAW, SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY, OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD. Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, and in the Courts of Appeals of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 20-67.
- DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG, Late Resident Surgeon, New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the EXCLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat. Office, No. 20 South Centre Street, ap2134

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his usual large stock of which he is prepared to make to order upon the shortest notice and in the most

Fall and Winter Cloths,

Cassimeres, Vestings, etc,

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods, and leave their measure for a suit. He has reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

For all work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

VALUABLE MILL PROPERTY

AT OAKLAND

FOR SALE.

The subscriber offers at private sale, a valuable Mill, situated on the Youghiogheny river, in the town of Oakland, and now doing a successful business. In connection with it, never failing water power, it has also a good and almost new 24 Horse Power Engine to which a Saw Mill can be attached. Its location renders it the most desirable for general mill purposes of any in the country. There are also five acres of land, well adapted for building lots, attached, which will be sold together or separate at the option of the purchaser. Also a Two and a half story and pleasantly situated, with all necessary outbuildings, attached, either of which will be sold separately or together. Price VERY LOW, and terms easy.

For further particulars, address, W. A. DAILY, 832 ts Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

350 ACRES

OF

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole Road, about six miles north-east from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.

Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

A Prosperous Farmer.

Mr. A. W. Paul of Dighton, Mass., recently read before the State Board of Agriculture a paper entitled, "My Farming Experience," which excited great interest. We make some extracts from a report of the paper which we find in the New England Farmer:

"Mr. Paul commenced, as a farmer, about thirty years ago, purchasing a small and badly run-out farm of twenty-eight acres, with poor buildings, and a very inferior lot of farming stock and tools, and having very little means, ran in debt for the whole. He first turned his attention to improving his farm, and as a means to the end, to raising pork. In favorable seasons he made a profit on his hogs, and in one year cleared $65 on three, selling the pork at twenty cents per pound, while it cost him but ten cents.

"After giving full attention to dairying, one method of increasing the fertility of the farm was the purchase of all the wood ashes he could gather in the vicinity, either heaped or unleached, paying at the rate of from twelve to seventeen cents per bushel. For twenty years he used annually from 500 to 900 bushels of ashes on his land. He also bought considerable quantities of guano and Brighton fertilizers. One year, finding that he had cleared $300 from the sale of crops, he immediately laid out $1,000 for manure for another year, and for a number of years his purchases of manure averaged some $700, while about $200 worth was made on the farm. He now purchases most of his manure in Boston, on cars, and spreads it in the fall, ploughing it in from two and a half to three inches deep, using a small plough with very sharp point. Special fertilizers are applied in the spring or during the growing season. He never composts his manure, but trusts the soil to do all the composting needed. His work had unimpeded as fully as possible a year ahead, so there is no delay or hesitation when the time comes for pushing things. The crops, as a rule, are sold as soon as they are ready for market, and the proceeds deposited in a bank, from which it is drawn out by checks for paying bills. He invariably pays cash for everything, and purchases at wholesale as far as practicable. Thus no store or blacksmith's bill running up against him to be discounted over when the day for settlement arrives. Prefers to hire money and pay interest on it, to letting small bills accumulate. By paying cash he also finds he is able to make quiet a saving in his purchases.

"His crops have been hay, potatoes and onions. But strawberries have been a leading product. He has been slow to change from one crop to another, but never hesitates to do so, when convinced that a change is advisable. For the past seven years his annual sales have been in the neighborhood of $5,000, sometimes falling a little short, and frequently over-running. During the past year or two the receipts have somewhat fallen off, but, as the expenses have been less, the average net profit has been maintained. He not only plans his work a year in advance, but keeps constantly ahead of his week. His wood-house has a year's stock of seasoned wood on hand all the time, and he finds that one cord of such wood is worth two of that which some other farmers burn which has been exposed to the weather for many months.

"Having unfortunately been 'born very ignorant,' he said he had found books and papers of great use to him. He had usually found it necessary to call to his aid about twelve newspapers and periodicals, including agricultural, political, religious and local publications. He was not unwilling to be called a 'book farmer,' after having learned so much by reading. The money which some would have spent for rum or tobacco, he had laid out in books. He had noticed that many farmers fail in not looking ahead and anticipating wants. Forethought saves a deal of labor, but it is no use to hope to succeed without working for it. The man who hopes to win by his wits, without labor, will, sooner or later, find himself short of capital. His live stock now consists of one cow and two horses, and of the twenty-eight acres contained in the farm only sixteen have as yet been brought under cultivation. Like other men, he had made some mistakes. At one time, he used nitrate of soda so freely on a potato field as to destroy the crop, but he had at another time received as high as $400 for the yield of potatoes from a single acre. After he had been in possession of his farm twenty-two years, he found himself free of debt, and the farm well stocked with such animals and tools as were needed. Since that time, he has been able to maintain himself and family pay his proportion of the public expenses of government and society, keep his farm improving, and lay aside for a rainy day about $1,500 per annum."

"A patient New Jerseyman, who has 'been West,' writes to a New York paper to warn others not to go West. In search of ambrosia and a year, without plenty of money in his pockets. The West is not so 'new' as he thinks, a land flowing with milk and honey as is represented, or it is, the milk and honey don't flow very freely for new comers. The Jerseyman says, quite plaintively: 'I stayed in Colorado Springs about six weeks, and tried Manitou and Colorado City, but could not get anything to do. I tried El Moro, Pueblo, and all the southern towns with the same success. I then went to Leadville, Golden, Georgetown, Black Hawk, Boulder, and back to Denver. I tried every place of business in all of these places, and finally came to the conclusion that the West is not what it is cracked up to be by the Westerners. I have offered my services for $10 per week; I have offered to work for $5; I have begged men to take me for my board; I have offered to work for nothing in that Queen State of the West, but all to no purpose. I had with me as fine letters of reference as any person ever saw, but what good did they do me? 'They say the Western folk are hospitable. I will say this much of them: A man without friends or money stands a great deal better chance of starving to death there than he does here. I am back in Jersey again, and mean to stay there; and if I ever leave a son who talks of going West to make his fortune, I shall send him to the reform school.'

To give publicity to liquor selling, a proposition has been brought before the Board of Aldermen in Springfield, Massachusetts, to require all screens, blinds and curtains to be removed from the doors and windows of barrooms, as a condition of granting a liquor license. The proposition has excited a good deal of interest, though it is by no means a new idea. The Springfield Republican, in referring to this proposed law, says that such an interference with private matters is justifiable on the same principle that justifies any liquor law is very plain. The purpose of a license as well as of a prohibitory law being to check an abounding evil, this measure as an incidental feature stands on the same basis. Clearly, if the law may dictate that a saloonkeeper shall not sell liquor to minors, or after 12 o'clock at night, it is only in accordance with it to require such conditions of observance that with ordinary care, it may be known whether it is lived up to or not. Moreover, the nature of the evil is such that publicity affords probably a more valuable check than the law itself. The great difficulty with the measure before the Aldermen appears to be in enforcing it. The temperance people are agreed that it would be a good thing, though skeptical as to its feasibility. The liquor sellers with one accord condemn it as an unwarrantable interference with the liberties of their traffic.

CURE YOURSELF WITH FOOD.—Dr. Hall relates the case of a man who was cured of his biliousness by going without his supper and drinking lemonade freely. Every morning, says the doctor, this patient arose with a wonderful sense of rest and refreshment, and feeling as though the blood had been literally washed, cleansed and cooled by the lemonade and fast. His theory is that food can be used as a remedy for many diseases successfully. As an example, he cures spitting of blood by the use of salt; epilepsy, by watermelon; kidney affections, by celery; poison, by olive or sweet oil; erysipelas, by pounded cranberries applied to the part affected; hydrophobia, by onions, etc. So the way to keep in good health, is really to know what to eat.

The Indian Democracy is up in arms. The House has passed a bill to submit to the people a constitutional amendment making a residence in the state for six months and in a precinct for sixty days requisite to registration for voting. This would stop the Kentucky voting, which has helped so many Democratic candidates in Indiana.

The relation of intemperance to crime is plainly manifest where drunkenness is repressed by partial or complete prohibition. The cases of towns or villages where, by the arrangement of their founders, no liquors or intoxicating drinks have been allowed to be sold, furnish strong evidence. Vineland, with its 10,000 people, without a grog shop, and a police force of one constable, who is also overseer of the poor, with a salary for both of $75 reports in some years a single crime, and a poor rate swelling to the aggregate of $1 a year. Greeley, in Colorado, is another town of 8,000 inhabitants and no liquor shop. It uses and needs no police force, and in two years and a half only seven dollars was called out of its poor fund. Bayaria, Illinois, a town of the same population, with absolute prohibition, was without a crime. A small town in western New York was founded some years ago by a gentleman, who made it a condition in all his title deeds that if liquors were sold the land should revert to him. The condition became the subject of litigation in our courts, and was held to be valid and enforceable by decree. That village has none of the incidents of intemperance, and the same thing is true of numerous other places whose founders have established prohibition.

It may be said these are not fair examples, because all the inhabitants were teetotalers or temperance men. They are less conclusive, perhaps, but they certainly show the value of the absence of temptation. How is it, then, where prohibition exists by absolute law? I will not take Maine, the luckiest theme of so many contradictions, further than state that in 1870 her convictions for crime under prohibition were only 441, or one in every 1,684, while in our State (exclusive of this city) under license the convictions were 3,473, or one in every 620 souls. Can it be that the rural population of New York is so much more addicted to crime than the people of Maine?

But take Connecticut—fictitiously called 'the land of steady habits.' Under the prohibition law of 1854 crime is shown to have diminished 75 per cent. On the restoration of license in 1863 crime increased 4 per cent. in a single year, and in two years in Hartford, according to the official returns presented by the Rev. Mr. Walker, crime increased in that city 100 per cent. In New London the prison was empty and the jailer out of business. Connecticut has now a local option act. Under it New London lately voted for no license.

If intemperance were a new evil, coming in upon us for the first time like a pestilence from some foreign shore, laden with its awful burden of pauperism and crime, with what horror would the nation enter a plateau its monstrous approach. What severity of laws, what stringencies of quarantine, what activity of resistance would be suddenly aroused. But alas! it is no new evil. It surrounds us like an atmosphere, as it has our fathers through countless generations. It perverts judgments. It poisons habits. It sways passions, it taints churches and tears consciences. It seizes the machinery of our legislature, and it creates a moral phenomenon of perpetual motion, which nature denies to physics; for it licenses and empowers itself to beget in endless rounds the wrongs, vices and crimes which society is organized to prevent and worst of all for our country—it encoils parties like the serpents of Laocoon, and crushes in its folds the spirit of patriotism and virtue.—Chief Justice Noah Davis, of the Supreme Court.

SUPPORTING THE G. S. RAIL.—Here is what an exchange has to say on this subject: "There seems to prevail in some communities an opinion that when a man enters the ministry, and undertakes to preach the gospel, he becomes immediately elevated above the demands of his grosser nature, and is thereafter able to live on the 'love of God.' Not unfrequently his wife and children are expected to be fed upon the same character of food, and to be clothed by some mysterious intervention of providence. To us it has always been a mystery how a minister of the gospel has been able to maintain himself and family of three or six children on the meagrely salaries paid them, often ranging as low as $300 or $400 per year."

A Wall from Louisiana.

The New Orleans Times, a Democratic paper, isn't very enthusiastic over the results of home government. May there not be something in the atmosphere that causes men clothed with power in that State, to commit all the outrages in the name of law, with accounts of which the public ears have been regaled for some years past? On any other theory, we are at a loss to account for the misgovernment reported as the inevitable result of late years, no matter what political party is in power. This is the wall which the Times utters over the result of the Democratic venture at good government. "At the end of two years of genuine self-government we are no better off than we were before, except in the purely sentimental consolation of knowing that we are being misgoverned and impoverished by our own people, instead of by aliens and strangers—with which ethereal, not to say gossamer comfort we shall have to be contented." What can't be cured, must be endured, is the philosophy that brings comfort to his troubled soul.

The Nation, which has been very friendly towards Mr. Tilden, pronounces against the Wicked Partner theory advanced in his behalf, and remarks:

"There is only one way of proving to the incredulous that you did not know a certain thing on a certain day, and that is by showing that it was physically impossible or physically difficult for you to know it. Mr. Tilden may swear he never heard of Pelton's telegrams, and Pelton that he never told him of them, but not only who now distrusts either of them will believe it. The only way out of the scrape is to prove an alibi or brain analysis. If Mr. Tilden could show that he was in Europe or in some distant part of the country, he would now be able to confound his enemies; but having been in the same house with the ingenious Pelton, the case is hopeless. We must say that it is well that such is the case. Nothing of this moment needs to be more rightly enforced than responsibility for Wicked Partners. The Partner and the Good Man must be held, for all purposes of moral judgment, on their respective merits, and the same person, unless the Good Man can prove that he was separated from the Partner by the sea or by a chain of mountains untraversed by the telegraph."

An encouraging sign of the year just past is to be found in the marked increase in the farming population of the country. It is estimated that 20,000, 000 acres of new lands were settled in 1878, and the settlers are thought to number fully half a million. Most of these settlers are said to be Americans, and one of the consequences of this new movement is to be seen in the increased crops of last year. As long as people persist in regarding 'wretched up' in large cities we may expect the hard times to continue. What we want is more people in the country and fewer in the towns.

No other remedy has proved so effective in relieving Coughs and colds as Dr. Hall's Cough Syrup. It is recommended by many Physicians and costs only 25 cents a bottle.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and increasing demand for that deservedly popular Sewing Machine, The Old and Reliable "STANDARD," the price of which the proprietors wisely reduced to $20, including all the attachments, and at once secured for them a popularity among the people, far beyond that ever yet attained by any other machine at any price, the consequences of which is, agents are having the old high priced machines, and seeking territory for the "STANDARD." Knowing from experience that with the best goods at the lowest price they can sell all other Machines, where the superior quality and low price is made known. Thus, splendid Machine combines all the improvements. Is far ahead of all others in beauty and durability of its work, ease of manipulation, light running and certainty of operation, is sensibly made upon sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely put down as the very perfection of a serviceable sewing Machine, in every particular, that all other any Machine, and at a price as low as any other. It is thoroughly warranted for five years. Kept in order free of charge. And sent to any part of the country for examination by the express, before payment of the bill. We can predict equally as large a demand for them in this section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured should write direct to the Factory. And enterprising persons wishing to seize the chance should apply for so desirable an agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper. Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor. Broadway and Elm Street, New York.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1.00 per square of 8 lines;
20 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, but not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, FEB. 15, 1879.

The general Democratic verdict is that Tilden's subalterns forgot too much for their chieftain's good, which is a confession that they knew too much.

The Pension Arrears Bill may be well enough in its place, but a "Subscription Arrears Bill" would accord better with the editors of the country newspapers.

Whether Tilden acquiesced or not, one thing is certain—the Democratic managers were ready to purchase the Presidency. But they haggled too much over the price.

Senator Bayard was the only prominent Democrat who dared say at the caucus Monday night, when an extra session was decided on, that it was not right to lead down important appropriation bills with political trash.

The Potter Committee has at last accomplished something. It has proven that some one did try to purchase the presidency—namely, the intimate friends of Tilden. Former accusations that the committee accomplished nothing are withdrawn.

Pelton says that Tilden's rebuke to him when he returned from Baltimore, after having failed to buy the South Carolina Returning Board was "violent," but it seems not to have been sufficiently violent to deter him from entering into subsequent negotiations with Manton Marble in Florida to purchase the Returning Board of that State.

Bragg, of Wisconsin, in casting his slurs and insinuations at the Southern Democracy, thought he was representing the Northern Democrats. He has probably discovered before this that he was slightly mistaken. The most influential of the Northern Democratic journals have united in placing quite a large bouquet of thistles under the nose of the Wisconsin donkey.—Atlanta Constitution.

Speaker Randall has expressed himself as decidedly opposed to an extra session of Congress. This is right. Let him use his influence from this time on to hurry up business and thereby render an extra session unnecessary. As Mr. Randall pointedly says, the country needs a few months of perfect peace in order to note the effect of resumption.—Balto. Gazette, Democratic.

There are now seventy thousand pending applications for invalid pensions, all of which, if granted, will date back to the close of the war. New applications are pouring in at the rate of a thousand a day. Everybody who served in the war is beginning to feel a variety of aches and pains, the origin of which, upon recollection, he can trace back to his service for his country.—Chicago Times.

It is frequently amusing to a journalist to note the perplexity of political people anonymously assailed through his columns. The trouble arises from doubt concerning the authorship and intensified by desire to avenge the onslaught. All he wants to know is, who to strike? Failing in ascertaining this, he lets fly at the most likely mark. Then he sometimes feels like the fellow who kicked viciously at a dog, that wasn't there. Frostburg Journal.

The pension arrearage bill promises to be a fruitful source of trouble as well as of expense. The Commissioner of Pensions thinks the bill presents obstacles that are almost insurmountable, opening numberless questions of statutory construction, and requiring an amendment to put it in a practical shape. Until Congress has had an opportunity of considering his suggestions, no claims involving arrears will be adjusted. Among other things, the new pension bill is said to afford fresh opportunities for fraud. The best thing Congress could do would be to repeal it altogether, but, if that is not probable, it should be put into such a shape as to make its provisions entirely clear, and should be so guarded as to render it as little dangerous as possible.

Getting at the Truth.

The sub-committee of the Potter committee which is now making in New York the investigation of the cipher despatches appears to be going tolerably deep into the subject matter, and unless the Democratic majority find the trail is getting decidedly too warm, we may look for a radical exposure of the whole business. It is a tolerably sure thing that the prevailing Democratic sentiment is not very kindly disposed toward Mr. Tilden personally, but still, there is a feeling that as the late presidential candidate of the party it will hardly do to inculcate him in the attempted bribery of returning boards in South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana more deeply than can be hoped. Any disgrace that may be fastened upon him cannot but react to some extent on the party and do it injury in the approaching campaign of 1880. Under such circumstances it is absolutely necessary in the way of political strategy that Mr. Tilden shall be let off easily, and accordingly we find that the "wicked partner" theory is advanced of the alleged statesman of Gramercy park. Mr. Smith M. Weed comes nobly forward to sustain it, and he puts his evidence so shrewdly as to make it appear that while he was the accredited agent of the Democratic National Committee for the purchase of electoral votes, and had reason to believe that his demands for sixty thousand or eighty thousand dollars of bribe money would be honored, he knew nothing as to the sources from which the funds were to come except that Mr. Pelton would have charge of them or that, at the worst, Mr. Edward Cooper, now Mayor of New York, could be relied on to furnish them. Mr. Weed admits that he met Mr. Pelton in Baltimore by arrangement, but he represents the latter as saying that Mr. Tilden would not consent to the use of money for the purpose contemplated. Then comes Mr. Cooper with an avowal of surprise at Mr. Weed's call for the huge sum asked, and he intimates that Mr. Tilden was very angry when he heard that his nephew had gone on to Baltimore to meet Mr. Weed to conduct the dishonest negotiation.

The opening of this clever little comedy betrayed that its motive was to throw the chief blame of the scheme upon poor Pelton. It was imperative that somebody should be made the scapegoat. Mr. Weed's testimony led up to Pelton as the bad, bold man who conceived the iniquity, and yesterday Pelton went on the stand and offered his moving confession. As it has been rumored of late that he has been exiled from Gramercy Park, and that Mr. Tilden has anathematized him with "I nephew of mine no more," it is quite the generous thing in him to accept the responsibility and obliquity of the cipher telegrams. Far it be from us to hint that there is a good understanding between the nephew of his uncle and the uncle of his nephew, but the sceptical mind cannot expel the suspicion that there are some very weak links in the chain of the narrative. Mr. Pelton has not heretofore enjoyed a reputation as a politician of extraordinary nerve and resources, but as the Democratic argument stands, the public is requested to believe that he was capable of originating the daring plan of buying the presidency, and that he had his scores of thousands of dollars to pay out to the men who could transfer the needed votes to Mr. Tilden. Really, this is placing altogether too high an estimate on that gentleman's courage and adroitness. Furthermore, the popular credulity is taxed to entertain the supposition that while all these negotiations were going on, while the cipher telegrams were being exchanged between Gramercy Park and the coparceners in the South, Mr. Tilden was entirely ignorant of what was being done in his own house and under his very eyes. Mr. Pelton was known as his confidential representative, the telegraph messenger boys were besieging his doors with the cipher messages, and yet Mr. Tilden never dreamed of the conspiracy; and when he was informed of it his virtuous spirit rose up in indignation, and he waved off his nephew with the hand of righteous scorn. His obtuseness surpasses everything, for if Mr. Pelton and Mr. Cooper had not told us better, we should have supposed that Mr. Tilden at least took some interest in the progress of affairs when it was doubtful whether he or Mr. Hayes would go to the chair of the national executive.

If the wicked partner theory were a novelty it might be more effective in this case. But it has been worked to exhaustion in politics, and people have become incredulous when it is mentioned. It may be the only possible vindication for Mr. Tilden, but if that is the fact, his plight is woful, indeed. The notion that Pelton and Weed were the sole organizers and managers of the plan to buy electoral votes does not stand the test of common sense. There were abler and longer heads than theirs concerned in the task. It has been shown by the admissions of Pelton and Weed that the translations of the really important ciphers by the Tribune were substantially correct, so that the defence cannot take refuge behind a denial of their authenticity. The conspiracy has been proven, and Pelton's shoulders are not broad enough to bear the whole burden of it.—Baltimore American.

Mr. Tilden's Disavowal.

We do not see that Mr. Tilden's testimony before the Potter committee materially alters his position before the country. His letter of denial, published several months ago, was accepted at the time as settling the question of his personal complicity in the cipher business. The only additional information which was expected to be derived from Mr. Tilden's sworn evidence was as to his personal relations with, and responsibility for, the men who assumed to represent him in those negotiations. We regret to say that Mr. Tilden's testimony before the committee on Saturday does not exculpate him in that positive and unequivocal manner which was hoped for, not only by his honest Democrats but by honest and firm-minded men of both political parties. Every one of Mr. Tilden's statements before the committee to the effect that he had no knowledge of the cipher despatches, and that he promptly repudiated any attempt at corruption or bribery may be, and we believe is, entirely true; yet the fact remains that Messrs. Marble, Pelton and Smith Weed, persons who had been accepted and recognized everywhere during the campaign as Mr. Tilden's accredited agents, were actively engaged in those corrupt negotiations, while at the same time, they were careful to keep the details of their operations from Mr. Tilden's knowledge. It thus appears that while those nearest to Mr. Tilden were actively engaged in the work of stirring up the muddy waters of Southern politics, Mr. Tilden himself sat quiet on the river bank, dozing in the shade with a placid conscience and an untroubled front. To our thinking, Mr. Tilden committed a fatal mistake in not telling the people frankly all he knew about the cipher business four months ago. Had he then made a distinct disavowal of the men who "managed" that business for him, the country would have accepted his declaration without hesitation or reserve, and to-day he would have been stronger with the people than ever before. There was nothing really of which he had any reason to be ashamed, and his argument that the Returning Boards offered themselves for sale, but that he refused to purchase, would have had a powerful effect upon the country. As it is, his apparent efforts to save those who had compromised him by delaying this avowal until now, has shaken the confidence of the people and has exhibited him to his party as an over-cautious and fatally irresolute man.—Balto. Bulletin, Democratic.

Oh no, the South doesn't favor claims. Whoever says it does is a "Radical liar and slanderer." This must be so, for the whole Democratic press of the North, feebly assisted by the deputy Democrats on the independent press of the South, are every day in the week. Yet there are occasional slips of the pen by the Southern Democratic editors which do not harmonize with this statement. There is an article in The New-Orleans Picayune, for example, which berates General Bragg for blaming the South because it demands that at least $31,000,000 be taken from the Treasury and distributed among the Southern States. The editor declares that fully that amount of money was turned into the Treasury from the sales of captured and abandoned property during the war. He says all argument in defence of the Union were more than an offset for this sum is "simply trash," and adds: "The $31,000,000 in the Treasury represent the proceeds of systematic robbery. What better disposition of the money could be made, now that peace is reestablished, than to restore it to the people from whom it was stolen?" If this is not favoring a pretty healthy claim, what is?

Two points must strike any careful reader of Mr. Tilden's testimony under cross-examination. One of these is the extreme dullness and indifference of Mr. Tilden to facts and inferences which were of the highest importance to his reputation, if he was the honorable man he pretends to have been; the other is the extreme readiness with which he makes sweeping accusations against his opponents, without knowledge and without a title of the reasonable suspicion which attaches to himself.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 10, 1879.

The latitude of comment which the average Democratic politician allowed himself when discussing the testimony of the Republican leaders before the Potter Committee a few days ago, was in marked contrast with their reticence since the sub-committee cornered Marble, Pelton, Smith Weed and Tilden. While it was insisted that neither Brady or the Clarendons, nor indeed any other Republican who testified was entitled to the benefit of a single doubt—that, contrary to a well settled principle of law, each and every one of them bound to prove all the negatives involved in their several cases, or stand convicted of the most damnable rascality—they are silent as the Egyptian Sphinx respecting a failure of memory on the part of Pelton that makes him a physiological monstrosity and touching a lack of intellectual endowment which Tilden charges himself with, that gives the lie to all the brilliant achievements of his past life as a railroad wrecker, as the inventor and beneficiary of the new system of "vaufruct" which he introduced among the iron miners of Michigan, in his successful evasion of the U. S. income laws and, in fact, of his whole business and political career. To sum up it seems the general sentiment here that the sub-committee has occasion to go no further to prove that the whole batch, collectively and individually, is guilty of all that has been charged and implied against them. And if Tilden can be nominated for President in 1880 with such a record as he now has, the Democratic leaders are more brazen than they have ever been charged with being, which is saying a great deal.

The action taken at the Democratic caucus Saturday night seems to confirm the suspicion long entertained that the Democrats would find some pretext for making an extra session necessary. In view of all the circumstances an extra session to cost thousands of additional dollars, is nothing short of an outrage upon every tax payer in the country. If members of Congress would work after they came here one half as hard as the average business or professional man at home does, and would subordinate partisan advantages to the public good, an extra session could hardly ever be necessary. But it is a fact requiring no confirmation with those familiar with Congressional habits, that neither may be looked for. Ever since Democrats came into possession of the lower House appropriation bills have been left to the last end of the session before being reported from the Committee. Millions have been spent on investigation committees, and similar contrivances, without a dollar's benefit to the public. Now it is proposed to load down the appropriation bills still to be passed with partisan riders which Republicans cannot vote for without being guilty of downright stultification. It would seem the country ought to have its stomach full of Democratic reform and retrenchment with this tin e. The fact is the city is full of Democrats from North, South, East and West, urging the distribution of Senate offices that come into their hands after March 4th, and if a decent pretext cannot be found for an extra session in which to divide up the spoils, an indecent one is likely to prevail.

Th. Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Herald insist that neither Collector Thomas or Postmaster Tyler has a strong grip on his position. The correspondent, speaking of Mr. Thomas, says:

A prominent gentleman, who has seen the President on this subject frequently during the past two weeks, stated to your correspondent that there was no doubt about the removal of Mr. Thomas, but it might be postponed until after the 4th of March. Another equally well informed stated there was not the slightest doubt of his removal, as the President and four members of the Cabinet were in favor of it.

In relation to the postmaster, says the correspondent, "Gen. Tyler has undoubtedly lost ground in Washington circles, notwithstanding his apparent indifference to the movement against him."

Editorially the American, speaking of General Tyler, says:

The fact that charges of some sort or other are being preferred against General Tyler with the department at Washington has been reported by the American as a part of the news of the day; the announcement has occasioned a good deal of stir, as it was generally supposed that General Tyler's administration was highly satisfactory. If charges of any moment are preferred they will doubtless be acted upon fairly, but it is to be regretted that there should be any trouble of the sort. The public should bear in mind that a good deal of the talk heard in regard to removals of officeholders is the expression of personal hopes and ambitions, and is to be taken with a pinch of salt.

Mr. Pelton's Testimony.

Commenting on Mr. W. T. Pelton's testimony before the cipher investigating committee now in session in New York, the Herald of that city says Mr. Pelton and Mr. Weed are "harred with the same stick," and "unable to deny their willingness and their desire to purchase electoral votes for Mr. Tilden," but it concludes from the testimony so far given, which, it says, seems consistent with probability, that "there is as yet not a particle of evidence which convicts Mr. Tilden of gully knowledge of the proceedings."

The World says: "Since, as a matter of fact, Pelton cannot be held to have represented the Democratic party, and since there is no evidence but his own to warrant even the inference that he ever so much as hinted his plans and expectations to any responsible member of that party, whatever deductions are to be drawn from his actions can affect nobody under the sun but himself."

The Times calls attention to the admission of Pelton that Mr. Tilden knew of the transactions of Pelton and Weed on the occasion of the visit to Baltimore in 1876, and ordered Pelton back home, and then refers to a letter from Mr. Tilden, published two years later, in which he said he had not seen the telegrams relating to these plots, or had the contents been communicated to him. The Times adds: "If, when called on to explain his conduct, he had frankly declared that he knew of this rascality, but that the moment he learned of it he set his foot on it, the public would have believed him, and, for the most part, have thought better of him than his previous career had enabled them to think. Then the testimony of Weed and of his nephew would have confirmed his own statements. Now it contradicts them. It shows him, apparently denying knowledge of what he really knew, trying to hide the truth."

The Tribune says: "Pelton evaded; he prevaricated; he stammered; he explained; he involved himself hopelessly in mazes and muddles; he was sometimes five or ten minutes in answering yes or no; he managed to attract the finger of suspicion by turns to his uncle and to the Democratic National Committee. On the whole he probably did his side as much harm as any man is likely to do in a single day." The Tribune adds: "The care with which wicked telegrams were kept from Gov. Tilden was only equalled by the freedom with which they were confided to everybody else."

The Democratic press in Maryland is quite unanimous in regarding the law providing for the U. S. Super- visors of elections, and for trial of violation of election laws at Congressional elections before U. S. Courts, as useless, oppressive and in violation of States' rights. They are especially convinced of this just now, when whole gangs of their ballot-box stuffers, repeaters, and roughs were being punished for crimes which were clearly proven upon them, as has been done in Baltimore recently. The Democratic press generally regards everything done by the United States government as a "crime," or an "outrage." It is part of their creed to oppose the government; simply because they hate it, and are in a constant state of sorrow over the subordination of the State to the National government. The fact that Maryland elections have been for years past farces, pure and simple; that frauds have been perpetrated on all hands without fear of punishment, and that the "machine" was so perfectly organized in Baltimore as to guarantee a Democratic triumph no matter how the counties might vote, has been almost universally admitted. Let these indignant newspaper writers tell of a single instance in which one of these ballot-box stuffers, unfaithful judges of election or registration officers, has been punished, by a State Court. Have we ever heard of a case? We have no recollection of such an instance, although many complaints were lodged against the men who openly violated the election laws. We have read the record of riot and murder—an honest citizen murdered for proving that a Democratic repeater did not live where he pretended to—but being registered a second time—but the political offense against the grand army of scoundrels outweighed the crime of murder, and perpetrator of the latter was punished slightly if at all.

Some of the journals referred to insinuate that in a United States Court the prisoner has not a chance equal to that he would have in a State court. That may be; in United States jury cannot very well be packed; but we have had numerous instances in various parts of the State, including this county, where distinguished politicians have deigned their abilities to that delectable work. Camb. Citizen.

Call in and "square up."

Circular Letter.

PENSION OFFICE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27, 1879.

SIR:—Persons who are entitled to arrears of pensions, under the Act granting Arrears, approved January 25, 1876, and whose pensions were granted previous to that date, will not require the assistance of a claim agent in obtaining the amount due them. All correspondence in relation to any claim for such arrears, will be with the person entitled, and no claim agent will be recognized in such claim.

A letter addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions, signed by the person who was in receipt of the pension at the date aforesaid, and two witnesses, in the presence of a magistrate, will be the only application required—and upon which the rights of all parties concerned will be adjusted.

The Pension Certificate should not be sent to this Office—but it must be exhibited to the magistrate.

The letter should be in the following or equivalent form:

"To the Commissioner of Pensions: I, . . . a pensioner under pension certificate No. . . . hereby apply for the arrears due me, under the Act Granting Arrears of Pension, approved January 25, 1876. My post-office address is—here insert the name of the post-office, and if the claimant resides in a city, the name and number of the street and residence must also be given."

Name of Claimant.

Two Witnesses.

Signed in my presence by . . . who is known to me to be the person he describes himself to be, and at the same time he exhibited to me his pension certificate, which is numbered . . .

Magistrate's Signature.

No claim for arrears under the provisions of the above Act, due to a pensioner already upon the rolls, will be adjusted until Congress shall have appropriated the money for the payment of such claim.

Application for such arrears may however be filed—but will receive no attention until the claim is adjusted. The above rules are necessary to prevent the work of the Office from being blocked by unnecessary correspondence.

Very respectfully,
J. A. BENTLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

HON. CHAS. B. RICHARDS,
House of Representatives.

Senator H. G. Davis interviewed.

Mr. J. Brisbane Walker, editor of the Washington Republic, gives the following as the substance of a conversation had with United States Senator Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia, last week: "Does Mr. Tilden really think of being a candidate in 1880?" "Not a doubt of it," Senator Davis replied unhesitatingly. "He is working up his chances vigorously. 'Why,' he has two men in this city now in his interest. I saw them myself to-day." "Tilden means a hard money campaign for the democracy?" "Yes, if Tilden prevails the Western end must be excluded from the Democratic platform." "Do you think Senator Bayard stands in a chance for the nomination?" "Well, Bayard is probably the strongest man we have, but he lives too near to Tilden for his own good. Tilden necessarily weakens Bayard's chances, both representing the hard money idea. The fight in the convention will be between the 'hards' and the 'softs,' and it looks as if the 'hards' will be induced to cast their united influence for Mr. Tilden. All events he will leave no stone unturned to accomplish that end." "Is the Delaware Senator working for the nomination?" "Not at all. He is not that kind of a man. Neither he nor Mr. Thurman conspired to tricks. With Mr. Tilden it is different. He will sit up all night figuring to get this man or that, this influence or the other, and will go into any calculations with his friends as to the best way of accomplishing his purpose. When he has determined how to do a thing he goes and does it, and no matter what it costs. Neither Bayard nor Thurman would listen to you if you were to go to them with any such talk." "Who is your favorite candidate, Senator?" "Oh, Thurman is my man. The whole West Virginia delegation in Congress is for Thurman. There are five of us, as you know—hereford, Keena, Wilson, Martin and myself—and we are all enthusiastic Thurman men." "Do you think the Ohio Senator will be nominated?" "I think he will. But Tilden is rich and is an intriguing worker. He is never idle and there is no telling what his combinations may effect."

HILL TO FORFEIT THE CHARTER OF THE D. & O. RAILROAD.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 11.—A Wheeling (W. Va.) dispatch says that in the Senate yesterday a bill was introduced to declare the charter of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad forfeited, a recent examination by a joint special committee having developed the fact that the company has been charging more than lawful rates, and by unjust discrimination worked injury to the manufacturing and producing interests of the State.

When the Democratic National Committee meets in Washington on the birthday of G. W. to take a sort of ground-hog view of the situation, it will probably find Mr. Tilden in its midst discussing the probabilities and suggesting the best methods to be pursued.—Balto. Gazette.

VARIETIES.

—What did Baritone?—
—Ancient Grease—Old butter.
—A poor relation—A story badly told.
—A highly colored tale—The pea cock's.—Norristown Herald.
—All murderers hang have their ropes of heaven.—Chicago Times.
—Does an intellectual savage have a moral reservation?—Boston Traveler.
—A soul-skin vest is most always a certain sign of a gambler. Free Press.
—Put a boy in east-iron boots and he'd get his feet wet just the same.—Free Press.
—The woman who wears a French-heeled shoe should employ a French corn-doctor.
—An alarm clock is a house generally wakes up the wrong sleeper.—New Orleans Picayune.
—Mrs. Walton has invented something to stop a noise. A queer thing, indeed, for a woman to invent.
—A new patent coin detector ought to be popular if it will help a man to detect a coin in an empty pocket.
—People that don't fret are like oysters at a church festival, inasmuch as they never "get in a stew."
—It takes a good deal of grief to kill a woman just after she has got a new seal-skin sack.—Andrew's Bazar.
—When the schoolmaster reduced the boy to submission it was an unfair contest, because it was tutor won.—N. Y. Mail.
—Is a lawyer justified in defending a bad cause? We cannot understand fully unless we know the law of the case.—Kingston Freeman.
—The entire sale of public lands—Government, railroad and State—during the last year was 11,292,246 acres. This is a large excess over the sales for 1872, the year preceding the panic.
—Germany has just discovered another forest in her midst. It is supposed to be at least ten thousand years old. No oaks have been found in any of the trees.
—There is believed to be only one thing slower than molasses in January, and that is a lady making room for another lady in a street car.—Chicago Herald.
—The daughter of a queen set foot on American soil the other day. Simultaneously there was the slightest shock of a supposed earthquake felt in Florida.—Chicago Times.
—An excited old man came in yesterday to inform us that he had seen six women set a whole hour in social conversation without once referring to what they wore.—Turner's Falls Reporter.
—The will of the majority should always rule, but there are occasions when it is pretty hard to tell who is the majority.—Free Press.
—The Baltimore News now takes up the query: "Why is it that women's ears do not get cold?" Any one who is fool enough to believe that they don't would chew away on an old boot-heel and call it spruce gum.—Free Press.
—She was an Albany lady who informed a visitor who came to see her new house that she was having nicks made in the walls in case of a burglar, and in one of them a burst of her husband.
—A miser's character described in two lines: "You who are acquainted with Mr. X, can you tell the reason why being so rich, he always takes a third-class passage to go to his villa?" "O, it is very simple. It is because there is no fourth class."
—Ambition is human. Man never is but always to be blessed. The Cincinnati Saturday Night says: "When you hear a man say that he is perfectly contented with his lot, take him by the shoulder and lead him where he will not get run over."
—An enterprising newspaper has found a young lady who blushes, goes to bed at nine, cuts heartily, speaks plain English, respects her mother, doesn't want to marry a lord, and knows how to cook. Now where's your "man-fish?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.
—Breathless County, Ky., where the deadly vendetta has raged in the Louisville Courier-Journal as "a land where revolver and rifle are used for the purpose of settling disputes."
Where life is regarded as only a trifle, and "a usual for people to die in their beds."
—A fashion journal remarked that "ungloved hands are fashionable among gentlemen this winter." Surely, what are trouser pockets good for if a man has to pay $1.75 for a pair of gloves?—Frank-Eye.
—Mr. Stillman B. Allen, a business man of Boston, desiring to encourage the farmer boys of his native town of York, Me., offers a $100 prize for success in corn culture next season, the competitors to be under sixteen years of age.
—England is coming to the United States even for torpedo-boats. One of these mischievous little craft, manufactured by a Rhode Island company, has just been tested by Government officers upon the Thames with very satisfactory results. Her speed and handiness are said to be surprising.
—"My own heart's heart and ownest own, farewell!" The ownest own alluded to here was Mand, the "moon-faced dancing." Which perhaps accounts for it, though we don't see why. However, an ownest confession is good for the soul.—N. Y. Graphic.
—The good-natured husband that is foolish enough to do shop errands for his wife never knows enough to do them properly. He is just as apt to buy paper cambric as black alpaca for sheeting, if the dry goods clerk only tells him that it is the correct thing.—New Haven Register.
—What makes your lips so awful sore?
—Asked Sarah's cross-eyed maid.
—And Sarah to the old man said:
—"It's caused by a small chap."
—Then Sarah's youngest brother—
—A yet unknown to fame—
—Looked Sarah in the eye and asked:
—"What is the small chap's name?"
—Elmira Gazette.
—The different dispositions of the sexes is observable in the stamp counter at the post-office. When there is a line of people waiting their turn to be served, the last man who enters falls in at the tail end of the line and accepts the logic of circumstances. The woman who enters last, however, walks straight to the head of the line, and nobody, of course, utters a protest when she is served first.—Newark Call.

—In addition to riding about the country in her own car, the talented actress, the Countess Bozenta, does her own cooking and washing. The washing is done on the rear platform, and the variegated articles, hung out to dry, add a sort of picturesque to the flying car. The sight of the Countess on the rear platform, chasing a red flag and a washboard, is said to be very exhilarating and effective as a transient advertisement.
—In Jones County, Iowa, two farmers had a quarrel about fourteen fence rails, alleged to be worth $1.40. They hired two lawyers and went to law hammer and tongs. After a long contest the plaintiff got a verdict of one cent, the cost to the county was $80, and the lawyers had pocketed $321. The farmers then elected the lawyers to the legislature.—N. Y. Graphic.
—The editor of the Detroit Free Press, mad because he has to work for a living, objects to honey bees laying off during the winter months, and calls for a species of bee that will work all winter and give us spring honey. It would not be in accordance with the eternal fitness of things. Leaves have their time to fall and flowers to wither at the north wind's breath, and the season for honey bees to get in their work is when people wear lion pants.—Oil City Derrick.
—A new kind of bug that no man knows the name of has been discovered, during the past summer, in Wisconsin, that hides in the flowers of the hills. It is called the "bug-bug," but they kill it best just as readily. We could even stand that, but when it reaches out of a rose-bud and shakes hands with a man's thumb, the man thinks he has collared a reputation of all fifteen years' sentence for assault. He was ignorant, but when allowed the use of the prison library he soon made astonishing advances in learning. He mastered arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and then turned his attention to languages. He acquired a fair knowledge of French, German, Latin and Greek, and then took up jurisprudence. He is now reading law, and has a change of heart. He delivered at a Thanksgiving celebration in the prison a year or two ago an oration which was pronounced a remarkable production.
—A remarkable convict in the Rhode Island State prison is David Peters, a colored man, who in 1869 received a fifteen years' sentence for assault. He was ignorant, but when allowed the use of the prison library he soon made astonishing advances in learning. He mastered arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and then turned his attention to languages. He acquired a fair knowledge of French, German, Latin and Greek, and then took up jurisprudence. He is now reading law, and has a change of heart. He delivered at a Thanksgiving celebration in the prison a year or two ago an oration which was pronounced a remarkable production.
—A baggage-smasher can not be killed.
—"Doc" Clow, as he is known to railroad men, but whose right name is Albert Clow, is one of twelve through baggage-men employed by the Central & Hudson River Railroad Company, and his route is from New York to Buffalo. He has probably been in more "smash-ups" than any other railroad man in the United States, and has seen men killed alongside of him right and left, but with one exception, he has always come out without receiving an injury of any account. Twelve years ago he was on a milk train which ran off a trestle near New Haven, and he was killed. His car was upset and broken, and a tramp was killed, but "Doc" came out of the train all right. He was on a Yonkers train which ran into a passenger train. Four cars were smashed, and several persons were hurt, but "Doc" crawled out from under a car and helped to clear the track. He was through baggage-men on the Pacific express train which came into collision with an oil train seven years ago on the New Hamburg drawbridge, and another man was in the car with him. The car, when the train struck the oil train, turned over on its side and bumped along over the trestle before it came to rest. The baggage-car and express-car were smashed to blunders, but once more "Doc" escaped, and again two persons were killed. Then his car was run into by a car loaded with lumber at West Albany, and the lumber was telegraphed into the baggage-car, but as it came in one end "Doc" went out the other. Some time after his train was run into by a coal-car, and his baggage-car was wrecked. In this accident he jumped before the crash came, and went over and over into a ditch, but not a bone was broken. Again, he was baggage-master on the St. Louis express when it ran off the track a short distance east of Buffalo a few days ago. The train was badly damaged, and the express messenger in the car ahead of him was burned to death, but "Doc" did not receive a scratch. In all these hair-breadth escapes he never received a scar. But to day he carries a scar in the accident on the Harlem Railroad, near William's Bridge. He was "deadheaded" up the road on a passenger train, which smashed into a freight train. In the accident several persons were hurt and the fireman killed. "Doc" was hurled over four or five seats and slammed against the car door. This is his latest. Clow is a single man, about thirty-five years of age, and lives in New York. He was regular railroad Jonah, and whenever his train gets through all right there need be no fears about the others. He has been in the employ of the Hudson River Railroad nearly eighteen years, and is in every respect a first-class baggage-man.—Toughkopsie Cor. N. Y. Times.

—Decline of American Forests.
It has been for some years apparent that the United States supply of timber must fail at no distant day, unless some concerted measures are taken for growing new forests or in some way preserving the old. The present condition of the lumbering business will be illustrated by the following facts, published by the St. Paul Pioneer Press, and based on the observations of Mr. James Little, a lumber-merchant of Montreal, who has long studied this subject: Of the twenty-six States, only Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, the New England, Middle Western, and Northwestern, to the Rocky Mountains, only four are now able to furnish lumber-supplies beyond their own requirements; the four being Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. But Maine is almost stripped of her pine-forests, and lumberers have to go to the head-waters of the rivers in search of spruce, while more saplings, six or seven inches in diameter, go to the mill. In a few years Maine will have neither pine nor spruce for home consumption. The northern parts of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, are the only localities of the white pine of the United States, which can furnish supplies of white pine beyond the home demand; but they will not be able to do so, Mr. Little affirms, for more than five or six years longer. The main streams are all stripped, and the depopulation of the lumbermen is now on the head-waters of the tributaries. In 1870, according to the census report, there were in the United States 173,450 industrial establishments, employing 1,993,292 hands, devoted to the manufacture of wooden articles. The impression prevails that when our supply of lumber fails, as it must inevitably within the next ten years, we can find in Canada a supply that will not be exhausted in a few years. But this is an error; at least, Mr. Little asserts that there is not from Manitoba to the Gulf of St. Lawrence as much pine, spruce, hemlock, white-wood, and other commercial timber, as would supply the United States for ten years.
In the light of such facts as these, it behooves the people of this country to seriously consider the subject of reforestation and the protection of young timber-trees.—Popular Science Monthly.
—His Cold Stove.
Counting down on the car the other morning they got to talking about their cold stoves, and one man said:
"Well, I don't want to brag, but I think I've got the boss stove. So far this winter I haven't burned but three tons of coal, and the stove has kept three rooms warm."
"You must have a poor stove," remarked the second. "I haven't burned out two tons of coal yet, and my stove heats parlor, dining-room, two bedrooms, and a hall."
"Well, when you come to stoves," quietly remarked the third, "I claim to have the best cold stove in Detroit. I have burned but a ton and a half of coal, and my stove has kept the dampers shut and a back door open all the time."
Some men looked out of the windows and some down at the straw, and no one seemed to doubt any of the assertions. At length a heavy sigh was heard from the rear end of the car, and a clerical looking man arose and said:
"Gentlemen, there goes a fire-alarm. It strikes the box in front of my house. I have no doubt that my residence is, at this moment in flames and the lives of my family in peril. It is all owing to my cold stove. I set up the stove last November and put in one peck of coal. Every room has been so hot ever since that the base-board have warped off, and we finally had to move down into the basement. This morning the water in all the pipes in the house was boiling, the steam on the roof hot, and the fire engine sent men to form a snow-bank around the stove. 'Too late—alas! too late! That stove has accomplished its fiendish purpose, and I no longer have a home. It may not, however, be too late to save the baby. Good-bye, gentlemen!"
He opened the door and got off the car, and not a passenger spoke again for four blocks.—Free Press.
—Hard Times in Boston.
The following is an extract from a letter in country cousin temporarily in Boston to his mother: "You ask me what indications there are of hard times in Boston. On Sunday at least 10,000 sleighs drawn by magnificent horses passed our house. Cousin Jo says if it were not for the hard times there would have been 15,000. Nearly every lady wears a sealskin sash, but Cousin Minnie told me that for hard times they would all wear sable, as they did when her mother was a girl. At the theater the other night there were diamonds enough to fill a cornucopia, but Jo says if the times were better there would be no use for gas as the brilliants would illuminate the auditorium. At church last Sunday Cousin Minnie said that she did not believe that there were more than sixty $50 hats present, which she says is proof positive that business is very dull. Cousin Joseph thinks we have reached what he calls 'hard pan,' which I presume is a kind of frosted cake that poor people are obliged to eat, because there are so many fashions. Many fashionable people are so poor that they are not able to use pot plants, but they hire them for window decorations from the florists. The hardest case of pure suffering that I have seen was at the opera, where the swell young men in order to economize, were without gloves."—Boston Journal.
—A GERMAN PAPER says four women are controlling the politics of Europe.

The Jews and Palestine.

The American Israelite, of Cincinnati, says the popular story recently repeated, that the Jews are engaged in purchasing Palestine, is not true. The Jews themselves have never heard of it. Nothing has been published in a Jewish journal warranting the story. The Israelite says it is "not very likely that one would purchase all the Druses, Arabs, Bedouins, thieves and robbers of Palestine on a speculation."
The Jewish millionaires of Europe, the Israelite says, "occasionally spend a few thousand dollars in charity or in religious institutions, which is well reported in the newspapers," and "we never had much use for our manifold millions," and "All the manifold millionaires of Europe do not spend a million of dollars per annum on charity. You may count every penny they spend in Jewish affairs, it will never amount to that. All the Jewish scholarly institutions, in the world, from the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati, or the Budapest Rabbini Seminar, up to the oldest institution of that description, have a legacy from the very rich to show."
And suppose Palestine is purchased, who is to go there? The American Jews are Americans—the English Jews Englishmen, the French Jews Frenchmen—why should they give up their country to go to Palestine? The Israelite asks:
"Has the Jew Isaac Moses less of a country than the Gentile John Peter? Does France belong more to Pierre than to Moise? What a horrible piece of nonsense! Are the Catholics or the Methodists less settled than the Jews? Is any race in the world in possession of any country? Now, we say the Methodists have no king and no country, they are the Catholics, and with their exceptional energy they are sure to rally before long; indeed, I believe they have already begun. There are children living who will probably see the United States numbering 200,000,000 inhabitants and I do not think there is any subject to which leaders of working men can more usefully turn their attention than the supplying to those who want it here accurate and trustworthy intelligence as to their chances beyond the Atlantic, either north or south of the Canadian boundary. We shall always have men enough left at home, and if emigration were to go to the length of checking the increase of the race, which it almost certainly will, it is better to have 35,000,000 of human beings leading useful and intelligent lives than 40,000,000 struggling painfully for bare subsistence. There are many persons, I know, who will object to the ground that though emigration may be good for the individual it weakens the State. I cannot take that view. A contented people goes a long way towards making a State powerful, and from and after the year 1879, no miracle will be wrought, unless people expect none, and the Jew is a very sober man. Whatever the belief of the Jews may be in regard to Palestine and the Messiah, it will hardly have more influence on them, precisely than the fantastic belief has on Christians."
"You remove, to-day, the Jews out of Christendom, and in a few years the whole concern is bankrupt with one-sided bigotry or a delusion. The Jews are the vilest of the fish pond to chase the fat carps, or else they would roll in their fat. O, no, the Jew must not go back to Palestine, or else the narrow prejudices of races, creeds and country limit would in a few years be as intolerable as they were centuries ago."
"Among all the wild-goose speculations of Bohemians, we think that of purchasing Palestine is one of the most ludicrous caricatures. One point is always forgotten, viz. After Mecca, Jerusalem is the most holy city of the Islam. As little as the Mohammedans will give up Mecca they will give up Jerusalem, and the Islam has more than one hundred millions of devotees. The Sultan might as well be charged with the intention of selling Mecca with the Prophet's grave as he would Jerusalem with the Mosque of Omar, or the Pope would sell the Cathedral of Rome."

Foul in the Foot.

The New York World recommends the following treatment for this disease:
Dissolve two ounces of sal-soda in one gallon of warm water; then, by means of a soft velvet sponge thoroughly saturated with carbolic soap and the soda solution clean the feet and between the claws of the hoof well, removing by soaking all the horny scales and other dirt. This done, thoroughly dry, take a pledget of soft-tar and cover one side of it with common tar. On the top of the tar place a thick layer of an escharotic, composed of finely powdered sulphate of copper. Then carefully introduce the pledget and dressing, with the copper and tar, next the sore, between the claws of the hoof and in close contact with the digital commissure, and retain all by attaching the ends of the pledget to a ligature fastened round the pastern. From the moment the escharotic begins to take effect the internal process will be arrested, but unless the diseased portion of skin and flesh to which the application is applied sloughs out thoroughly again, generally one dressing is sufficient, but in some cases two dressings are necessary. When the commissure is soft, yielding, and moist, and the foot fastened round the pastern, and where the part last mentioned is hard and horny, then the caustic operates upon it more slowly and with greater difficulty. The escharotic does not exhaust its power until forty-eight hours after it is applied, and need not be removed earlier. At the expiration of this time you will readily see whether the foreign bodies are sloughing away; if not, another dressing applied in the same way as the first will be necessary.
I have never had occasion to employ more than three of these escharotic dressings in any case that has been placed in my hands for treatment, and some of them have been aggravated ones. The slough takes place and is removed with the first dressing, when the disorder is not of long standing; but a second, and may be the third, dressing may be necessary, and subsequently the sores are kept clean by washing once or twice a day with a lotion composed of one ounce of the acetate of zinc mixed with one pint of cold water. Nothing more is required. The slough once separated, the lameness disappears, the sores subside, and the animal returns to its food; a cow will begin to give her usual quantity of milk, which has been greatly reduced while the disorder remained unchecked.

Packed Too Close.

The Earl of Derby recently delivered a speech at Rochdale, England, in which he said:
"Though I do not hold that there is much of an opening for workmen on the land at home, I do not say the same of land elsewhere. I think it is a very fair question whether in this little island of ours we are not getting packed too closely, and whether we have not suffered from the comparative stoppage of emigration in the last few years. Emigration is for a people like ours a natural and even a necessary outlet. You may pass what laws you please, you might lighten the burden of taxation until the workingman are practically exempt; but as long as there are more of them than can get work, and as long as there are two men looking after one employer, neither votes nor freedom from taxes, nor anything else that politicians can do, nor yet any expenditure of their own for producing artificial scarcity of labor in special employments, will in the long run prevent them from being badly off. I am not contending that any of you should start off down to the New World without inquiry as to the chances when you get there. Just now the Americans have their troubles as well as ourselves; but with their boundless soil they are rapidly accumulating capital, and with their exceptional energy they are sure to rally before long; indeed, I believe they have already begun. There are children living who will probably see the United States numbering 200,000,000 inhabitants and I do not think there is any subject to which leaders of working men can more usefully turn their attention than the supplying to those who want it here accurate and trustworthy intelligence as to their chances beyond the Atlantic, either north or south of the Canadian boundary. We shall always have men enough left at home, and if emigration were to go to the length of checking the increase of the race, which it almost certainly will, it is better to have 35,000,000 of human beings leading useful and intelligent lives than 40,000,000 struggling painfully for bare subsistence. There are many persons, I know, who will object to the ground that though emigration may be good for the individual it weakens the State. I cannot take that view. A contented people goes a long way towards making a State powerful, and from and after the year 1879, no miracle will be wrought, unless people expect none, and the Jew is a very sober man. Whatever the belief of the Jews may be in regard to Palestine and the Messiah, it will hardly have more influence on them, precisely than the fantastic belief has on Christians."
"You remove, to-day, the Jews out of Christendom, and in a few years the whole concern is bankrupt with one-sided bigotry or a delusion. The Jews are the vilest of the fish pond to chase the fat carps, or else they would roll in their fat. O, no, the Jew must not go back to Palestine, or else the narrow prejudices of races, creeds and country limit would in a few years be as intolerable as they were centuries ago."
"Among all the wild-goose speculations of Bohemians, we think that of purchasing Palestine is one of the most ludicrous caricatures. One point is always forgotten, viz. After Mecca, Jerusalem is the most holy city of the Islam. As little as the Mohammedans will give up Mecca they will give up Jerusalem, and the Islam has more than one hundred millions of devotees. The Sultan might as well be charged with the intention of selling Mecca with the Prophet's grave as he would Jerusalem with the Mosque of Omar, or the Pope would sell the Cathedral of Rome."

How an American Journalist is Said to Have Lost His Life.

The sad news comes from Paris of the death of W. Benton, the king of American reporters, who for seven or eight years past—so M. E. Deschamps says in Le Figaro—has been drawing a fantastic salary from one of the great American dailies. The late lamented W. Benton scattered abroad the dollars of his journal with princely magnificence; was on intimate terms with all the famous literary celebrities of Europe, spoke eight languages with perfect fluency, and assisted in all the wars of the old world as a most consistent spectator. He had gained admittance to Prince Gortchakoff's presence as a tailor, to Bismarck as a dog merchant, to the emperor at Berlin as a photographer; he had gone to royal banquets disguised as a waiter, and to royal funerals as a coffin bearer. In 1867 he made the acquaintance of M. Schneider in the role of a Brazilian diamond miner, while during the Franco-Prussian war he figured as a Tiro (blacker than life), a zonave or ulban, according as the exigencies of the situation demanded. The accomplished journalist was about three weeks ago in a great German city, where the sensation of the time was a troupe of trained bears. There were six of them and they danced through their drills and other performances with such startling regularity that it was very generally suspected that they were not bears but men disguised in bear skins. W. Benton thought as much, and allowed himself to be carried off by them to enter the den, but the manager declined to sanction his enterprise. W. Benton thereupon invited all the journalists in the city to dinner, assured them that the bears were franks, and invited them to be present at the afternoon performance next day, when he intended to unmask the bunbun. Having bribed an employee of the menagerie, Benton, disguised as a bear, entered the arena, and the bear-keepers, seeing him so excited, but he attributed this to their desire to fend off suspicion. The public applauded most enthusiastically. It was then that the unhappy being, instead of carrying out his plan, turned toward the press box, moved his bear's head, and bowed politely. A tremendous roar of laughter ensued, followed by an immense shriek of terror. The bears, on seeing this humor, precipitated themselves on the unfortunate man. Before the tamer could take steps to save him, the reporter, frightfully mutilated, had breathed his last. Thus perished the poor W. Benton, whose editor-in-chief seeks vainly a man fit to replace him.—New York World.
THOMAS MASSEY got out of bed in Milwaukee on an intensely cold morning to build a fire, instead of making his wife do it, and was found an hour afterward frozen nearly to death in the yard, where he had gone for wood.
The man who leaves his father's trade is worthy of his sire.—Frank-Eye.

Enlumbered in Ice.

CAPT. HUBERT KANE, who arrived in this city yesterday from Gloucester, Mass., in the schooner Flirt, of St. Mary's, N. J., told a very harrowing story. It is to the effect that, while ice-bound in Placentia Bay, on the south coast of Newfoundland, on the 4th inst., he desisted what appeared to be a dismantled vessel apparently about two miles off his ice bow. The vessel was also ice-bound. On the following morning he proposed to walk to the vessel, more for the sake of satisfying his curiosity than anything else. The ice was frozen solid, and he experienced no difficulty in obtaining the company of a number of the sailors aboard his schooner. Preparatory to starting the party were provided with axes and other articles necessary on exploring trips. After a tiresome journey, throughout which climbing over and sliding over immense, irregular masses of ice were the most noticeable features, the vessel was reached and discovered to be the hull of a large brig careened over on the port side and imbedded solidly in the ice. Of the two masts only jagged stumps remained. On the stern-post was painted "Adelaide Folquet, Dieppe."
With the aid of the axes Captain Kane says, the men ascended the starboard side of the vessel, and upon gaining the deck a terrible sight met their gaze. Near the gallery door lay the body of a man, face downward, imbedded in the ice so firmly that recognition was impossible until after the corpse had been thoroughly thawed. The body was laid down to the fore-castle were completely blocked up by the frozen sea-water. The axes were again called into requisition and the passage-way was soon cleared. Below there was a horrifying sight to behold. Diagonally across the floor of the once cozy fore-castle another body lay stretched. The appearance of the eyes, mouth and neck gave assurance that decomposition had been advanced to a considerable extent. The atmosphere of the improvised ice-box in which it lay. Another corpse was found in the fore-castle, with its back nearly upright against, and firmly frozen to, and old sea-chest. The head and face of the corpse also presented the appearance of a skull from which every particle of flesh had faded away, and such it would literally have been but for the frail and tightly drawn covering of withered skin which concealed the bone.
Both of the bodies found in the fore-castle were dug out of their temporary resting-place, to which they had been tightly frozen, and conveyed on deck and laid beside the body found in the gallery. The entrance to the cabin was next examined and found almost frozen over, except a small aperture through which nothing but darkness was visible. The axes soon removed the icy obstruction, and an entrance into the cabin was effected. An opening was cut through two of the cabin windows, and the light revealed another sickening spectacle, a sadder one by far than the others, for the body of a woman was found lying prostrate in the Captain's stateroom. A few feet away protruding boots led to the discovery of another body, the upper portion of which was deeply imbedded in a thick ice which covered the cabin floor from the entrance to the opposite side.
All the bodies were arranged on deck as neatly as the circumstances allowed. The interior of the Captain's stateroom contained no ice, and the exploring party found in a box on the table a small man, about thirty-five years of age, and a pleasing looking woman of about thirty—evidently the Captain and his wife. On the floor of the stateroom was a chony crucifix, with the figure of the Redeemer in ivory. The stateroom contained two religious pictures, a writing desk, a medicine chest, two line trunks, valises and satchels, which the explorers would not have dared to have been consulted. The men gloomily made their fatiguing journey back to Placentia harbor, where they laid all the particulars of their sudden adventure before the magistrates, who at once took steps to have the bodies brought ashore, together with the ship's papers and other effects secured until full identification had been made.
A telegram from St. Pierre announced that the Adelaide Folquet, a French brig, had last been seen when she left that port on Nov. 16, with a load of codfish, herring and dried caplin, bound for the port of Marseilles in France.—N. Y. Star.
—Chased Nine Miles by a Locomotive.
Jim Wyatt glories in the ownership of a horse that can beat the Central Railroad's best schedule time. Last Friday night he mounted a negro on the animal in question and sent him to Lenoxy on an errand. Returning, he was overtaken by the eleven o'clock through freight, which so frightened the horse that he became perfectly wild, and, throwing his rider, struck out down the railroad track like a streak of greased lightning, with the rapidly advancing train close upon his heels. The engineer sounded the alarm whistle, opened the steam-cocks, and did everything else to frighten the already terrified animal from the track, but failed. He then pulled the throttle wide open, thinking to overtake and knock him off, but Pegasus gathered fresh strength as the object of his terror approached, and, letting himself out, soon left the locomotive far in the rear. The race continued until Sunny Side was reached, when he left the track, having run the entire distance (nearly nine miles) in less than forty minutes, and beating the train by several ear-lengths. This statement, incredible as it may seem, is actually true, and will be vouched for by reliable witnesses, the engineer among the number.—Henry County (Ga.) Weekly.
A PLAIN SPOKEN woman recently visited a married woman and said to her: "How do you manage to amuse yourself?" "Amuse," said the other, "don't you know that I have my housework to do?" "Yes," was the answer, "I see that you have it to do, but as it is never done, I conclude you must have some other way of passing your time."

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

Texas will shortly hold its first State Convention of teachers.

In Virginia there are only three Congregational churches, and one of them belongs to colored people.

Four colored students have entered the Episcopal Divinity School at West Philadelphia, all of whom expect to engage in missionary work in Africa.

The colored schools of Washington are said to be the best schools of the sort in the country. They are taught almost exclusively by colored teachers.

Bishop Keane, of Richmond, Va., is actively engaged in bringing negroes into the Roman Catholic Church. There are at present few or no colored Catholics in that diocese.

George Muller and wife will visit America this year. They are now in Switzerland, and will soon go to Spain, Italy, and Germany in Christian work.

St. George's Church, the oldest Methodist church in Philadelphia, and the oldest but one in America, has just celebrated its one hundred and ninth anniversary.

One-seventh of the population of North Carolina are members of the Baptist Church. About half of the number, 160,000, are colored people, who added to their churches last year 9,000 members.

The circulation of religious newspapers and periodicals in the United States amounts to about 4,764,000, coming next to the circulation of political newspapers, which is 1,741,000, and far in advance of those of other pursuits and interests.

The members of the Presbyterian Church in St. Joseph, Mo., pledge themselves to raise six hundred dollars a year for five years, to support a single missionary in China, and the expectation of continuing the subscription longer.

Northern Methodism, as the result of eleven years' work in Texas, has 14,207 members, 2,467 preachers, 308 local and 221 traveling preachers, 174 churches, and 177 Sunday-schools, with 13,822 scholars.

In the twelve Roman Catholic Dioceses of Prussia there are upward of 1,600 parishes and stations which are vacant. The largest number of vacant churches are in the Dioceses of Breslau, (200) Cologne, (187) Treves, (165) and Munster (149). The smallest number (14) is in Fulda.

A distinguished teacher in Germany writing to Professor Garrison has been crowded out by the sound method, which teaches the sounds represented by the different letters and pays no attention whatever to their names. "Only a few quite aged teachers still admit spelling."

The United Brethren in Christ, a Methodist denomination, reports for 1878, 46 annual conferences, 4,187 organized churches, 152,231 members, 2,152 ministers, 3,060 Sunday-schools, and 153,159 Sunday-school scholars. The church has 12 educational institutions and a Biblical seminary, sustains a prosperous mission in Africa, and is engaged in the prosecution of home missions.

The Universalists have, according to their annual for 1879, 23 State Conventions, 963 parishes, 42,500 families, 737 churches, and 37,965 members, an increase of 2,576. There has been also an increase of 51 parishes, but a decrease of 11 ministers, the total being 711. The value of the parish property is estimated at $7,057,170.

Rev. David Jones, a Congregational minister, recently ordained, is attempting to bring about a more thorough and systematic instruction of the Chinese in Boston. Miss Harriette Carter, one of the city missionaries, has had Chinese scholars for some two or three years, to the number of 80 in all, in connection with the Chamber's Street Sabbath-school.

The Roman Catholic Directory for England for 1879 says there are in Great Britain at the present time 21 Archbishops and Bishops of the Roman Catholic faith, 2,175 priests, and 1,286 churches. These figures show an increase over the previous year of 39 priests and 38 churches. In Scotland, where the hierarchy has been recently re-established, there are 6 Bishops, 272 priests and 261 churches and stations.

The hymns sung by the Huguenots in the face of the great dangers that surrounded that people are now to be published in Paris in a two volume work with the title: "Clement Marot and the Huguenot Psalm Book." The editor of it has been engaged for eight years in collecting every fact which could in any way illustrate the history of these hymns.

The ten ladies who are County School Superintendents in Illinois have managed the financial part of their business particularly well. Not one cent of the large sums over which they have had supervision has been lost, either through dishonesty or ignorance of business. In many of the counties the school finances were in a state of confusion when the ladies came into office. They have straightened everything, and put all school affairs on the most prosperous basis. Several of these lady superintendents recently held meetings of their school officers, and talk about school work, with very useful results. These superintendents have also succeeded excellently in the legal part of their work in school visitation, and in influencing and instructing teachers. Even those making educators who opposed the law making women eligible to this office now pronounce her work a success, after the five years' experience.

Old Tiptecum's Conch.

There died one day last week, in this vicinity, an aged and eccentric man named Alvin Harrison. He was about seventy-three years of age, and was a cousin of ex-President Harrison. In 1840 he was a promising young lawyer of Ross County, Ohio, and stumped the State in the interest of his cousin, "Old Tiptecum." Several years thereafter he quit the practice of law and took up the study of medicine. Later on he became engaged to a young lady, and at last the happy day was fixed for the celebration of this marriage. But before the arrival of the eventful day the young lady eloped with a stage driver, leaving Mr. Harrison to mourn her sudden and unexpected departure. This misfortune disgusted Mr. Harrison with the fickleness of human nature and civilization in general that he turned his back upon the world, preferring a home in the trackless wilderness and solitude of the mountains to the busy haunts of refined life. Some fourteen years ago he built him a log cabin and took up his abode in the Neosho bottoms, some three miles from town. His nearest neighbor at that time was a man named Haveland, who subsisted on a scanty and unwholesome diet of spoiled bacon. The cabin door was open and unobscured, while he was content with a simple pallet of straw. He drove a team, plowed, and raised crops, and was, in fact, a self-sufficient man. He had an intelligent expression of countenance, but went about scantily clad in rags and patches of the coarsest fabric; yet in the midst of filth and rags he was recognized as a man of above average sense and educational culture, which always brought him respectful deference from all. It is said that aside from his property, which consisted of 320 acres of good land and some personal property, he owned valuable property in Ohio.

Some years since his brothers came to see him and endeavored to get him to abandon his isolated existence, but all in vain, for he remained alone till the last. When it was found that he was sick, the kind neighbors flocked in and did all in their power to alleviate his suffering, but all to no avail. After his death a box containing silver and bank notes, deeds, mortgages, etc., was found in his hands in the hands of responsible parties. Quite a number of standard works on medicine and law were also found. Among his effects was a letter, purporting to be from his niece, directed to him at Iola, and dated 1865. In it several family names are mentioned, which may serve as a clue to the whereabouts of his relatives that are living.—Geauga (Kan.) Cor. Indianapolis Sentinel.

New York Millionaires.

The founders of the great New York fortunes of the present century—John Jacob Astor, Robert Lenox, Alexander T. Stewart, Cornelius Vanderbilt—have all passed away.

John Jacob Astor arrived in this city at a period of great depression, in 1781. During the latter part of 1783 some 12,000 refugees, men, women, and children, left New York, Long Island, and Staten Island, for Nova Scotia and St. John, among them many persons of fortune and estate. These estate Astor began to buy whenever he could spare the money, as soon as he got a little ahead in the world. John Jacob Astor's first purchase of city real estate—two lots on the Bowery lane or road, now Elizabeth street—was made in August, 1789, and from that date to the time of his death, March, 1818, he was a steady and constant buyer of real estate. The last conveyance to John Jacob Astor was made shortly before his death, in 1818. The conveyances made to him during the fifty-nine years which elapsed between his first and last purchase of real estate in this city form seven pages of closely-printed matter in the index of conveyances on file in the register's office. These wise investments have with time swollen into enormous wealth, and the Astor fortune to-day, as represented by Mr. John Jacob Astor and Mr. William Astor (grandsons of the first Astor), is one of the great fortunes of the world. At the time of John Jacob Astor's death in 1818, his fortune was estimated at from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, and he left behind him the largest fortune of his time. Baron de Rothschild, Louis Philippe, the Duke of Devonshire, and Sir Robert Peel only exceeding him.

The late Mr. Robert Lenox, like Mr. Astor, was a self-made man. He was when he first began, an entire stranger in this city, where the name of Lenox is now so greatly venerated because of the noble deeds of charity and the lavish donations for religious and literary purposes of his only son, James Lenox. Mr. Robert Lenox commenced business in 1783—the year before John Jacob Astor arrived—and remained here permanently until his death, which occurred in December, 1829, and he was then in the prime of his life. For many years his operations greatly exceeded those of any other merchant in the country at that day. He became eventually one of the most successful merchants in the United States, and his fortune was accumulated mostly in city real estate. In 1817 and 1818 he bought for less than $7,000 about thirty-six acres of land running from Sixty-eighth to Seventy-fourth street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, known as the "Lenox farm," much of which is now covered with first-class brown-stone houses. The enormous increase in the value of this land, sold for the most part at top prices between 1864 and 1872, gives Mr. James Lenox a high rank among the New York millionaires. The Lenox farm to-day, without a brick on it, would be worth $8,000,000. While the Lenox fortune is modest, indeed, when compared with the colossal accumulations of the Astors, Vanderbilts and Stewarts, we venture to hazard the opinion that Mr. James Lenox has quietly given away as much as the late Mr. Peabody. His donations in land and money to charitable, literary and religious institutions situated on the Lenox farm alone amount to over $2,500,000. This is a noble example to those who would the great fortunes of New York. It is to be regretted that the name of Lenox, so far as the founder of the family in this city is concerned, dies with the present Mr. Lenox, a bachelor now advanced in years. As long as New York exists his memory will be remembered and cherished.

The fortune of A. T. Stewart—of quicker growth than that of Astor—was accumulated in one lifetime. At Mr. Stewart's death, in 1866, it was estimated at $80,000,000, or twice the amount of John Jacob Astor's when he died in 1818. In 1875, Mr. Stewart's city real estate—situated for the most part below Union Square—was assessed at $6,212,700; at that time the assessed valuation represented only 60 per cent. of the real value, so that the actual value of the real estate was $10,354,500, which forms but an eighth of his estimated wealth. Mr. Stewart, however, owned real estate in nearly every city in which he had dealings. He owned a number of wooden and brick mills in this country, among them the Mohawk and Elipso, at Little Falls; the New York mills, at Rotterdam; the Woodward mills, at Woodstock; the Yonkers mills, in New Jersey; the Washington mills, at Hartford; the Catskill and Waterville woolen mills. There are also large mills at Nottingham, England, and Glasgow, Scotland. The property of the house of A. T. Stewart & Co. is greatly scattered. It owns property in most of the large cities here and abroad, and has continually in its employ out of New York over 6,000 persons. There are branch houses at Bradford, Manchester, Belfast, Paris, Lyons, Berlin, and Chemnitz.

Probably Mr. William H. Vanderbilt is to-day the richest man in New York. He inherited the bulk of Commodore Vanderbilt's fortune, who, at the time of his death was accounted the richest man in either of the present Astors. With the single exception of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, our other New York millionaires draw their revenues from the rents, income, and profits of investments, which have shrunk fully one-third since 1875. If the Astor fortune was then $90,000,000, it is to-day worth not over $60,000,000, and so on throughout the list. Since 1825 New York has grown with a rapidity hitherto unknown in any of the great centers of population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the Robert J. Livingstons, and Frederick Stevns, who occupy, on the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, the finest private residence in the city. It is a singular fact that of all the gentlemen who have made money in New York, not certainly between $100,000 and $150,000,000 of real estate, not one concerns himself personally about municipal affairs. This reflection addresses itself with peculiar force to the population of the world, and this growth gave wealth to the fortunate few who bought or inherited city real estate. The descendants are among our richest citizens. Chief among them are the Astors, the Tenthens, the Lenoxes, the

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1879.

NUMBER 52.

VOLUME 2.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Cups, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second and Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third and Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF FURNISHING.

N. B. WAXMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Alder & Main Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Trunks, Umbrellas, etc., Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Mill and Saloon.

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second Streets.

GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCLAM,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., op. Bailey's Park.

MILLS.

CRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.

OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

WM. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Win. Shouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McClam's office.

MASONS.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First Street.

LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third Street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars, and Tobacco, French Candy,
Fruits, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's pre-
scriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.
CHAS. RINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence next door to Express office.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINET MAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SLATZBERG,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

THO. J. PEDERSON,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG,
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his
usual large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measure for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

850 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.

Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, MD., at the Court House in L. C.
STALNAKER VS. HIS CREDITORS.

ordered, this 21st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his creditors, creditors and creditors, that the FIRST MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the sale of L. C. Stalnaker's property in the Circuit Court
for Garrett County, to answer such claims
or demands as his creditors, bondholders
or sureties may propose or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first Monday of May next, or such notice.

W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett County.

The Copy—Test—
W. H. Tower, Clerk.

SELLERS' LIVER PILLS

These pills are the best for the Liver, and are sold by all druggists. They are entirely harmless, and will cure
all cases of Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache, &c. &c. Price 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Rum Murder.

The following is an extract from a sermon preached in the Presbyterian church at Palmyra, N. Y., by the Rev. Horace Eaton, on the occasion of the funeral of James A. Porter, murdered by Charles Torr. Both were young men, both had been addicted to the use of strong drink,
both for six months had been reformed. Porter in a single instance had been persuaded to drink. Torr had gone back to his cups. When both were intoxicated they met at a cave, a quarrel ensued, and Porter
was fatally stabbed by Torr:

"One gleam from this cloud of God's displeasure discovers the terrible possibilities of guilt treasured up in the unrepentant heart. Once this man's life was an infant in his mother's arms. Rum, with its triple scourge, poverty, neglect, temptation, pursued him to manhood. Thus was developed the stark demon of murder. How much do you and I owe to pious nurture, to the retraining grace of God!

"Another flash from these angry
heavens is in the face of polite, respectable, temperate drinkers. As you cannot go from Palmyra to Buffalo without going through Rochester, so these young men would have come to the surges of this death-bearing Babylon without first going through the enchanted ground of 'temperate' drinking. Every man and woman known as a 'temperate'
drinker has nourished and deflected
the opus that has borne fruit unto death in this murder. It was not total abstinence that planted and nourished the appetite, fired the brain, and nerved the hand to strike.
Temperate drinking sowed the seed out of which sprang the blade, the ear, the full corn at the base of the pyramid culminated in murder at the apex. I hear a voice from heaven, emphasized by the dagger, 'Touch
not, taste not, handle not!'

"Another flash with the bolt is in the face of the vendors of intoxicating beverages. The man who sold the alcohol in whatever form put the match to the train. That man feels to-day that it was an unprofitable transaction. Not to be known, especially to remove the guilt from his conscience, he would sacrifice much of his gains. But however vendors and drinkers may combine to keep the secret, 'the Judge standeth before the door.' He marks 'the spots that won't out.' He is the unseen witness, detective, sheriff. He notes
every one who enters behind the curtain or goes down into the cellar. He watches every street, its full length, on both sides, night and day. Should the poor fugitive from justice, now
secreted in the swamp of the forest,
never be overtaken; should he through fear, or an oath, or a high sense of honor, refuse to divulge the hand that sold him the poison, yet
'the Judge standeth before the door'
of every place where liquor is sold
and has the time, name, deed on record.

But perhaps some vendor of intoxicating drinks, looking across this coffin is congratulating himself thus:
'My elder, beer, brandy had no hand in this murder.' But, my friend, this murder is the legitimate fruit of your business. Rum selling whets the knife, loads the deadly weapon, and sends up the report of a harvest of murders every week. Besides, rum kills by disease. It shows the poisoned arrow of grief into the heart of the wife, the mother, the daughter, the sister, as before their eyes the husband, son, father, brother gave staggering to dishonored graves.
Brave indeed must be that man who can challenge such lightnings, defy
'the Judge standing before the door,'
and go again over this butchered
corpse to this work of death.

"Such voices, such lurid fires above
and round, should leave us an atmosphere purified and tonic. Had a wild beast escaped the menagerie and slain one of our citizens, the community would be agreed to circumvent
and put out of the way the common enemy. Let every heart, old and young, assume a positive antagonism to the foe. Let law reach out its strong arm to arrest, let the community rise in one solid phalanx against this rascal, rum!"

This is to give notice that all citizens troubled with Coughs or Colds
should at once procure a bottle of Dr.
Bull's Cough Syrup. It is for sale by all druggists and costs only 25 cents
a bottle.

This issue completes our second
volume.

The House that Sam Built.

(From the New York Graphic.)

THE REPUBLICAN—This the house that
Sam built.

THE PRESIDENCY—This is the Malt
that lay in the House that Sam
built.

TILLEN—This is the Rat that smelt
the Malt that lay in the House that
Sam built.

THE BALLOT—This is the Cat that scratched the Rat that wanted the Malt that lay in the House that
Sam built.

THE BULLDOZER—This is the Dog
that worried the Cat that chased the Rat that smelt the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE RETURNING BOARD—This is
the Malt that lay in the House that
Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

THE MALT—This is the Malt that
lay in the House that Sam built.

Tilden's Logic.

A Republican Board, after being tempted by Democratic bribes, makes a Republican return. Therefore, the Republican Committee must have bribed them to vote in accordance with their natural inclinations. Certainly! It doubtless bribed them to eat their dinners too. Do you ask the proof? Why, Tilden's proof!

They acted according to their natural inclination; and of course must have been bribed, to do so strange a thing as that.

Or take it another way. Admit that they were bribed—an admission for which in the case of some of the Boards there is not a shadow of pretext. But admit it. Nobody doubts that, bribed or not, their sympathies
were Republican. Now, being Republicans, they were tempted by Joseph

Surface, Moses, and by Smith Wood,
and they agreed to sell out for eighty thousand dollars and ten "for the future," or for half a hundred best United States documents. They sent on their money order for the money, but the bad young man Pelton went back on them, and they found themselves tricked. Of course, after that, the Republican party in it have bribed them to keep them from voting for the side that had tricked them. The proof? Why, Tilden's proof! They voted against the men that had offered them money and cheated them have done such an amazing thing, unless they had been bribed by the other side to do it?

There is a curious disclosure in our Washington dispatches respecting the Democratic anxiety for the repeal of the present election safeguards,
and, failing in that, for an extra session of Congress. The sure Democratic majority in the next House, as admitted by a speaker in Monday night's caucus, will not exceed four,
and two of the Democratic members are already under indictment for election frauds. If there is no session until December next, and the United States Courts are allowed to go punishing crime in their ruthless and indefensible fashion, the Democratic majority in the next House will be, in all probability, not in the House, but in the penitentiary. The danger of this singular catastrophe is heightened by the strong likelihood that more than two Democratic members of the new House participated in the Southern election frauds.
The Democracy might meet this new peril by adding another rider to the appropriation bills to abolish all penitentiaries. It would hardly be more ridiculous than some of the proposed legislation to which Senator Thurman has given the sanction of his leadership. For, as is shown in the Washington dispatches, the grave
Senator has begun a fierce crusade against a law which has had a quiet
existence of nearly forty years.

It is to be hoped that Congress will find time before adjournment to pass
the resolutions offered in the Senate yesterday by Mr. Cameron asking the appointment of a select commission with full powers to investigate during the coming summer the whole question of inter-state commerce, ac-certain where and to what extent freight discriminations exist, where and what rebates, are, or are not, and interests, if any, are oppressed, and report at the next session of Congress
what regulations, in their opinion,
Congress should pass to correct existing evils. It is well known that the trunk lines are desirous of restrictive legislation in this matter, as well as manufacturers and shippers, but the bill now in the hands of the Senate Commerce Committee was framed after a hearing of only a portion of the interest involved, and is so crude and imperfect that if it should become law much injustice
would be done by its enforcement.

OPPOSED TO FASTING IN LENT.
The Philadelphia Record says a number of members of the Reformed Episcopal Church in that city propose to discontinue the observance of Lent
as a season of fasting. They urge that the indulgence in worldly pleasure before and after Lent is increased by way of compensation for enforced abstinence during the season of fasting, while they also urge that uniform moderation of life is the Church's great need, and that this may be better secured without Lenten observances than with them.

—Sound Advice.—We consentiously recommend our readers to try Keller's Roman Liniment in all cases of Rheumatism. For Sale by all Druggists.

A curious lawsuit has at last been settled in Indiana—by the boggary of the contests. Mayfield and Feath-eringill were well-to-do farmers in Floyd county, Indiana. One of Mayfield's cows dropped a bell from her neck in the woods that cost fifty cents, and was half worn and was supposed to be worth twenty-five cents when lost. One of the Feath-eringill boys, in passing through the woods one day, found a cow bell,
Mayfield claimed that it was his bell,
and demanded it. Featheringill refused to give it up. Mayfield then replevied it, and this commenced a lawsuit that absorbed the farms and personal estate of the contestants.
Not being able to pay lawyers' fees
any longer, the lawyers refused to serve in the case, and the litigants
were compelled to compromise, which they did by each agreeing to pay his own costs, which amounted to over $1,500 a side, or an aggregate of over $3,000. Both men were impoverished, but both of them had the questionable satisfaction of not "giving in."

MR. MOODY REFUSES TO RECEIVE
$30,000.—Mr. Dwight L. Moody, the Evangelist, has been accused of receiving large sums of money from various sources, principally by the sale of his hymn books. He has repeatedly stated that these assertions were false, and on Tuesday last his truthfulness was fully established.
The publishers of his hymn books, in England, sent him a draft for $30,- 000, being the amount of royalty due him. The check for the amount was at the Farmers' and Planters' Bank, in this city, and Mr. Moody refused to accept it. The money was he returned. Mr. Moody says he does not preach to make money, and clearly showed it by the refusal of the above amount of money.—Balt.
Herald.

The investigation of the coparceners and their victim has left Pelton
in mid air, so far as his mysterious source of power is concerned. The treasurer of the National Committee testified that Pelton was allowed to do about as he pleased because he was the nephew of his uncle; that he was not rebuked for the Baltimore performance and removed from his ex-officio position because of that relaxation. Mr. Tilden testified that he did not remove him because he thought the Committee would take care of him and keep him out of mischiefs.

THE PENNSYLVANIA RIOT BILL.
—Speaker Long, of Allegheny county, introduced in the lower house of the Pennsylvania Legislature on Monday night, a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the payment of losses
of property occasioned by the riots in July, 1877. The bill provides for the appointment of a commission of three persons by the Governor, who shall fix the amount of the losses by a thorough examination. No person who assisted or participated in riots for losses. All claims must be presented and the investigation concluded before November 1, 1879.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old and Reliable "STANDARD." The
price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the at-
tachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people, far beyond that ever yet attain-
ed by any other machine at any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are learning the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "STANDARD." Knowing from
experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can outsell
all other Machines, where the super-
ior quality and low price is made
known. This splendid Machine
combines all the improvements, is
far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a Serviceable Sewing

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
SIX MONTHS, .60
THREE MONTHS, .30
INSURELY IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 50 cents per square of 10 lines.
Subsequent insertions, 25 cents per square of 10 lines.
Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Defective communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, FEB. 22, 1879.

The Baltimore Herald pointedly remarks that "there is a good deal of talk in the City Council about reform within the party," but it never gets further than the committee room.

The Deficiency bill is ready to be reported, amounting to $2,500,000. Democrats, of course will say this ought to be added to the amount which they have saved the country. Others will see the reverse side of the cut.

Governor Carroll is not increasing his reputation outside the State as an able and high-minded official by subscribing toward the payment of fines and costs of the men recently sentenced for violating the Federal election law.

The Albany Journal says the old Democratic party so ruined the national credit that Buchanan's administration had to beg for funds at an enormous rate of interest. But when we think of the desperate efforts of Democrats to overthrow the Government, we feel so deeply thankful that they failed that we cannot find the heart to upbraid them for their previous sins either of omission or commission.

Louisiana Democratic organs cannot understand how Federal officers dare to arrest American citizens exercising their sovereign right in bulldozing the negro. The West Feliciana Sentinel considers it a duty "to meet the invaders (the Federal courts) at the threshold of the state and tell them in language unmistakable that we are capable of taking care of our own affairs and that we intend to do so at all hazards."

Senator Chandler, that is to be, in accepting his nomination last week, said in regard to the campaign of 1876: "I never did a thing, wrote a line, sent a dispatch, either cipher or in the English language, or in any other way, that I would not be glad to see in print to-morrow morning in all the Democratic papers of these United States." If the copiers had as good memories as Zack Chandler all the world would know today how great a fraud was S. J. Tilden.

A prominent colored leader in Louisiana, who holds a Federal office in New Orleans, has observed that election disturbances occur in the cotton growing districts of that State, while, as a rule, the parishes that raise sugar are comparatively tranquil. His explanation is, that the cane crop requires constant attention from the time it is planted, until it is cut and ground, while the cotton crop gives intervals of idleness that inspire political and other deviltry.

Mr. Hayes is reported as saying that if Congress adjourns before making necessary appropriations he will not call an extra session before next October. He says that he Government pulled through one Summer without necessary appropriations and he is willing to see the experiment tried again. If the talented Office-seekers who throng Washington in the hope that they will all be cared for when the Senate is reorganized could be made to realize this, perhaps they would go home and prepare for corn-planting.—Balto. Gazette, Democratic.

Numbering ballots was one of the measures of reform introduced in the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1874 as an aid in securing an honest return of votes at elections, and for exposing fraud, if any should be committed. The numbered ballots have frequently enabled the Courts to purge rather than throw out a precinct return, and last week they helped to convict three Pittsburgh election officers of fraudulent practices. The ballots cast for one of the candidates for Alderman were either altered or thrown out, but as each ballot was numbered they were easily recognized by the voters, the wrong corrected and the wrong doers convicted of crime. The chief purpose of numbering ballots is to enable the voters to recognize their votes and to expose fraud.

The publication at Pottsville, Pa., of President Grover's letter concerning the "Knights of Labor" has had a demoralizing effect upon the discontented miners, and it is believed that the organization cannot be kept up. The Catholic Church of Pottsville and also churches at several other towns have given notice that the church will excommunicate all members of the new order.

There never was such an instance of going a wool-gathering and coming home shorn as the Potter Committee, which was appointed with the idea of discovering Republican frauds in Louisiana, and in particular of convicting Secretary Sherman of subornation to fraud. It speedily was compelled to adopt defensive tactics, and its last performance was a lame and impotent attempt to relieve their presidential candidate of complicity in the attempt of its nephew and confidential agents to buy up returning boards.

When the issue of fractional currency was stopped it was estimated that the amount outstanding was $15,000,000. A commission appointed by Secretary Sherman estimated that of this amount about $8,000,000 would never be presented for redemption, having been destroyed or lost. It now appears that this estimate was too small. There is still outstanding about $16,000,000 fractional paper currency, of which amount about $2,000,000 is in 3-cent and 5-cent notes. It is now estimated that there will ultimately be redeemed only $4,000,000, leaving $12,000,000 as profit to the Government.

The Cincinnati Enquirer is of the opinion that the Democrats of the East most either "seek an immediate combination with the Greenback party, or be disgracefully defeated next fall;" and it therefore recommends the Democrats of the East, as we understand it, to form such a combination with the Greenback party on the basis of an agreement, that "every dollar that circulates in the United States as money, be it gold, silver or paper, shall be issued by the Government, and shall be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

The bill repealing the charter of the Louisiana lottery has become a law, and a great curse has been extirpated, for which the whole country has reason to give thanks. This is what the Philadelphia Times says about it: "A good many struggling newspapers that have been subsidized by the concern will have to scratch harder for a living, one or two ex-Confederate officers of high rank will have to look elsewhere for support, and the policy dealers will be obliged to look up some other charter for swindling; but thousands of people will be rid, in a measure, of temptation to make fools of themselves in the old and vain effort to get rich without work."

Senator Whyte made a speech last week against the Edmunds resolutions. Some of his constituents have recently been convicted in Judge Bond's court of violating the United States election laws, and are now serving out the terms of imprisonment to which they have been respectively sentenced. No doubt a part of the Senator's opposition to the Enforcement act is inspired by the unhappy fate of the professional ballot-box stuffers of Baltimore, whose performances at the last Congressional election brought them within the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court. Should that jurisdiction be enlarged by the additional legislation contemplated in the Edmunds resolutions, there is no telling how many of Senator Whyte's active political supporters would be sent to the penitentiary.

If it can be shown that a vicious use is made of the federal election laws; if innocent men are sent to prison, and if voters are kept away from the polls by them, there might be some justice in the Democratic demand for their repeal. But the howl is the loudest where the just operation of the laws is most undeniable. Many of the persons indicted were so destitute of defence that they pleaded guilty. The only possible point of civil is the lightness of the sentence, the heaviest of which are far below the minimum penalties imposed by the State law. The unguish of the Democratic mind, however results from the thought of the loss of so many useful party workers. The Washington Capital declares that if the law is left unrepaid "the Democrats will not organize the next House, for the reason that several of its members will be in the penitentiary, whither two—Hull, of Florida, and King, of Louisiana—are already on the road, and traveling as fast as this engine of satanic Radicalism can haul them." And this is given as evidence of the bad effects of the law!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D.C., Feb. 17, 1879.

Whether just or otherwise the average Congressman got credit for no higher motive in his affirmative vote on the arrears pension bill than a desire to cultivate the friendship of the soldier element for the good and behoof of number one first, and the success of his party secondarily. To those who have noted the game of battlere and shuttlecock played by succeeding Congresses with the just claims of the men who beat the life of the rebellion by personal efforts at the front, such a standard of judgment did not seem unduly harsh. The artful dodgings, the evasions, the twistings and turnings resorted to by each new Congress and their individual members to shift responsibilities in the matter which they should have assumed, into those that went before and those to come after them, both for what was and what was not done, all tend to confirm this view. I don't mean to infer that all our national legislators gauged their efforts or lack of them in this direction by the probable effect they were to exert on their personal or their party's fortunes. On the contrary I feel sure that every Congress that has convened since the war has had its quota of members whose honesty, patriotism and gratitude were limited by as such selfish considerations—men who have not hesitated to learn any responsibility demanded of them by the situation and whose advocacy of and vote on any particular measure have been governed by the merit of the case involved. But the several votes had on the different propositions, submitted to provide the money needed to satisfy the pension bill that passed both houses by a practically unanimous vote bears out this generally uncomplimentary view of the motives underlying that vote. Yesterday members were again faced on record in the matter, and the bill reported from the Committee appropriating $27,000,000 for the purpose named, was passed by a vote of 178 to 64. The ex-Confederates voted almost solidly against the bill, and a few northern Democrats, including Bagge, were found with them. However they may squint to get away from the conclusion, this vote will be held to indicate their real attitudes towards the soldier. About the only regret heard among those who favored this tardy act of justice, was because greater care had not been taken in the bill to guard against fraudulent claims.

The annual swindle, the river and harbor bill, was rushed through the House immediately afterwards by a vote of 173 to 71. I can only say by way of protest that if those who contribute the almost $6,000,000 (the senate will likely increase it to seven or eight millions) called for, knew the flagrant character of the outrage perpetrated against them in this bill, very few among the affirmative voters would ever be allowed the opportunity to repeat it. If Congressmen take a contemptible advantage of the "stationary allowances" to furnish themselves with razors, knives, waflets, eye-glasses, bibles, "barks of the bible," etc., ad nauseam, esprit de corps prompts the self-seeking of all parties to affectionately unite in pushing through this river and harbor steal to aid in a re-election which they are conscious of not deserving and which they are confident can only be effected by some such advantageous aid. The money may be designated in the bill for the "improvement" of creek and streams not even of local, let alone National, importance. Its expenditures are too often virtually entrusted to men who proved their devotion and ability in the last campaign. The largest possible number of voters are set at work just before election. About every one of these will vote for the member from "our district" who has been so successful in securing such a generous appropriation for the good of the workmen. This is one of the many plans for the judicious distribution of the appropriation.

As is always the case, Congress is now striving in the few days of the session left to make up for the indulgence and neglect of months. Needed legislation will have to go over for lack of time, and jobs will get through to spite of all the diligence of these honestly desirous of deluding them. In deference to a class interest tax on tobacco is to be reduced and the deficiency must be made up on something of prime necessity. Whether the demand of party exigencies on the Pacific Coast, the passage of the anti-Chinese bill must be acknowledged as giving the lie to all our professions of hospitality to the down-trodden of other nations, and in violation of the spirit of our international treaties.

LOAN.

The President is positive of one thing—there will be no extra session of the Senate. Then, what will the House gain by delaying business and holding over?

Municipal Reform.

The Executive Committee of the Reform and Retrenchment Association is preparing an address to the people of Baltimore, asking the co-operation of citizens, without distinction of party, in the work of effecting a retrenchment of expenses in the city and state governments, and a general reform in the management of municipal as well as state affairs. The address will soon be issued. It presents in strong language the necessity of organization among all classes of citizens, for the purpose of inducing the parties at the helm of city and state affairs to make a halt in extravagant expenditures, and to send to the legislature such men as will represent the wishes and sentiments of the whole people by voting against and discountenancing all measures likely to increase taxation without producing any benefits commensurate with their outlay. To effect this object they invite all citizens, without regard to political opinion, to band together and secure an economical management of public affairs; a reduction of all unnecessary expenses; abolition of all superfluous offices; the reduction of salaries, wherever they are too high; of appropriating money only for purposes absolutely necessary, and for a proper reduction of the tax rate. The design is not only to nominate candidates for the various positions to be voted for next fall, but also to exercise at all times such an influence over the legislative bodies as will check extravagant legislation. At a private meeting of a number of gentlemen of the association held last week, Mr. W. W. Spence in the chair, Mr. George M. Gill read an address embodying the above suggestions, and which was approved by the meeting. A number of gentlemen also signed a call for a general meeting and organization in the different wards of the city. Mr. Lambert Gittings, the independent candidate for Congress in the Fourth district last fall, was present by request, and stated that, though he endorsed everything that had been said at the meeting and reorganized the necessity for an organization to secure reform in city affairs and a reduction of taxation, which is now so high as to make investment of property undesirable and ruinous, yet he did not desire to append his name to anything or identify himself with any movement until he knows what kind of candidates would be put up by the party. Above all, he thought it necessary for the party to speak out in condemnation of the outrages on the ballot box perpetrated in this city last fall, and to demand Judge Bond for the faithful and fearless discharge of his duty by sentencing to fines and imprisonment the rascals who were guilty of the shamesful frauds at the last Congressional elections. Mr. Gittings said that he was a Democrat—an Andrew Jackson Democrat—but would condemn fraud wherever practiced. He then offered a series of resolutions emphatically condemning the frauds on the ballot-box, commending those who are meeting out punishment to the men guilty of it, criticizing those who had appointed the judges and clerks of election for the purposes of subverting the interests of their party, and expressing the opinion that the entire Board of State Supervisors of Election who appointed those officers of election should have been removed. Mr. Gittings supported the resolutions, and thought that something of this kind should be done to discourage such outrages. No action was taken on the resolutions by the meeting, the opinion expressed by the gentlemen present being that the meeting was merely preliminary, and that the resolutions could with propriety be offered at a future meeting of the body. Mr. Gittings then expressed himself cordially in sympathy with the movement, provided its purposes and practical workings agree with the call, and stated that the first step to accomplish this is to secure a pure ballot box, by which the voice of the people could find expression in the choice of their representatives.

The organizers of the movement proposes effecting a permanent organization at once, and then do their best to secure reform and retrenchment; see that the poorer men are sent to the City Council and Annapolis, and that no public money be spent unless for objects absolutely necessary. They think that the city has been governed by professional politicians long enough, and that it is now time for the people to rise in their majesty and assert their rights and wishes, and demand a reduction of taxation.—Balto. American.

The formation of a citizens and taxpayers' party, having for its object reform and retrenchment in municipal affairs, as published in Monday's American, created some sensation in political circles, though the movement was not entirely unexpected, as previous notices have from time to time, been given in these columns of the progress made by the leaders in their preliminary work. A series of resolutions and a call to the people have been adopted by the chief men, and are now being presented to prominent citizens who have not as yet identified themselves with the new non-partisan party. The resolutions were prepared by Mr. Geo. W. Gill and adopted at a meeting held last week, and already noticed, and over which Mr. W. W. Spence presided and Mr. John E. Hurst acted as secretary. They are as follows:

1. Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the city expenditures and taxes of the city of Baltimore should forthwith be reduced to the lowest possible amount consistent with a proper administration of its affairs, and that such reduction can and ought to be made to the extent of one third to one half of the present amount.
2. Resolved, That immediate steps should be taken to cause the city government to be so conducted as to be independent of all political parties, and so that the city offices should be filled by the selection of the most honest and competent men in the community.
3. Resolved, That the mode of selecting our Mayor and members of the City Council is most unwise and dangerous, and calculated to produce the worst results, as well because so many elections are injurious, as because the grossest frauds are almost constantly committed at them.
4. Resolved, That the citizens and taxpayers of each of the twenty wards select five of their best citizens pledged to the reduction of city expenditures and taxes, and to conduct of political parties, to unite in a convention for the purpose of enforcing their views, and with full power to carry the same into effect.
5. Resolved, That such convention be held at some early period, and at some place to be selected by the chairman of this meeting.
6. Resolved, That the citizens and taxpayers of Baltimore be requested to unite under the name of "The Association of Citizens and Taxpayers of Baltimore," and to take all necessary steps to reduce expenditures and taxes, and to cause the city government to be independent of all political parties.

The Constitutional Debate.

As regards the power of the United States in regulating elections for representatives, Senator Edmunds, in his unanimous argument of Tuesday, thoroughly explained the matter. He said:

"You have got the provision that the times, places and manner of holding elections for senators and representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing senators."

"Mr. President, I respectfully submit that the power of Congress by this provision is just as broad as the power of the State is, and, therefore, if Congress has no power to regulate every step of the voter whose qualification is fixed by the constitution, until his vote is deposited and counted and given effect, then the State has no right to regulate every step of the voter, because it says so in explicit terms. It is a grant of power. The right to elect members of Congress did not belong to the States before the Constitution, because you find unamenable to the laws to a free expression of opinion, by pen or speech, upon all public questions, and, of the voter, the right to deposit his ballot at a fair and honestly-conducted election; and to secure these rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government.

Resolved, That free schools are the great bulwark of American liberty, and their efficient maintenance the surest guarantee for its perpetuity. It is, therefore, essential that a public school system be established and maintained, by Government aid, if necessary, in order that every child may be educated for useful citizenship.

Resolved, That the faith of the nation must be maintained inviolate by the honest discharge of all its obligations.

A bill is pending in the New Jersey Legislature, which should be copied and adopted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania. The bill provides that, before justices of the peace, hereafter, shall receive their commissions, it will be necessary for them to submit to a rigid and thorough examination as to their moral standing, and fitness for the position, by a judge of the Supreme Court. If such an examination results favorably to the candidate, a certificate of qualification is to be made out, on which the commission will be given.—Pennsylvania Exchange.

If a law like that alluded to above were in force in Maryland many who are now justices of the peace would get left. It would be a wise thing for our Legislature to adopt a similar measure.

Early in the session it was proposed by Congressmen to avoid if possible the usual "rush" at the close, which has always been the inevitable result of procrastination and dilatory action on the part of both Houses. The present Congress, however, seems to be worse off than some of its predecessors, and the "rush" has already begun, twelve days before the close of the session, being necessitated by the immense amount of business which must be disposed of.

privilege of going and coming when they please. The heaviest sentence that has yet been passed by Judge Flood was that which on Saturday sent Getzlander to jail for twelve months for an assault upon a negro voter.

But after all, says the Baltimore even, the poor wretches who have been found guilty in the Federal court were only instruments in the hands of greater villains than they. Such men as these are merely puppets in the hands of the members of the King, and simply executed the commands of their political masters. Unfortunately the law is not always complete justice, and very often those most deserving of punishment slip through their fingers.

The true criminals were not at the bar of the Court; the men who came under the condemnation of the law were not the principal offenders. There will come a time probably in the history of Baltimore when these "gentlemen" who now move only behind the scenes will find the curtain rudely torn from before them, and will have their political operations exposed to public gaze.

If Congress supposes that by enacting a petty legislation as that enacted they are going to stem the tide of Chinese emigration, they will find themselves greatly in error. If John Chinaman wants to come, he will find ways enough of evading such weak restrictive measures as a desire to make political capital have in this case given birth to. He can land at British Columbia or Mexico and walk across our borders. Who can hinder them? Several years ago a wealthy Chinaman in San Francisco presented $500 in silver as payment per head more on a cargo of Chinamen who had just arrived. The payment was refused, as silver was only a legal tender to the amount of five dollars. "John" marshaled his men in line, handed each one the requisite sum for his personal payment, and in the course of a couple of hours the wholeman was paid, and the celestial, as he walked away, blandly remarked, "Melikan man, he think he velly smart, but he no get away with Chinaman." The whole tribe doubtless look upon this new attempt to discriminate against them as about on a par with the little silver transaction, and they are not far wrong. The fact that the former emanates from so high an authority as the United States Congress will have little effect upon the claim, impassive celestial.

The Republican Battle-Cry for 1880.

The following resolutions adopted by the National Council of the Union League, commend themselves to the favor of every Republican. They comprise in a condensed form the views held by his party in regard to the living issues of the day. If the party is to deserve success, it must show that it is alive to present and future issues:

Resolved, That an indispensable requisite of constitutional government is the right of every human being unamenable to the laws to a free expression of opinion, by pen or speech, upon all public questions, and, of the voter, the right to deposit his ballot at a fair and honestly-conducted election; and to secure these rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government.

Resolved, That free schools are the great bulwark of American liberty, and their efficient maintenance the surest guarantee for its perpetuity. It is, therefore, essential that a public school system be established and maintained, by Government aid, if necessary, in order that every child may be educated for useful citizenship.

Resolved, That the faith of the nation must be maintained inviolate by the honest discharge of all its obligations.

A bill is pending in the New Jersey Legislature, which should be copied and adopted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania. The bill provides that, before justices of the peace, hereafter, shall receive their commissions, it will be necessary for them to submit to a rigid and thorough examination as to their moral standing, and fitness for the position, by a judge of the Supreme Court. If such an examination results favorably to the candidate, a certificate of qualification is to be made out, on which the commission will be given.—Pennsylvania Exchange.

If a law like that alluded to above were in force in Maryland many who are now justices of the peace would get left. It would be a wise thing for our Legislature to adopt a similar measure.

Early in the session it was proposed by Congressmen to avoid if possible the usual "rush" at the close, which has always been the inevitable result of procrastination and dilatory action on the part of both Houses. The present Congress, however, seems to be worse off than some of its predecessors, and the "rush" has already begun, twelve days before the close of the session, being necessitated by the immense amount of business which must be disposed of.

LOCAL NEWS.

—To-day is Washington's Birthday.

—The bay car passed through Oakland Thursday morning.

—Another snow storm has visited us, notwithstanding the predictions to the contrary.

—The Garrett Literary Society will meet at the usual place to-night at 7 o'clock.

—Shooting matches have been the order of the day for about two weeks in Oakland.

—A protracted meeting has been going on in the M. E. Church, Oakland this week.

—Joseph B. Davis, Esq., will apply one thousand bushels of lime to his farm this spring.

—An aged colored woman commonly known as Aunt Ann Hornly died in Oakland Monday last.

—Presiding Elder Bolton filled the pulpit in the M. E. Church Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning and evening.

—A communication was received from a lady correspondent too late for publication in this issue. It will appear in our next.

—Mr. F. S. Cline, of Frankville, requests us to say that the law will determine whether A. J. Warnick's proceedings against him were legal or not.

—A Baptist revival has been going on near Hutton's Switch, six miles west of Oakland, for about two weeks, resulting in several accessions to the church. Nine converts were immersed Sunday last.

Church Services—Sunday.

Rev. S. W. Haddaway will preach in the M. E. Church on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock.

For the next twenty days I will offer my entire stock of goods at cost, for cash. Call early and secure bargains.

N. B. WAYMAN.

Death of Cooper.

Samuel Cooper, of Cumberland, who was shot by Herbert Bell, on Monday of last week, died at four o'clock Sunday last. Cooper was a prominent politician and delegate to the Lockville Republican Convention that nominated Mr. Erner for Congress. The parties were both barbers, carrying on business in the same neighborhood, and it is supposed the quarrel grew out of their rivalry. Bell asserted that Cooper attacked him, and that the shooting was done in self-defense.

Band of Hope.

The Band of Hope met on Friday evening of last week, at the Methodist Church, Rev. B. Ison presiding. The performers were as follows: Essay, E. Lee, subject "Character;" declamation, Ellsworth Townsend, subject, "Boil it down;" essay, Allen Ison, subject, "Do your best;" selection, Miss Maggie Peddicord, subject, "His first, best friend;" selection, Miss Kate Spedden, subject, "Only a drunkard." A very interesting exercise was the recitation of the Ten Commandments and the Lord's prayer, in the deaf and dumb language, by Miss Martha Mason. The audience was large and attentive. Prof. Richardson's choir furnished the music for the occasion.

The Literary.

The Literary Society met at the usual place on Saturday night last, and was attended by a large number of members and others. A great interest was manifested in the proceedings of Saturday night, as there was to be a debate and all were anxious to hear it. The regular exercises were as follows: The paper was read by the editors, and declarations delivered by Zenous Tower and Thos. A. Bostey. Upon the conclusion of these, the debate, long desired, was begun. The question was, "Resolved, That politics would be purified and elevated by woman suffrage." Mess. T. N. Cunningham and H. Wheeler Combs represented the affirmative and F. P. Arnold and J. W. Devenon the negative side. The judges were T. J. Peddicord, J. T. Mitchell and the President. After long and exhaustive arguments by all parties, the judges decided for the negative. While it is rather hard for the ladies, yet we are sure that all will be pleased that the subject can now be regarded as settled. A society of this kind is a good thing. We learn that there is to be another debate shortly. All members are requested to be present Saturday night, as it is election night.

Charged with Embezzlement.

Thursday William McGowin, agent of the Lochiel lumber company, was arrested at Bloomington on the charge of embezzling over $30,000 from O. H. P. Williams & Co., of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, about four years ago. McGowin was employed by the firm at the time. Subsequently he entered in the employ of the Lochiel company as a clerk, being recommended by Williams, who was then the company's agent. About a year and a half ago there was some difficulty on account of charges made by Williams against McGowin, which were investigated by the company and found to be groundless. Soon afterward Williams was discharged and McGowin appointed in his place. The latter, who passed through this city in charge of a detective Friday evening, says the charge is the outgrowth of spite on William's part. The Lochiel company believe McGowin to be innocent and will go his bail. The arrested man is well known here, where he has made many friends by his business like manner and gentlemanly bearing. The Pittsburgh Chronicle of Saturday gives additional particulars concerning the affair. It says McGowin was cashier and agent for Williams & Co., and that when he left the employ of the firm he took the books with him, as he alleged, to settle them up. The arrest was made on a requisition obtained some months since. The account would indicate some difficulty in securing McGowin, but it is well known that he has frequently been in Pittsburgh recently.—Cumberland News, 17th.

Mr. McGowin was admitted to bail in Pittsburgh Saturday, in the sum of $25,000, J. A. Livingston being his security.

Oakland Rod and Gun Club.

A Club with the above title was organized in Oakland Wednesday evening last, with G. W. Delawader, President; Dr. E. H. Bartlett, Vice President; H. W. Combs, Esq., Secretary, and N. B. Wayman, Esq., Treasurer, and a Board of Directors, consisting of Messrs. E. H. Ward, well, Daniel Willink and R. S. Jamison. The objects of this organization are for the improvement of its members in wing shooting, and for the propagation and protection of game and fish in Garrett county.

Commissioners' Proceedings.

We publish this week the following additional proceedings of the County Commissioners.

Aaron Wilhelm was appointed road supervisor in district No. 9, vice John Wilhelm declined.

Christian Beitzel was appointed road supervisor in district No. 6, vice Lewis Beitzel.

Messrs. G. S. Hamill and H. W. Combs appeared before the Board and made statement to the effect that a feeling of fear pervaded the minds of the people in regard to the safety of the court house, and asked that a committee be appointed to examine said building. The Board appointed J. B. Walton, of Cumberland, to meet them on Monday, March 31, to make said examination.

The following road supervisor's accounts were approved: Josiah Beighly, A. C. Dinkworth, Hugh Cooper, Nelson Ervin, Chas. Warnick, Stephen Browning, Chas. H. Durs, Jonas Wass, Garrett Dixon, Joseph Warnick, Michael Durs.

Examiners' report of road through Wilson Procter's farm confirmed, and road adopted.

FRANKVILLE, Md., Feb. 13th, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Allow me to make a few suggestions in letter form through your paper, to the Republicans of No. 4 district, (as your paper is pretty generally taken in the district,) which I think will be of interest to the party.

It seems that we have had several little family quarrels in the party in this district, and on several occasions have sent two delegations to the county conventions at Oakland. Now this should not be so. It is undoubtedly very annoying to the members of the convention; besides it shows that there is something wrong somewhere. Now, to remedy this evil, I make the suggestion that at the next primary meeting in this district the party turn out to a man, and have a voice in that primary, and elect our delegates by a fair vote, and then submit to the will of the majority. Don't be so busy on that day that you can't lose time to go to the primary meeting. There is where the wheel begins to roll. There may be aspirants for office, as there generally are, who are totally unfit for the positions to which they aspire. By the party not turning out they may get the nomination and secure the defeat of the party.

Let us all turn out at the next primary.

More anon.

F. S. CLINE.

ACCIDENT, Md., Feb. 12, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—It is so sad that we are treated to a genuine sensation that a little occurrence out of the usual order of things, such as was witnessed on our streets lately, deserves more than passing mention. We have had the simon-pure article this time, and one that has not only furnished food for a nine day's wonder and talk, but had the happy effect of sending the blood tingling anew through our veins and giving us such exquisite sensations as seldom falls to the lot of village denizens. We have had neither circus nor Indian show; not even rising to the dignity of a dog fight. Summer had passed and winter was almost gone. A settled feeling of despair rested on our countenances. Rip Van Winkle was reflected in our demeanor, and all we had to cheer us was the "pleasures of hope." But we are now thoroughly aroused and wide awake. A transient sojourner at the Hotel Ries, popular as ever with the public, has come to the rescue. We mean the sojourner who registered as Logan Easter, Albany, N.Y. The name is very euphonistic, but open to the slight objection of being inaccurate. That this estimable and kind young gentleman hailed, in fact, from the ancient, dignified and classic Bruchtown, and that his name was not Logan Easter, and that in point of fact doubtless never saw Albany, New York, is a matter which, out of consideration to the young gentlemen's feelings, we will suppress and ask your readers to consider it as a confidential communication.

Taking a fancy to a spirited young horse belonging to one of our citizens he succeeded so far in his enterprise as to make a trade. (This was done no doubt with a view to further our mutual edification.) Taking his seat in as fine a sleigh as ever came to town, fortified with what in vulgar parlance is here called "Miller's rye" and a good long whip, the show began. In this connection we would ask your readers' pardon for a moment's digression. It is a well known fact which has come down from past generations, more as a matter of tradition than actual history, that to a much oats is not good for a horse. It has been left to us to assure your readers, and we assert it with confidence that an intelligent public will bear us out in the fact, that two much rye is not good for a man. When, however, you combine the two, say too much oats in the horse and too much rye in the man, then you have a combination pregnant with astounding results. I would insult your readers were I to say that horse ran away. One smart flick with that whip and the next moment horse, sleigh and man disappeared from public view like the baseless fabric of a dream. Those of our citizens who had presence of mind enough to hurry to attic windows remember seeing something like a horse and sleigh "going it alone" through the suburbs. The outcome was about one-half mile from town in a snow drift. However this part lacking some important accessories, with some little trouble in making repairs, a new start was made under more favorable auspices. That nothing should be lacking which might detract from the merits of the second heat, a large and appreciative audience had gathered and several of our citizens of well developed muscle assisted in the send-off. Scouring the assistance of all such aids and leaving driver and starters ignominiously embracing another earth, the horse and sleigh started on one of the most remarkable races against time on record. A battalion of soldiers would not have stopped his headlong course. Such running was never before seen or heard of. It was a wonderful feat, and the young gentleman from Albany, New York, no doubt realized that his town had been again vindicated.

Need we say the race ended happily as before? And now Mr. Editor, not to multiply words needlessly, we would say that as a truthful chronicler of contemporaneous history, we feel that we have done our duty in giving this exhibition to the world. The question as to who may be the boss school teacher of Garrett county is no doubt a momentous and national issue. Marderon newspaper correspondents will hereafter sharpen their quills in vain. More to our mind is the fact that we have had the race of the season, and that the humble citizens of Accident have emerged from obscurity. That we have been thought worthy the consideration of a gentleman from Albany, New York, and that we are the first to herald to the world the scientific fact, of which we had a beautiful demonstration, that rye and oats, simple elements as they may be, produce when combined, most wonderful, rare and exciting results.

A CITIZEN.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending February 20:

Mary Ann Crawford to George W. Crawford, Military Lots Nos 2887 and 2888; $150.

Samuel Wood to Jane Wood, Military Lots Nos. 3110 and 3112; $900.

TELEGRAPHIC.

AT WORK AT LAST.

WASHINGTON, February 17.—The House showed a commendable desire to accomplish something, and to-day passed two Appropriation bills, although as to the propriety of one of them—the River and Harbor bill—there are some doubts. Western men, particularly those from Illinois, complain that their section has been grossly misrepresented on the commerce Committee, which has control of the River and Harbor bill, and that the delegation will be compelled in the next House to unite in demanding of the Speaker representation on that committee for an Illinois member. As conspicuous instances of gross partisanship, the Illinois men point to the fact that there is only an appropriation of forty thousand dollars for the Illinois river and seven hundred thousand dollars for the Chicago harbor, while the Ohio river has four hundred thousand dollars, and small creeks in Wisconsin and Minnesota have large sums. The attempt was made by persons dissatisfied with the bill to defeat it, but it was passed by a hundred majority, much more than the necessary two-thirds. It is expected that in the Senate some two millions of dollars will be added to it, and that the House, to save its own bill, will accept the Senate amendments. This seven or eight millions of dollars will go for rivers and harbors.

There was another bill passed in the House this afternoon, the purpose of which was to make appropriations for the arrears of the Pension bill passed recently, and to define its meaning. The truth appears to be that the amendment which came from the Pension Committee greatly increased the scope of the bill, and serves to open the way to the payment of additional millions, notwithstanding the monstrous sum appropriated in the original bill. The bill altogether appropriates nearly twenty-seven millions of dollars, of which twenty-five millions is for claims for pensions allowed prior to January 20th, 1879, and one million eight hundred thousand dollars for fiscal year ended June 30, 1879, which is an addition to the amount hitherto appropriated for that purpose. There is also an appropriation of the necessary sum for temporary clerks, office rent, &c., required to do the additional work in consequence of the arrears of the pension bill. The vote upon this pension appropriation bill was 178 yeas to 65 nays. Among the yeas there were, of course, a few Democrats, but there was not a Republican vote in the negative.

THE WAR IN ZULULAND.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—The Standard publishes the following despatch, dated Maritzburg, January 25: "Shortly after the beginning of hostilities Lord Chelmsford and Colonel Pearson successfully engaged the enemy. Near the place where Lord Chelmsford had been fighting he left six companies of the Twenty-fourth regiment, under Pultine, whom Dundford was to join with the natives. Fifteen thousand Zulus attacked the united forces on the 22d instant. The fire from the British caused immense havoc among them, but they rushed forward with indomitable pluck, and when they had come to close quarters the great numerical superiority of the Zulus secured them a complete victory. The six companies of the Twenty-fourth were totally destroyed, and Dundford's natives were utterly routed. The victorious Zulus attacked a small force in the vicinity of Burke's Drift the same day, but were repelled. In the attack made on Burke's Drift on the evening of the 23d, after the destruction of the camp, one hundred men succeeded in keeping off over four thousand Zulus. They fought from five o'clock in the evening until daylight, when the main column arrived. The British lost thirteen men, five of whom were massacred in hospital." Later advices received at Capetown reported that subsequently to the disaster to Col. Glyn's camp, the forces under Durnell and Lonsdale had a victorious engagement with the enemy at Burke's Drift. Col. Pearson's column is safely established at Ekany. There were no hostile Zulus in Natal. The Standard says the Fifty-seventh regiment, now at Cerfontein, has been ordered to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope as soon as transportation can be obtained. It is hoped the regiment will reach there in less than a fortnight.

THE ANTI-CHINESE BILL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The bill to restrict Chinese immigration, which passed the Senate to-day, provides that no master of any vessel owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, or by a citizen of any foreign country, shall take on board such vessel at any port or place within the Chinese Empire, or at any other foreign port or place whatever, any number exceeding 15 Chinese passengers, whether male or female, with the intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leave such port or place and bring such passengers to any number exceeding 15 on one voyage within the jurisdiction of the United States. The bill further provides that if any person in charge of a vessel takes on board more than 15 Chinamen he shall, for each passenger taken on board and brought within the jurisdiction of the United States exceeding the number of 15, be fined $100, and may also be imprisoned for not exceeding six months. The act is to take effect from and after July 1, 1879.

FEDERAL ELECTION PROSECUTIONS.

BALTIMORE, February 15.—In the United States circuit court to-day Henry Bowers, judge of election in the Seventeenth ward at the late Congressional election, indicted for refusing permission to the United States supervisor to inspect the ballot-box before the voting began, was found guilty. Judge Bond fined him $5 and costs, and twelve months imprisonment. Lewis Coleman, a judge at the same election in the Third ward, for hindering and obstructing the supervisor, was fined $50 and costs, and twelve months imprisonment. John Bollman and Dennis Cassidy, judges in the Seventeenth ward convicted on the 23d ultimo, were fined $5 and costs each, and eight months imprisonment. Justus G. Gude and Walter Tucker, judges in the Fourteenth ward, convicted on the 27th ultimo, were fined $5 and costs, and twelve months imprisonment. John Poulton, convicted on the 28th ultimo of assault on a negro voter and on a United States deputy marshal was fined $5 and costs, and twelve months imprisonment.

Mr. Moody's Wonderful Labors.

It has been over three months since Mr. Dwight L. Moody reached Baltimore, and at once commenced his labors at Mt. Vernon M. E. Church. Leaving there, after preaching almost daily for three weeks, he commenced his labors at Eutaw Place Baptist Church in the afternoon, and with Grace M. E. Church at night. These two pulpits he supplied without intermission, save on Saturdays, for three or four weeks, and then transferred his efforts to Dr. Leyburn's church, Fayette street, in the afternoon of each day, and to the High Street Baptist Church at 7 P. M., and the Monument Street M. E. Church one hour later. For three weeks these meetings were continued and then transferred to the Second Presbyterian Church, Lloyd and East Baltimore street, at 7 P. M., and to the Broadway M. E. Church at 8 P. M., the same evening. All the present week he has been giving an additional sermon from the pulpit of the Broadway Presbyterian Church at 9 P. M. On Mondays and Saturdays he rests from his pulpit labors, but frequently attends a preachers' meeting, or conducts a prayer meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association Rooms on those days.

He has not failed to preach to the unfortunate convicts at the Penitentiary every Sunday morning since he has been in Baltimore, and it will be recollected that he visited the Woman's Temperance Convention during its sittings, and made them an address.

Is there another man in the universe who could have successfully endured such a strain upon the mental and physical powers? Is it not a wonder of wonders that he has not long since succumbed? Such an avalanche of work—upon mind and body—is enough to have crushed any mortal being. And yet during all these labors, Mr. Moody has found time to devote six hours out of every twenty-four to close, undivided study. In fact, he says, his main object in coming to Baltimore, was that he might devote six hours of each day to the preparation of a new series of sermons for other places he may visit after he leaves this city.

Another remarkable feature in connection with this remarkable man must not be overlooked. In all this vast amount of labor he has performed, he has ever been able to invest his sermons with such interest that the people now flock to listen to his expositions of Scripture in the same great crowds that characterized all his audiences in the beginning of his labors. We say nothing of the lack of oratorical brilliancy and fascinating rhetorical skill, which have so distinguished pulpit speakers, who have preceded him. Surely Mr. Moody is sustained by Divine power and He who rules the universe and all that it contains, is continually directing his steps and guiding his movements.—Baltimorean.

A Mississippiian, who thought he understood the meshes of red tape, sent $2 to the proper authorities at Washington as an inducement to give him control of two postal routes in his section. His offer was indignantly refused. Times are hard, but postal routes do not yet retail at a dollar apiece.

Senator Davis of West Virginia.

Some reporter has taken the trouble to interview the Senior Senator from West Virginia, on the subject of the Democratic nominee for the Presidency. This gentleman favors Thurman, thinks very little of Tilden, and says that Bayard is too near the owner of No. 15, Gramercy Park to be successful. The New York Times thus comments upon this reported account of the Senator's views:

"That delightful and venerable busybody, Senator Davis, of West Virginia, has been giving to a reporter his view concerning possible Democratic candidates for the Presidency. Senator Davis is tolerably well known as the last man in Congress who insists that the Republicans in some mysterious manner stole 'untold millions' from the Treasury vaults during General Grant's administration. He shares with Glover the credit of being a marplot in his own party. For, though he persists in rummaging in the cabinets of the Treasury in search of the missing millions untold, he has the luck of Glover in finding nothing but Democratic frauds. The Senator seems to be what they call in West Virginia a free-spoken man, and his good-natured gabble with the reporter shows that he is 'only too happy' to give the world his opinion of the Democratic candidates. As the reporter superfluously remarks, Senator Davis 'has never taken any very prominent part in national politics.' He is chiefly known as the man with an idea, and what that idea is we have already hinted."

The call for $20,000,000 more of 5-20s issued by the Treasury Department on Monday makes $230,000,000 called in since January 1. This leaves outstanding only $80,000,000 of the 5-20s of 1867 and some $23,000,000 of the issue of 1868. At the rate in which the funding has been going on all the 6 per cents will be called in in about four weeks, except the bonds of 1881, which are not yet subject to call. It is probable that the Government will soon be calling in the 5 per cents. This is indicated by the London market, where the 4 per cent. bonds are quoted at one cent higher than the 5 per cents. The reason of this is that the holders of the 5s foresee the call that will bring their bonds down to par.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

PUBLIC SALE.

I will offer for sale or rent the following well known farms: The

OLD CASTLE FARM, containing 24 acres. The

MCHENRY FARM, containing 150 acres of cleared land, with good buildings, suitable for summer boarders; it has fine water, also the

DEEP CREEK FARM, containing 75 acres cleared land in cultivation. These farms will be sold on Wednesday, March 26th,

if not rented previous to that time, sales to take place at the Mt. Vernon Farm.

I will also, at the same time and place, sell Horses, Cows, Sheep, Hogs, Young Cattle, Grain, Hay, Farming Implements and Household and Kitchen Furniture.

For description of property and terms of sale, see handbills.

224 WILLIAM CASTEEL.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties

have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 1.

One-half acre of ground in the town of Oakland, improved by a

Two-story new frame dwelling house.

Good location. Title indisputable. This property will be sold very low.

NO. 2.

One-half acre of ground in the centre of Oakland, improved by a

Large Frame Dwelling House

and out buildings. A well of excellent water in the yard. This is one of the handsomest properties in the town. Can easily be divided into three good building lots. Title good.

NO. 3.

One of the best hills farms in Garrett county, 24 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 30 ACRES, 9 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar, GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 100 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

JOHN RICHARDSON,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS,

GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY.

Also an Improved Hand Seed Sower, full y.

Send the Depot, Oakland, Md.

VARIETIES.

—There are ninety-one horses who have trotted a mile in 2:22 or less.

—A good deed—One conveying you $50,000 worth of real estate.—Norristown Herald.

—The deepest mine in America is at present staying in California. It makes a hole 2,000 feet deep.

—The fellow who rang the church bell for a false alarm of fire told a lie.—Hackensack Republican.

—Can anyone tell why a man's chin feels as if it was two feet from his face in a cold day?—Free Press.

—Swapping diphtheria is what they call it now when spoony lovers hang over the gate on moonlight nights.

—Thirteen persons were arrested in Connecticut last year for using abusive language. Not one of them was an editor.

—The drinkers of the German Empire during 1878 drank $41,068,768 gallons of beer, or about twenty gallons for each person.

—According to Joseph Cook, Boston has eight miles of grog shops. No wonder her streets are so crooked.—Norristown Herald.

—A gentleman writing from the West says that he is so altered since he left home that his "oldest creditor would not know him."

—She sang soprano sweetly— Her voice was like a dove— But on Sunday she ate onions, And thus busted up the dove.

—A Chicago paper says that "a young lady should never stretch her feet out in company." This bad habit must have caused a good deal of trouble in Chicago.—Boston Post.

—Two weeks ago opera cost the people of Chicago, including tickets, carriages and ceteras, at least $100,000. Hard times, come again no more!—Chicago Times.

—The following is posted in front of a grocery store near Harvard Square: "Wooden pallets, six cents each. Notice—We did not steal these pallets, but we think the man who bought them of did."—Boston Advertiser.

—Last fall many of the Southern States cured and put by home-made bacon enough to last them until the next hog killing season. Bacon is the favorite meat for whites and blacks throughout the South; hitherto they had drawn it chiefly from Ohio.

—We would say to property owners that the sign "Take Notice" never has much effect, as people who will take almost anything else will piously let this article alone.—Oil City Derrick.

—It is pretty hard to find a believer in ghosts, and it is also pretty hard to find a man who won't wobble a little when he suddenly runs across a tablecloth flapping on the clothes-line in the dark back yard.—Free Press.

—"Do prohibition prohibit?" asks an exchange. We don't know. Does application apply? Or, if you want an easier one to begin on, does emigration banish?—Irish Eye.

—No man in America is so constantly in the public mind as the fellow who advertises ague cures and temperance bitters on the fences of the Republic.—Hack-Eye.

—Now, if you have got any weeding you want done, I'm your man," earnestly exclaimed the tramp who was at the back-door of a Danbury house, Thursday, looking for work.—Danbury News.

—Will science please stand up and tell us why a girl who freezes to death every time she sweeps off the front steps, can ride fifteen miles in a sleigh with nothing around her but some other girl's brother's arm, without even getting a blue nose?—Pittston Press.

—It has been suggested that the Young Ladies Cooking Club of this city adopt the name of "Belles of the Kitchen." And, by the way, it is recalled of one of them that she recently asked: "Where is the kitchen, mother, anyway?"—Boston Tr. Democrat.

—Every boy in the United States is informed, at an early age, that he is eligible for President of this great Republic. It would be a great deal better if this idea was more deeply implanted that it becomes fixed, for then the rush of young men into politics would be less, and we should have fewer second-hand holding office.—New York Telegram.

—Nordenskjöld may have discovered a northeast passage, but the young men of America feel no particular interest in the matter. What they want is some kind of a passage by which they can reach their rooms at four o'clock in the morning without awakening the old folks.—Courier-Journal.

—"I propose to have some decent singing at my funeral," said Mr. Sam Cook, of Alabaster, who was hanged on last Friday, and he led the singing himself.—Buffalo Express. The final strain, however, was too much for him.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

—Time may obliterate the hovels and make them mansions; may make Christians sinners, and poor men millionaires; but it can never take away the man by the grocery store who has just been reminded of an adventure he had during the war, and which he would like to relate to the crowd.—Fulton Times.

—The directors of the Bank of Glasgow who stole a million dollars from that institution have been committed to jail for periods of eight to eighteen months. If they had stolen a horse instead they would have been sent up for eight to eighteen years. Moral: Don't steal a horse—but rob a bank and then buy a coach and six and a brown stone mansion.—Graphic.

—After the unique and cautious verdict rendered recently by a coroner's jury at Tunbridge Wells, all disbelievers in the jury system should be converted. The verdict referred to was: "The child was suffocated, but there is no evidence to show that the suffocation was before or after death."

—A small man never sighs for greater bulk of stature and breadth of shoulders so much as when he goes into a crowded railway car, and sees a man that will weigh as much as three of him, spread out over four seats, pretending to be asleep.—Hack-Eye.

—They had a Vermont parson up before his congregation not long ago, for changing with "preaching long, dry and unedifying sermons." It is not known what was done with him; it is to be hoped, though, that they didn't hang him, for once get a thing of that kind started, and there's no telling where it will stop.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—"There is one thing about a farm," said the granger-looking man from Guthrie Center, "that isn't improved by consolidation." "And what is that?" asked the young man from Adair. "Post holes, young man," said the old party, graciously. "Post holes; they ain't good for nothing of y'r run 'em together or bunch 'em."—Hack-Eye.

—A man off finds his cat is doing. So listen to my tale of woe. And put him in a downright trough. One day the town was like a trough. When Snythekins tried a fancy bough. The streets were filled with melted enough. His latest theme was driving through. The upper part of the avonright.

He raised his hand; but an awkward cough came as he tried his best to cough. He kept it in; but a strong hicough. Instead, he jerked his hand and fingers cough. He slipped and fell in a sudden trough. His legs flew out and his hat flew cough. 'Twas fun for the lady; for him 'twas tough. And worse than his ladylove's rebough. For he slid through the slush like a two-horse team.

—He rose in body and mind even nough. So, swells, take heed. Of your skill although you are aware, what may happen you never know.

—N. Y. Mail.

—The Paupers' Bonfire.

In the midst of the fire, and when the flames were fast becoming more and more enlarged, while the smoke poured from every part of the roof and the fire descended again after going upward, several thrilling incidents transpired.

Two men appeared in an upper front window in the south wing on the Seventh street side. Both were imbeciles. One of the twins, Fred Meyer, a German resident of Louisville, and admitted to the almshouse three months ago, understood the beckoning of those below him, and, realizing that he must escape, made a rope of blankets and bedding. One end he secured to something within the apartment in which he stood, and the other he threw out side. Men below placed feather beds in readiness to catch him when falling. Suddenly smoke and flames enveloped Meyer, whose hesitancy had kept him at the window-sill. He prepared to descend and grasped the rope. At the same moment the second imbecile, Henry Kohler, was driven closer to the window. The expression of his face will never be forgotten. He seemed not to understand the terrible situation, but, being driven to the window by the heat, was transfixed with astonishment, the flames behind and the space before to his mind appearing equally dangerous. What to do he seemed not to know. Meanwhile Meyer prepared to descend, and he had given up hope.

As the one fell headlong to the earth below, the other, his arms held up high, his head thrown back, his eyes upward, leaped backward into the red-hot fire! Meyer broke his neck; Kohler was burned to death.

James Kidley was admitted to the institution from the Anchorage asylum six weeks ago. He was suffering from epilepsy, and his mind was almost gone. Cut off from escape by the terrible situation, he had foolishly decided on seeking out to late, the unfortunate fellow leaped from the third-story window. His coat was on fire and so was his hair. The wind and the fall fanned the flames, and as he struck the beds below, the flames licked him, popping and hissing with renewed force. He was removed to a stable and will die.

Christina Johnston, a German, was severely burned last evening. She courted danger by running up and down under a cornice of the structure. Suddenly a burning cornice fell, and striking her, inflicted serious injuries. It is feared by her husband that Mrs. Johnston's eyesight will be lost.

Another death occurred by jumping. Thomas Dixon being the victim. He leaped from the rear of the building and was almost instantly killed by fracture of the skull. His corpse was immediately taken up by the coroner's jury.

The eyes remained open, ghastly in death, shriveled limbs, a dark gash on the forehead, clotting blood, lips apart and toothless gums, forming a picture frightful to look upon.

A singular coincidence in connection with the fire was a remark made by Catherine Matthews, an inmate of the almshouse, about six weeks ago. She frequently visited the Fifth street Eye and Ear Infirmary for treatment, and one day remarked to a physician at the infirmary that she was anxious to leave the almshouse.

"Are you dissatisfied with the place?" asked the physician.

"Not at all; but I feel a premonition that the building will soon be destroyed by fire."

Mrs. Matthews is an old woman, between seventy and eighty years old, and the physician was much impressed with the conversation, but curiosity prompted him to ask the question:

"Why do you suppose the building will be burned?"

"Why, sir," replied she, "I saw the signs of fire in the heavens."

The origin of the fire was for a while involved in much obscurity, but there can be little doubt that it is as follows: One of the employees of the almshouse, named Dravitsky, was sitting near the elevator yesterday morning quietly smoking his pipe. When he had finished, he carelessly knocked the ignited ashes out of his pipe down through the passage of the elevator.

So happened that the lower part of the elevator passage in the building was utilized as closets, which contained dry clothing, coal-oil, etc., and perhaps dry wood. The sparks from the pipe falling into the bins set it on fire and when once the flames began to gain force the elevator way served as a huge flue to fan them into resistless fury. This is the only way to account for the fire, and there is every reason to believe that it is the solution of the mystery.

The almshouse contained 330 paupers when the fire broke out. The males were in the south and the females in the north wing of the building. They poured out in all directions, hobbling, running and crawling. Many fled to the fields and many to town.

Some in rage, some in rage; But none in velvet gowns.

The aged, the infirm and those who are crippled were placed on beds and left in the almshouse yard. Such bed-clothing as could be gathered up was thrown over them, but their thin blood and spare limbs caused the unfortunate to suffer very much from a cold, penetrating wind which prevailed. The fire over and the crowds away, the paupers returned. The news that Mayor Baxter had provided another home for them seemed communicated by telephones or magic, so quickly did they appear, arising from all parts of the adjacent country.

The coming of the Mayor's witness another scene of interest. Those who were able climbed into the vehicles, and others were assisted. Old Uncle Joe, with his black face and white, kinky hair, old Aunt Jemima, her eyes full of tears and expressions of bewilderment and wonder; a fast-fading Frenchman; an Irish laborer with back paralyzed; a German, with a blue shirt, supporting his wife, and American or two could be seen huddled up in one wagon. All seemed as brothers, and no one appeared the least mindful of anything disagreeable about his or her next-door neighbor.

Scores swarmed around the burning walls, looking like they not only had lost their best friend, but all else in the world beside, as indeed they had.

"Where will they take us?" sharply asked a very old woman, whose bright brown eyes twinkled with the lustre of sauntered by.

"To Forest Hill," said the doctor. "Where is that?"

"Beyond Phoenix."

"I'll not go. I'll not go. I'll not be put in a beer garden," she shrieked. "It is not a beer garden, ma'am."

"It is a good place," he doesn't mean Cave Hill Cemetery, but Forest Hill, a lovely almshouse."

"Ah, ah," she cried; "good, I will go there."

An object of great interest in the field was a colored man 108 years old. He shivered and shook, but managed without to talk a little.

"The old man's home done gone sure 'nuff," he said. "Pears like I'm going too. I've lived here all my days, and I want to die here too."

His accents were piping, and his limbs like reeds. The negro's name is Harry Tench, and his former master, from whom the almshouse land was purchased, as well as others, testify to his age.

Under the direction of Dr. Lloyd, the inmates of the Western District, all the paupers who remained were taken to Forest Hill, where they will be taken care of. The injured will be cared for, and the dead given decent burial.

Farther down the road a short time back the discovery of a small time, a Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Fast Hound.

J. A. Ford, of Battle Creek, Mich., owns a heavy-built mastiff hound. Business one day called him to Ceresco, a small village eight miles distant, and the dog accompanied him. On his return he got on board the train and did not discover the absence of his dog until the train began moving, when he stepped to the back platform of the car and there saw that the hound had just started. The dog overtook the train, but as the speed of the train was constantly quickening, his endeavors to jump on board were fruitless. The train began to whiz faster, and the dog quickened his pace, and until within a mile or two of this city kept up with cars, which were going at the rate of eighteen miles an hour. He arrived a few minutes after the cars, his feet sore and bleeding from contact with the splinters on the ties, having made the distance of eight miles in half an hour.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

He Stayed Mesmerized.

RECENTLY a York street family entertained a number of friends, and among the guests was a Nicholas street young man with mischief in his eye, and who had a penchant for practical joking. There was a merchant, who boasted during the evening of being able to put the strongest mind in the room under the influence of mesmerism. It occurred to the Nicholas street young man at that time, and the other quickened his pace, and until within a mile or two of this city kept up with cars, which were going at the rate of eighteen miles an hour. He arrived a few minutes after the cars, his feet sore and bleeding from contact with the splinters on the ties, having made the distance of eight miles in half an hour.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

That theory didn't hold with the fireman, and the oldest daughter was called upon.

"I expect it was spontaneous combustion," she began. "You see, in my room up stairs, where the fire broke out, there was a hole in the chimney. I didn't like the smoke coming in my room, so I stuffed the hole full of straw. It may be that the straw and the mortar and the bricks caused spontaneous combustion."

The fireman were about to accept her theory when the small boy of the family came up and said:

"I know all about it. Ye see, Bill Smith was on the shed-a-heaven snow balls at dogs. Tom, the fellow with an arm, was in the barn playin' with my goat. That Turner girl she was on the fence out there callin' 'em names, and her mother had the clothes line and was tryin' to lasso a stick of wood off a wagon in the alley. I went down cellar to see if my mud-turtle had got away, and I was just tryin' to set the cat on him when I heard father fall down stairs and mother give a yell, and that's how the house got afire, and now I won't have to go to school for six weeks."—Free Press.

Sylvester Scott, the Bear Hunter.

A Sonoma County (California) exchange says: Thomas Porter tells us that Sylvester Scott visited his buckeye home a few days ago last Friday, and that up to that time on a single hunt he had killed thirteen bears and one panther. Mr. Scott is the most successful bear hunter in California, and his fame has gone far beyond the limits of his adoption. A hunt with Scott on the trail of bruin is an event of interest in the life of the most experienced sportsman. Mr. Scott is a farmer and stock-raiser, and quite a character in his way. He is an old settler in Sonoma, having raised a family on a ranch in the mountains. Although Night-Blindness.

What is spoken of as "a remarkable case of defective vision" has been discovered in North Carolina. The story is that three children of a seafaring man by the name of James Howard, who lives on Ocracoke Island, not far from Tarboro, became totally blind as soon as the sun goes down, and only recover their sight when the sun rises again.

During the day they are said to possess excellent sight, and nothing in the appearance of their eyes indicates anything like disease. The youngest is three years old, the eldest ten, and all have eyes of a light-blue color. By many persons this is considered to be indeed a remarkable case, but since the publication of the story it has been found that "night blindness" by no means uncommon. Among the Russian peasantry it is very often met with, and, strange to say, with them it is a malady of periodical occurrence. Every year toward the close of the long Lenten fast, the Russian peasants are at night stricken with total blindness, though during the day their vision may be perfectly unimpaired, and this apparently strange phenomenon continues until some time after Easter-Day.

The explanation given is that "night blindness" results from the want of fatty secretion, the peasant during the fast giving up eating eggs, lard—fat of any kind, and the use of milk. When the fast is over and the holiday feasts have supplied again the needful fatty secretion, the blindness disappears and the vision is once more restored to its normal condition.

A number of cases of "night blindness" have been noticed in this State, the defect in the power of the sight after sundown being greater in some cases than in others. How far the Russian theory would account for the trouble in these instances is of course doubtful, but it would be curious and interesting to experiment with their diet for a month or two. There is something decidedly corroborative of the theory, however, in the fact that the three North Carolina children live on a small island, and have doubtless all their life been fed almost altogether upon fish. The Russian theory might suggest a mode of treatment to the oculists. How would it do to liberally administer Russian herring-liver oil in the shape of train-oil cock-tails and paraffine candies?

But one point worthy of serious consideration is the question as to the prevalence of this apparently newly-discovered disease or defect among sailors and officers of vessels. How many of the recent terrible disasters may be attributed to the fact that the look-out was more or less unable to see clearly after night-fall? In the course of the investigation it is said that a light brought close to the eyes is only dimly seen, and conveys no ideas of size or shape to them, and in this connection it is to be noted that in almost every investigation into the cause of the disasters at sea the evidence of the survivors as to the clearness with which the lights were seen before the collision materially differs. By one the lights were clearly discernible, by another but dimly, and by another not at all. This surely calls for some inquiry. If it should be clearly established that "night blindness" is as much a visual defect as is color-blindness, the latter being as fully recognized as the other, every seaman when examined should have his eyesight tested, and "night blindness" should be decided as a bar to entrance into the service as color-blindness is now.—Baltimore American.

No One to Blame.

The other day when a house on Fifth street took fire and was saved by the firemen in a damaged condition they set about trying to discover the cause of the accident, and in so doing questioned various inmates of the structure. The head of the house had his theory all ready.

"It is my opinion," he began, "that some enemy of mine climbed to the roof and emptied coals on the shingles." The idea was laughed at and the wife said:

"Well, there was a lamp up stairs, but it was not lighted. Now, if the rats got hold of matches and tried to light that lamp, they would have lit the house. I lighted a match on the bed as to blow it out. I don't say they set the house afire on purpose, but you know how careless rats are."

That theory didn't hold with the fireman, and the oldest daughter was called upon.

"I expect it was spontaneous combustion," she began. "You see, in my room up stairs, where the fire broke out, there was a hole in the chimney. I didn't like the smoke coming in my room, so I stuffed the hole full of straw. It may be that the straw and the mortar and the bricks caused spontaneous combustion."

The fireman were about to accept her theory when the small boy of the family came up and said:

"I know all about it. Ye see, Bill Smith was on the shed-a-heaven snow balls at dogs. Tom, the fellow with an arm, was in the barn playin' with my goat. That Turner girl she was on the fence out there callin' 'em names, and her mother had the clothes line and was tryin' to lasso a stick of wood off a wagon in the alley. I went down cellar to see if my mud-turtle had got away, and I was just tryin' to set the cat on him when I heard father fall down stairs and mother give a yell, and that's how the house got afire, and now I won't have to go to school for six weeks."—Free Press.

Sylvester Scott, the Bear Hunter.

A Sonoma County (California) exchange says: Thomas Porter tells us that Sylvester Scott visited his buckeye home a few days ago last Friday, and that up to that time on a single hunt he had killed thirteen bears and one panther. Mr. Scott is the most successful bear hunter in California, and his fame has gone far beyond the limits of his adoption. A hunt with Scott on the trail of bruin is an event of interest in the life of the most experienced sportsman. Mr. Scott is a farmer and stock-raiser, and quite a character in his way. He is an old settler in Sonoma, having raised a family on a ranch in the mountains. Although about forty years of age, he has done his share in reclaiming and populating the wilderness. He and two of his neighbors have built a school-house for their district and furnished its census roll, which comprises thirty-nine children. Scott's contribution is fourteen. He and his boys, by their own labors, have fenced his ranch, comprising in one tract 4,000 acres. During the winter months Scott always indulges his passion for bear hunting. He has a pack of twenty-five trained hounds, and when he starts on the trail he scouts the mountains for miles about his stock, until not a trace of the presence of a live bear can be found. A campaign frequently lasts for a month, seldom less than ten days or a fortnight, and rarely results in the killing of less than a dozen bears. Scott is a most remarkable pedestrian. Put O'Leary or Weston beside him on a trail a bear in the hills and he will walk their legs off, and break every bone in their bodies in a day. He always goes on foot, keeps up with the hounds, and is on hand to close with bruin as soon as the dogs bay him. How he gets over the ground so fast is a mystery, and how he slides down rocky and precipitous descents, as he does every day when on the trail, without ever being injured, is a wonder to his companions.

A couple of English tourists accompanied him on his last hunt. On their return they were loud in their admiration and wonder, one of them declaring that in following a sportsman's bent around the world he had never met such another hunter, nor experienced such exciting sport elsewhere.

A Unique Legacy.

Old John R. Reed and his wife last evening celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage and were very happy. Old John is the gas man and captain of the superintendents at the Walnut street theater, where he has been for forty-four years and never was absent from one performance. He has one wish, he says, that the theater to him was for a century. "Well, I love the theater, and when the bad Hamlets comes 'round I'll prompt them on the grave scene. But, seriously, I want my head to stay on this stage, where it has, with my hand done solid for a century."

Old John and his wife have had a happy journey through life, and have raised quite a family of children, nearly all of whom have adopted the stage as a profession. Last night when the Russians in the room and on the stage, the theater, for the old man was on the stage during the performance of the "Exiles," and gave him hearty congratulations. Among those who came was old John's son, who has been given forty-one years' continuous service at the Walnut street theater, and who was attached to Cooke's circus when it was located on the ground now occupied by the Continental hotel.

Old John keeps the gallery door, and has been at his post for twelve years every night the house has been opened. Previous to that he was for nearly thirty years the mastercarpenter of the establishment. In his youth he was a soldier in the English army, and although verging on four score he is still strong and hearty, and, as he said when shaking hands with Reed: "John, we've been together nearly a lifetime, and I can tell you, when the curtain rang up, nor we haven't missed a meal," and the veterans shook hands heartily. In the early days of Reed's captaincy of the "supers" he had in his service many who have since then become distinguished in the profession into which they entered so humbly. First of these stand John E. Owens, W. J. Florence and half a dozen others scarcely less famous.

The old gentleman's speech was a novelty and read thus:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—There is no use my making a speech, for a man who has been married fifty years should have some consideration. I have known when I was a young man that I should have lived to see fifty years of married life I should have had a wife to keep me company, and I have been in this, or "one" has furnished the "gas" of this family, and very liberally at that. I have known when I was a young man that I should have lived to see fifty years of married life I should have had a wife to keep me company, and I have been in this, or "one" has furnished the "gas" of this family, and very liberally at that. I have known when I was a young man that I should have lived to see fifty years of married life I should have had a wife to keep me company, and I have been in this, or "one" has furnished the "gas" of this family, and very liberally at that.

And when he gave the toast he was no less original, for he gave it in rhyme.—Philadelphia Times.

A Secret Worth Knowing by Housekeepers.

A sort of trade-secret among upholsterers, it is said, is this recipe for rid-ding furniture of moths. A set of furniture that seemed to be alive with the larvae, and from which hundreds of these pests had been picked and brushed, was set into a room by itself. Three gallons of benzine were purchased, at thirty cents a gallon in retail. Using a small watering-pot, with a fine rose-sprinkler, the whole upholstery was saturated through and through with the benzine. Result: Every moth, larva and egg was killed, and its entire odor disappeared in three or four days. Not the slightest harm happened to the varnish, or wood, or fabric, or hair-stuffing. That was months ago, and not a sign of moth has since appeared. The carpets were also well sprinkled all round the sides of the room, with equal good effect. For furs, blankets—indeed, all woolen articles containing moths—benzine is most valuable. Put them in a box, sprinkle them with benzine, close the box tightly, and in a day or two the pests will be exterminated, and the benzine will all evaporate on opening. In using benzine great care should be taken that no fire is near by, as the stuff, in fluid or vapor form, is very inflammable.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Clay and Peanut Coffee.

The writer heretofore, while sitting in the office of a large coffee and spice mill a few years ago, heard a clerk ask the manager whether an order for a large quantity of ground coffee could be filled within a certain time. Before replying the manager stepped to a speaking-tube, whistled, and then asked: "Has that cargo of peanuts arrived yet?" Having received an answer apparently satisfactory, he told the clerk that the order could be filled in the time mentioned.

In the course of investigating this subject the Evening Post's representative happened to meet an old acquaintance formerly engaged in a coffee and spice mill. On being asked about some of the tricks of the trade he said:

"Now, look here, you think that there's nothing too bad to be done in one of these mills, but I can tell you of a trick that beats any adulteration they ever did dream out of sight."

Having obtained a promise that no names should be used, he said he had been asked a couple of years ago if he would like to undertake the manufacture of artificial coffee. Being of a speculative turn of mind (and, en passant, none too scrupulous) he went into the business.

"We used to buy a very soft, fine blue clay, grind it thoroughly and dry out the water. It was then moistened to a molding consistency with extract of chicory and dandelion, molded into coffee bean shape and mixed with a certain proportion of pure coffee. When roasted it had all the appearance of genuine coffee, with the additional advantage to us of weighing more. Using 25 per centum of clay beans, which weighed about 25 per centum more than the real coffee, we would get 61 per centum more weight out of a given quantity by measure, and this additional weight was enough to pay for the working of the clay into shape; so that our clay coffee gave us a clean profit of 25 cents on the dollar, beside the profit on the genuine coffee."

"Did you sell much of it?"

"We did a very large business. We could undersell any other house in the market, but we never ran down our prices so as to excite suspicion. By keeping just enough below market rates to secure a sale for all we could handle, we kept up good profits and a good reputation."

"Where did your clay come from?"

"That I can't tell you. I've gone out of the business myself for reasons of my own."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Dying With His Boots On.

A few days ago a drummer from the East was taking a nip in a saloon near the Central Depot, and he put the proprietor up to a new dodge. It was to place on the hot stove what seemed to be an ounce ball and cartridge, but the cartridge or shell was of course empty. Very few loungers would care to remain in the room and wait for the expected explosion, and once out doors they would give room to cash embers. The saloonist procured three or four of the "bombshells," and the trick was a success from the start. When he had roped in three or four friends to aid him they could clear the room of loafers in one minute by the watch, and the fat on their ribs grew in thickness.

Yesterday morning an ominously-looking cloud, who seemed to have been first bitten by contract, and whose old overcoat was too ragged to even tangle the cold, dropped into the place in a quiet way and at once tried to surround the coal-stove. The saloonist asked him if he didn't want a hot drink, and he replied:

"O, I guess not—I'll thaw out by the fire after an hour or two."

Pretty soon a hint was given him that he could buy ten-cent cigars for five cents, and that reminded him that he had a clay pipe and some tobacco in his pocket. The saloonist thereupon determined to scare him out, and while fixing the fire he placed one of the decoys on the stove, and with the exclamation that some fiend had conspired to assassinate him. The stranger rose up, realized the peril, and called out: "How long fore the darned thing will shoot off, and haven't a minute to live if you don't get out doors?" was the wild answer as the saloonist made a dive for a rear room.

"Pete Adams," began the stranger, as he shook off his overcoat, "you haven't got a terminal thing to live for, and you might as well go under now, when coffins are cheap. Brace up, old boy, and die with your boots on—whoop!"

Picking up a stool he knocked the hot water can off the stove, and the fire, and he was whaling away at the beer tables when the saloonist rushed in and screamed out:

"Fly! Fly, or you'll be a dead man!"

"Welcome! King of terrors!" whooped Peter as he tossed a table clear over the bar-keeper's head.

Three or four men came in to help scare him, but before they had succeeded in jamming him down behind the coal-box they had all been bumped and bruised enough to last them for a month.

"I'm the clothes-pin that never flies from nothing nor nobody!" remarked Peter as they finally let him up and sought to get $20 damages.

He hadn't a red cent, and when he had jumped through a back window and entered down the alley his faded and ragged overcoat alone remained to tell that he had been there.—Free Press.

"I tell you what, sir, there's ink in old numbers," he said. "Why, there was old Jeremy Puckett lived to be ninety-nine, and Mrs. Arnold died at a hundred and five, and Spurio Billy McCrackers departed this life aged one hundred and seven. Suppose, now, that he'd a-died when he was just even a hundred and ten, why, sir, I'll bet to grations he wouldn't have lived more'n fifty or sixty years."

The oldest inhabitants in Texas and Louisiana do not recollect a winter in which such an amount of snow has fallen as during the present. There have been several weeks of skating around Dallas, Texas, and sleighs have been run for the amusement of the public at Shreveport. Let a while the telegraph wires were down for a week near Galveston under loads of sleet that coated them.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

SOLILOQUY.

The want of faith in the virtuous power of public principles is the cause of our troubles. The best of men by their ends, the best of action comes, they get the slip, and we by despising, sense taught contrivance to give the noblest object—just this once, but this "once" comes as often as the end. To be achieved seems to demand the aid of the poor earthy element, and thus the high resolve, steeped in compassion, of low-born man, like the earth-splashed snow, is lost of its virgin purity disposed.

It seems man's nature to forestall the end, nor patient wait the course of Providence. Our little fearful hastes contrasts how well with the slow, calm, majestic ways of Heaven. A wrong exists, we long to rectify it out, but looking power by wholly noble means we are reduced to a state of helplessness. To let it be, or in this strange employ, the subtle devil to delirious himself, thus through impetuous jealousy to mend the world by wretched makeshift means.

Not by the martyr-spirit which endures till it can practice what it dares proclaim, food by good only—no confusion broad, nor right the world by devil-power of wrong. We can wait the course of Providence, but our little fearful hastes contrasts how well with the slow, calm, majestic ways of Heaven. A wrong exists, we long to rectify it out, but looking power by wholly noble means we are reduced to a state of helplessness. To let it be, or in this strange employ, the subtle devil to delirious himself, thus through impetuous jealousy to mend the world by wretched makeshift means.

Thus in calm moments of abstraction we, freed from the forwardness of real life, with liberty, or love, or life at stake, or fierce ambition leaping in the brain, hate or revenge, not overcome we seize the nearest blade. Yea, where the love of good, the honest blade, truth prevails, the momentary opportunity may not return.

And, with equal hands, too, we seize the prize; Apples of Sedon ashes in our grasp.

O dark Deluge, half believing man, A god in reason, but a devil in action.

MY AUNT'S WILL.

"We are none of us perfect, thank goodness," said Caroline, my eldest sister, with an aggravating laugh. "I do not claim to be a paragon, by any means, and it would take the little short of a saint to poke down in the country and hobble through life at the beck of a fractious old woman. I shall not go for one!"

"Caroline!" said mother, in a mild tone of rebuke. "Poor little soul! She rarely ever asserted her authority before the elder girls. They were all Rushtons, every inch, and poor little mamma had learned all about the Rushton blood years before I was born. They were a stern, proud, arrogant set, and in her neck eyes, were more like queens and ogres, than her husband's relatives. How Gerald Rushton came to marry a poor country curate's daughter remained a mystery to the family, and with a woman's instinct freshened by the memory of my mother's sad face and tearful eyes, I think she had puzzled over the enigma through many lonely hours, only that the question might have been put to her consciousness a little differently. As, how was it that she had been brought to hold in idolatry a man of my father's temperament."

He was very unlike her imagined hero, quite unlike the lover she had expected would come up the rose walk at Ambrey rectory to ask her to marry him. My mother rarely ever spoke of her later years as a wife, but often with even extenuation of their first meeting, and the childish fondness with which she regarded him.

It had been made a matter of reproach to her always by his relatives, and my father. I think he never entirely forgave her for her share in his alienation from his family. He died with that antagonism in his heart, and my mother had suffered silently, rearing her three girls as well as she could on the slender patrimony left her, with the question of the old curate's dignity of character to restrain her from appealing to the great people down in Kent.

Caroline, now in her twenty-third year, had been waiting some years, rather impatiently, for a duke or viscount to come down into the country and marry her for her peachy cheeks and shoe-black eyes. But nowadays dukes prefer a bad complexion and £10,000 a year to a captivating person whose sole flower is in mere personal attraction.

Edith was already twenty-one, and felt aggrieved at her sister for not having made a match, leaving the field to her. Not strong like Caro, Edith was, however, a pretty girl, with fine, lady-like hands, and a carriage a princess might have envied.

I believe I was seldom thought of by any one until I discovered I was too much grown to utilize the cast-off frocks of the girls, and was now a tall, awkward girl of eighteen, with large elbows and a sandy complexion, like about this time that I had made much of my musical chance, and, what with a few lessons from the village organist and the drumming through long winter evenings on the old harpsichord in the sitting-room, I had suddenly become proficient in a small way; enough, so, at least, to admit of taking a few of Miss Harmon's scholars in the afternoons. The money I earned this way seemed, no doubt, a prodigious sum to poor mamma, whose common condition was a state of perfect impenitence.

Mother had often declared that both Caro and Edith possessed the hands of musicians, so slender, supple white, while mine were overgrown from the wringing of dish-cloths, and red from boiling water.

Providence had given me my bony hands with music in them, and a wonderful voice, which Miss Harmon had declared made me almost seem pretty. She never knew, kind soul, how she made my heart ache with a dull, horrible pain, when she dealt me this deprecating praise.

The girls and mamma were in the little dun-colored morning-room, which had once been my father's study, with closed blinds, ripping up an ancient chair, upholstered in a grand Arab pattern of scarlet and gold, to construct an overdress for Caroline's cherry silk, the sleeves and bodice of which were quite beyond repair. The chair had been shrouded in gray holland for the last dozen years, and the silk really was unworn.

Who ever thought a letter would find its way from the outside world to our sober little house behind these pollard willows, like so many transmigrated Rushtons, tall and angular, still keeping guard over mamma and her brood, impatiently. "Very likely it is from some forgotten creditor of poor papa's."

Poor little mamma's cap-ribbons trembled and fluttered while she read the few words, written, it might be, by an artful clerk in Lincoln Inn Fields, the letters were so aggressive.

"Well, girls," with a faint attempt at cheerfulness—"here's a chance for you, at last. This letter is from your Aunt Ruth Rushton, your father's eldest sister, who never spoke to him after he married me—though I do not remember it against her now. I have always thought of Ruth as being a superior woman—a very superior woman."

I have heard your father say that she spoke four languages in her young days and that she was a great belle then."

"I brought out a contemptuous 'laugh' from the girls. This was the letter which proved a turning-point in my life:

"SISTER-IN-LAW: I hear you are blessed with three daughters. I am childless, bed-ridden old woman, with no one to care for me. I need some strong, active young person daily and hourly. Send me a niece. She shall be paid for her trouble. I suppose you consider them all paragons, but beauty is not indispensable. Honesty and good morals are. Let me know at once. Your obedient servant,

"RUTH IN SHIRAZ."
"Of the 'Pines, Kent.'"

"What an insult!" said Edith. "Horrible old woman! After all these years of neglect, she would now make a maid-servant of us. I shall not go."

Then Caroline delivered the address at the beginning of my story.

Poor mamma picked the wadding from the back of the stuffed chair like a bird pecking at barley; all the time a cloud creeping over her pale face.

"No, of course you'll neither leave me, nor after this letter, but it seems like flying in the face of Providence to refuse. It is not like going out to service, you know, after all. The coming winter will be very hard on me, and I can't see my way out very clearly. There's Agnes—we might let her go; although I should miss her sadly. And she has not a decent gown to go in. Her next quarter will not be due for a long time yet."

"What does it matter?" I said at last, my heart filled with bitterness. "I should not be expected to dress greatly. I am ready to go just as I am."

"O, I dare say," said Caro, in high disdain. "Playing the drudge to you, Edith, but there's to be no god-mother nor prince in the story. You're going to drudge and slave for a hideous old tyrant, and wear her ridiculous finery for pay. But anything for an excuse to leave the drudgery to me, Edith and I, you ungrateful thing!"

"I've done it all my life uncomplainingly," I picked up spirit to say, confident it would not help my case, however.

"Don't quarrel now, just before separating," said poor mamma, almost sternly.

And so it was settled that I should leave home; the letter was posted, my handbag, who was to look for me Tuesday fortnight, some little time before allowed for my preparations. These were ridiculously simple. My few things were to be "gotten up" as the clear-starchers say, in the changeable silk gown of mamma's the smelly side out, and could have wept at the thought of how I should look in it. This, and my old black, and one or two prints, were what I packed in my mean little trunk with many sobs and tears, and bidding farewell to mamma, who cried so bitterly, her thin arms wound about my neck, as if all her poor heart left her by misfortune was bursting in twain.

"Good-bye, mamma darling, I shall write often, and if there are any earnings they shall come to you."

"One would think that Agnes were on the eve of starting to America," sneered Edith, shaking my head coldly, and giving me a dabby kiss on my tear-stained cheek.

O, I never knew what a dear little dun-colored home it was, until I had turned my back upon it in the chill September rain.

A gray-haired servant, in gray stockings and rusty small clothes, met me at the station, with an ancient affair on four wheels, drawn by an animal not at all unlike the solemn old man who said his name was Dark, and whom I shocked utterly by calling him Mr. Dark.

I had plenty time for reflection as we left the highway, turning up through the avenue of paternal hemlocks, to the no less forbidding old house, with a quantity of wings and windows, a rambling porch at the side, and one or two statues on the terraces all soggy with rain, and littered over with droppings from the pines, whose funeral branches had for years kept the sunshine from that gloomy portal.

A staid, elderly woman, in a respectable silk gown, met me at the door with the intelligence that my aunt was quite put about at having kept the tea waiting a quarter of an hour, which I accepted as an omen of a bad beginning.

She was already sitting at the head of the table in the dining-room—a grant apartment, with a high ceiling, heavy mahogany furniture, and tall silver candlesticks.

A pale old woman, with snow-white hair and burning black eyes, with all their old fire still smoldering in their depths.

She held out one hand, shrouded in a black-lace mitten.

"Come here! And so you are my niece? But you are no Rushton. She has sent me the plainest one, of course. Well, I cursed your mother for her beauty years ago. I am glad I shall not be reminded of it in you. Sit down there, at the foot, don't keep me waiting. Hand her the tray, Stevens."

The pale, ghastly glimmer of the wax light on the Rushton plate, the whispering of the wind in those gloomy trees, the rustle of the silk gown as Stevens came and went between my new mistress and I, taken with the strangeness of the situation, and the remembrance of poor little mamma's tearful speeches, and the plaintive song of the robin, deprived me of all appetite, and I only mimed at the current jam and biscuit.

Stevens cleared away the things, leaving the cloth and the candles, and standing at the back of Miss Rushton's chair, and I could not accept her offer of a glass of wine, and I do not intend to.

In spite of that hard face and those fierce eyes, a sudden, strange pity filled me. How hard it must have been, how hard for one in whose veins still flowed the wild current of the Rushton blood.

She beckoned me to her side impatiently.

"I want to say, Agnes, that if your mother sent you here thinking to make much of it, she is mistaken. I take you into my service as I would any worthy and disinterested young person. I shall pay you your wages quarterly, £10 per year and your living, which is all I will be worth; and I do not intend to add one pound or promise any favors from the fact of your being Gerald Rushton's daughter. You understand?"

I nodded silently, feeling too much hurt to trust my voice.

"Stevens, my cabinet!"

She unlocked the box and took out some bank-notes with her gloved hand.

"I make it a rule to give one quarter in advance. Here are ten pounds, Stevens, will you acquaint you with your duties and show you to your chamber. I shall not require you before nine in the morning. Good-night."

"Not tired, but glad to escape from that room, I ventured to raise one thin lid to my lips, but shrank back—those fingers were icy cold."

I was not naturally a timid girl, but the lofty corridors, highly vaulted passages, and shadowy room, with its dim light, made me feel cold and frightened. Everything about the room was dark and ponderous. Somehow, the canopied bedstead, with its blood-red curtains, made me think of the tower.

I declined the assistance of a maid, and Stevens retired, leaving me one waxlight, which threw gigantic shadows on the wall. My duties were not hard or various. I was to answer my aunt when she bade me, be always at her chair back, and speak only when spoken to. I fell asleep at last, thinking of poor little mamma's first quarter's salary.

My life was an uneventful one at the Pines. I was never absent from my aunt, but grew no more intimate with her than at first. We had no company save Miss Rushton's surgeon and a solicitor, who came once a month to dine, and sang very little, and only in secret, as the grand piano had been opened in twenty years, as Miss Rushton did not tolerate music.

One evening, when she dismissed me, my friend here to-morrow. He is to be my heir, and I caution you against designing or trying to gain his favor."

"What a little thing you are! And what you are Gerald Rushton's daughter? What are you doing at the Pines?"

"Do you not know? Let me pass, please."

"You have a wonderful fly from me? You do have a wonderful fly, which ought to be cultivated. You should sing more."

"Miss Rushton does not like singing; and I am paid to keep her quiet."

"I am not a Scotch wit. Please promise not to hide yourself away or run from me again."

"I cannot."

With easy grace he stepped aside, and I shall find you out wherever you are."

I almost had a heart to hate Hugh Kennedy for his cruel pursuit of me; yet, oh, I learned to love him. He came into my life when it was barren and cheerless, and my heart grew around him, until I felt that it would kill me to go away. Yet go I must. My aunt would never forgive me. She had higher aims for Hugh. Here was a prince for Cinderella, but no god-mother. I hugged my mad passion to my bosom and fled faster and faster from Hugh. One night my aunt's bed curtain caught on fire, and in rescuing her I burned my hands and face terribly. She was wheeled out on the terrace, while Dark extinguished the flames.

When I came to, Hugh was holding me in his arms, pitying my poor seared hands, and kissing them passionately.

I rushed from him and hid myself in my own room, with my great joy and great sorrow, thinking only that Hugh had kissed me, and that I must leave him forever.

O, if I could have flung my arms around poor mamma, and cried myself still.

Hugh was in the corridor the next morning as I came down toward my aunt's door.

"Agnes, darling, you shall hear me? Agnes, I love you truly, as God is my judge! I mean right by you, my girl. Will you listen to me?"

"O, Hugh, I cannot! Let me go—let me go, if you pity me!"

He was crushing my hand in his. His breath came in quick gasps. Should I throw away my only chance of heaven? But my promise—

"You shall not go! Do you love me, Agnes? Why tell me that?"

"Yes, yes—I love you, Hugh! Let me go now."

"One passionate embrace, and I fled to my aunt's room."

"You have come, Agnes, to hear me thank you again for saving my life. But you did me no service."

"O, no, no! I came to tell you, aunt, that I must go away—to ask a release from you."

"It is not that—only I must go away."

"And what if I will not?"

"O, aunt, you cannot be so cruel! She took my hand in hers—still cold and clammy."

"You love Hugh, Agnes. Well, you shall go home to-morrow, if you wish. Leave me now."

Hugh had an interview with aunt, and wrote me the result by the hand of Stevens:

"My only love: I have nothing to offer you now but my life—my undivided heart. We can be happy in each other's love, for you must and shall be mine."

"HUGH."

This letter I wrote on my heart. My aunt's solicitor came that night. We knew that the will was being changed. Hugh had offended the hard, old woman by loving an Aubrey.

"At night my aunt died suddenly of paralysis. I cannot tell how it shocked me. Stevens and I dressed her in a white satin bridal dress which had been folded away forty years. This stroke was attributed for assuming to be what she was not, as she had never been a paralytic! She was to be married in a fortnight to a man she loved passionately. I forbade her dancing. She went to a hustling hall, and while waltzing received the intelligence that he had shot himself. She took a vow never to stand on her feet again, and she never left. Stevens told me this. She had made me her heir, and I married Hugh and gave it back to him."

Exchange.

The Country Which Is to Compete With America as a Wheat Producer.

A great many people have very hazy ideas about Russia in general, and Siberia in particular. The latter vast territory, some 1,200 miles from north to south, and 1,500 from east to west, has been subjected in the minds of many persons through the pathetic story of the "Exiles of Siberia," to influences akin to those which have molded the ideas of many Englishmen and Americans.

Photographs of snow (or rather) besprinkled entities all fur capped, legged and belted in Red River capotes; a wolf or two sneaking in the foreground; a black bear lazily gambling on a tree in the rear, with several "Tajiks" on the far, frosty horizon, in mocassins and snowshoes, apparently chasing nothing in particular, are sent home plentifully to admiring country cousins, and help to foster the notion of a land of snow.

No doubt, a country of such vast extent as Siberia must be in different climates, and the soil and products must be as various. But though the northern parts are cold and desolate, there are extensive fertile regions which—those watered by the great river Ob especially—will, it is said, now have their wheat and other products brought into competition with American wheat supply. The southern part of the country is fertile, with immense plains or steppes, some, no doubt, sandy and barren, but others well watered, open tracts between forests, generally adapted for tillage and pasture. In fact, Siberia is a country of many and varied endowments and capabilities—rich in fine furs and skins, gold, silver, iron, lead and copper; and having also coal in the northern part.

The Russian caravans that travel every year through the country with their merchandise to China, passing through Tobolsk, on the Ob, where also all the furs furnished by Siberia are brought into a warehouse, and thence forwarded to the Siberian Chancery at Moscow. Under proper trade development the exports of Siberia ought to be very large, and greatly in excess of the imports. It affords a variety of commodities which are of great use to foreigners, and its artíficers want neither tools nor materials to carry on their trade, though they are lacking in industry and push on account of the cheapness of food, and other easy conditions of life.

Much fine wheat should come out of the Tobolsk district. Agriculture, cattle feeding, fishing and hunting, have indeed for ages been the chief occupations of the Russian people, though national development in other ways has been the rule since the great Peter civilized the barbarous subjects of his vast empire. Russia, in commerce, as in agriculture, now holds a rank among the nations of the world of which her progress could have formed no conception, and which it can assign no limits.—Toronto Mail.

Our Young Folks.

WHAT THE SNOW-FLAKES DID.

Over the great broad prairie
The snow-flakes, soft and light,
Began in the early morning
To carpet the ground with white.
Softly they fluttered downward,
And some of them paused to rest
On two little threads of iron
That lie the East to the West.

But one little snow-flake whispered:
Yes, how small am I!
On this cold, hard bed of iron,
Wind can blow me off at will.
Her sister snow-flake answered:
Yes, I know that we are small,
But that needn't worry you, sister,
For we're nothing to do but fall!

Then every listening snow-flake
Leaped steadily on and on,
Falling and falling and falling,
Till the wintry day was gone.
And then, why the rule were hidden,
And everywhere the eye
Saw only the endless snow-drifts
Under the cold gray sky.

In vain the panting engine,
With swift and scream, essayed
To break the tiny snow-flakes.
A giant barrier made!
Came hurrying men and engines,
While frost whistles blew,
Till at last right "iron horses"
The train in safety drew!

Now, if every little snow-flake
Had passed that stormy day
To make and sigh, despondent—
They never could have wrought the chain Of judgment were at hand, and when the dreaded year had passed and the panic had subsided, a great impulse to the building of churches arose throughout central and western Europe. The buildings which were the result of this impulse gave employment to a large number of artificers for a period of many years. Working at first under the direction of the Bishops and abbots, they were soon acquired considerable independence.
The "lay brethren," as they had previously been styled, separating themselves from their clerical superiors
as well as from the common laborers, assembled in hospices or workshops, as buildings near the site of the churches,
where they improved themselves in the principles of their art, blending with mathematical and artistic studies a mystic philosophy of sacred symbolism and biblical allusions. They were divided into three classes, viz., apprentices,
young men deemed worthy of admission
into the fraternity; fellow craftsmen,
who had so far advanced as to be able to work alone on the details of the art, and were bound to impart to the apprentices their knowledge; and masters, comparatively few in number, who were competent to undertake the design or direction of entire works, in the capacity of architects, surveyors or master builders. The entered apprentices were entrusted with a secret sign and pass-word, and bound on oath to divulge to none but the initiated either the knowledge he should acquire, or the rite and practices of his lodge. This method of mutual recognition was a necessity when indentures and diplomas were unknown, but taken in conjunction with the mystic philosophy inculcated, and the secret ritual, a sort of initiation
within the lodge, it acquired in time a solemnity and sacredness which could attach to no mere certificate of membership or of proficiency. Further credentials were provided in a set of questions and answers, forming a sort of catechism, orally communicated and guarded by the same sanction by which the "brethren," as they now call one another,
could give proof of their identity when they traveled in search of employment, and which are in all essential points preserved
in the modern Free-masonry. Bibliothèque were permanently listed in most of the chief cities of the empire, and the reputation which their masters acquired for genius and skill,
led to the engagement of German architects
in other countries wherever cathedrals
or churches were being erected, on a scale of more than ordinary grandeur. At first the several lodges worked independently of one another; but in the fifteenth century
the necessity of further union began to be felt. In 1459, a gathering of the Master Masons of central and southern Germany
was held at Ratisbon, where the regulations of the different lodges were revised and consolidated. In 1492 a second and more general assembly was held, at which the whole of the Mason of Germany were represented and united into a single brotherhood, of which the chief of the lodge of Strasburg, which had long been recognized as a court of appeal even by the Austria and Switzerland, was declared perpetual Grand Master. The statutes then drawn up received in 1498 the confirmation of the Emperor Maximilian I., whose example was followed by his successors. After the Reformation, a period of transition began;
the building of churches declined, and in the following century the German princes naturally looked with suspicion
on a vast gathering of men bound together
by the closest ties and owing allegiance to an authority by which Alsace had passed under French dominion. In 1707 all communication with the mother lodge of Strasburg was prohibited, and attempts were made to establish a Grand Lodge
on German soil; but these failing through the mutual jealousies of the petty States of the Empire, the most persistent efforts were made for the entire suppression of the order. But, although proscribed, it could not be exterminated; the lodges met in secret, admitted new members and maintained the existence and continuity of the new Free-masonry, which had meanwhile arisen in England on the ruins of the old, held out to its German brethren the right hand of fellowship,
and in once more raising them to liberty
and honor did but repay the debt
which our country owed to its continental sister.—McMillan's Magazine.

dy annoyed him by pecking around his head, and the outrage that the Goose committed on his tail was entirely excusable. The Bantams I shall drop forever; and if it were not for the culture and blue blood of the Gray Goose I should cut her also. No one but a vulgar person would behave badly to a gentleman of such consideration as the Marrowfat Pig.

The Gobbler shook hands with the Guinea-hen, and they parted friendly; but there was a coldness in their manner visible to a close observer, and there was no telling how far the alienation between the several families in the barn might have gone had not the Marrowfat Pig died that night, from eating too much corn at the party.

After his death all united in doing him honor. Even the Bantams came to believe Biddy's lameness a distinction; and, following the lead of the Guinea-hen, they all declared that the greatest genius and the most well-bred person they had ever known was the Marrowfat Pig.—Elizabeth Cummings, in N. Y. Independent.

The Mysterious Masons.

In the year 1000 the whole of Christendom was possessed with the idea that the end of the world and the day of judgment were at hand; and when the dreaded year had passed and the panic had subsided, a great impulse to the building of churches arose throughout central and western Europe. The buildings which were the result of this impulse gave employment to a large number of artificers for a period of many years. Working at first under the direction of the Bishops and abbots, they were soon acquired considerable independence. The "lay brethren," as they had previously been styled, separating themselves from their clerical superiors as well as from the common laborers, assembled in hospices or workshops, as buildings near the site of the churches, where they improved themselves in the principles of their art, blending with mathematical and artistic studies a mystic philosophy of sacred symbolism and biblical allusions. They were divided into three classes, viz., apprentices, young men deemed worthy of admission into the fraternity; fellow craftsmen, who had so far advanced as to be able to work alone on the details of the art, and were bound to impart to the apprentices their knowledge; and masters, comparatively few in number, who were competent to undertake the design or direction of entire works, in the capacity of architects, surveyors or master builders. The entered apprentices were entrusted with a secret sign and pass-word, and bound on oath to divulge to none but the initiated either the knowledge he should acquire, or the rite and practices of his lodge. This method of mutual recognition was a necessity when indentures and diplomas were unknown, but taken in conjunction with the mystic philosophy inculcated, and the secret ritual, a sort of initiation within the lodge, it acquired in time a solemnity and sacredness which could attach to no mere certificate of membership or of proficiency. Further credentials were provided in a set of questions and answers, forming a sort of catechism, orally communicated and guarded by the same sanction by which the "brethren," as they now call one another, could give proof of their identity when they traveled in search of employment, and which are in all essential points preserved in the modern Free-masonry. Bibliothèque were permanently listed in most of the chief cities of the empire, and the reputation which their masters acquired for genius and skill, led to the engagement of German architects in other countries wherever cathedrals or churches were being erected, on a scale of more than ordinary grandeur. At first the several lodges worked independently of one another; but in the fifteenth century the necessity of further union began to be felt. In April 26, 1459, a gathering of the Master Masons of central and southern Germany was held at Ratisbon, where the regulations of the different lodges were revised and consolidated. In 1492 a second and more general assembly was held, at which the whole of the Mason of Germany were represented and united into a single brotherhood, of which the chief of the lodge of Strasburg, which had long been recognized as a court of appeal even by the Austria and Switzerland, was declared perpetual Grand Master. The statutes then drawn up received in 1498 the confirmation of the Emperor Maximilian I., whose example was followed by his successors. After the Reformation, a period of transition began; the building of churches declined, and in the following century the German princes naturally looked with suspicion on a vast gathering of men bound together by the closest ties and owing allegiance to an authority by which Alsace had passed under French dominion. In 1707 all communication with the mother lodge of Strasburg was prohibited, and attempts were made to establish a Grand Lodge on German soil; but these failing through the mutual jealousies of the petty States of the Empire, the most persistent efforts were made for the entire suppression of the order. But, although proscribed, it could not be exterminated; the lodges met in secret, admitted new members and maintained the existence and continuity of the new Free-masonry, which had meanwhile arisen in England on the ruins of the old, held out to its German brethren the right hand of fellowship, and in once more raising them to liberty and honor did but repay the debt which our country owed to its continental sister.—McMillan's Magazine.

SAYS MR. J. DOLAN, through the Brooklyn Eagle: "I challenge any man (not be over twenty-seven years of age) that I can produce in thirty days the longest, thickest and best red mustache." Now what does Mr. J. Dolan mean by "best" mustache? We can conceive of a long mustache, and a thick mustache, and a red mustache; but a best mustache! What is there good or better or best about a mustache?—Courier-Journal.

DAVID DAVIS pronounces the new hug waltz a failure.—Boston Post.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
SIX MONTHS IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 10 cents per square of 10 lines;
second insertion, 5 cents per square of 10 lines;
third insertion, 3 cents per square of 10 lines.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1879.

VOLUME THREE.

With this issue THE REPUBLICAN enters upon its third volume. While it is but an infant in age we cannot but congratulate ourselves upon its past prosperity, and the substantial support that has been accorded it by a generous public. Our subscription list is second to none in the country. THE REPUBLICAN circulates in every district and from every postoffice in the country. Our labors to make it a news paper have been, we think, rewarded with success.

As a Republican journal we have ever sought to maintain harmony and worked for the prosperity and success of the party. We have always frowned upon dissension and strife, denounced trickery, meanness and dishonesty, in and out of the party, held ourselves aloof from cliques, factions and personal controversies, and labored always to strengthen our party by advocating only such measures and men as deserved our confidence and respect.

In view of these facts and the importance of the campaign next fall, when all State and county officers are to be elected, (except State Senator), it is the plain duty of every Republican in the country to aid in circulating THE REPUBLICAN—to see that it is well circulated in every district, and if possible, read by every voter in the country. It is no less your duty to aid us in the good work of battling for the success of the grand old party, by promptly paying your subscription. The receipt of a subscription infuses new life into an editor and causes him to drive the quill with renewed vigor. He cannot live on turnips and do a soldier's duty. Give us your aid and encouragement, and with you we will share the glory of our party's triumphs and achievements next fall. Let us make this volume and the next campaign both a grand success.

In matters of local interest we will always advocate that which to us seems to be right.

Chairman Mathews' Decision.

It will be remembered that about three weeks ago Mr. B. Stockett Mathews, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, made the announcement that he would call a meeting of the committee for some day in the middle of March, to let it determine whether a State convention shall be held at an early day for the purpose of electing a new State central committee. As none of the members of the Central Committee had received official notification of such a meeting, the gentleman who are interesting themselves for the holding of the convention at an early day entertained the opinion that Mr. Mathews had abandoned the project of calling together the Central Committee. It has been ascertained, however, that Mr. Mathews will issue the call for a meeting of the committee at an early day. It is understood that March 29th, or a day thereabouts, will be named for the holding of the meeting of the State Central Committee in this city. This announcement will, no doubt, be a great relief to those who have been looking daily for such a call, which will probably be issued this week.—Balto. American.

The New York Tribune asks: "Why should a nation which did not shrink from three millions of negroes get into a panic over a paltry one hundred thousand Mongolians, distributed over a State as large, to quote Mr. Blaine's words, as New England, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, especially as their number is constantly decreasing?"

Mr. Tilden takes his little horse back rides in Fifth avenue when the weather is soft and the wind is southerly. It would be a good thing all around if he would saddle up his favorite Blackstone and ride to Patagonia with St. Patrick Tudor.—Baltimore Gazette.

The great failure of the present Congress, towering loftily above all other failures, is the Potter investigation. The Democracy will never attempt another such.

The Chinese Bill.

This bill, forbidding any vessel to bring more than fifteen Chinese immigrants on each passage, passed the Senate by a vote of 20 yeas to 23 nays. The Democrats furnished 21 yeas, while the Republicans furnished 17 and the Democrats 9 of the nays. The bill seems to have been passed to please a certain order of voters in the Pacific States, who recognize Dennis Kearney and "such like" orators as their spokesmen. It is in defiance of a treaty deliberately made and ratified with the Emperor of China, by which we have secured probably a trade of $100,000,000 with that empire, as well as the opportunity for Christian missionaries to bear the Gospel to the pagan natives of that country. If all the evils, charged against the character of the majority of the Chinese immigrants be correct, then there would be reason for regulating the quality but not the quantity of such immigration. It is perfectly competent for the government to prevent the influx of vicious materials into our ports, and not in violation of any treaty. This is what we should do, with reference to all foreign immigration. But as long as we propose to welcome all nations, it seems ridiculous to discriminate in favor of some and against others. Should this bill become a law, the Chinese Emperor will have to sue for abrogating all treaties with us. Possibly such a procedure on his part will bear most heavily on the Pacific States. It undoubtedly will be a course of much gratification to Great Britain, which would then absorb a trade, that has been taken away from her by our enterprise.

From the little city of York, Pennsylvania, comes a lesson and a warning which we trust will not be lost upon the political managers of Baltimore. York is a Democratic city, good for a majority of from four to five hundred when the signs are correct. At the municipal election last Tuesday the people turned out in their might and routed the Democratic ticket, horse, foot, dragons, snailers and camp-followers. For the first time in twenty years York is in the hands of the enemies of the Democratic party. It is the old story. A small ring or clique of Democratic politicians settled down in the snug offices and proceeded to administer them in hereditary style. A diabolical dynasty of office-holders was established and the road to perdition was barred to all honest citizens who failed to secure the favor of this insignificant but powerful junta. The common people finally grew indignant and pulled down the pillars of the political structure upon which these mannikins had been raised to small greatness. What happened in New York, when Tammany was routed, happened in old York last Tuesday. There is an officeholding dynasty in the city of Baltimore. If Belshazzar, as he sits at his desk in the comfortable office which he has filled for two terms, will occasionally rest his eye on the wall he will find plainly inscribed there in phosphorescent letters: "Don't crowd the limit.—Baltimore Gazette, Democratic."

What a beautiful platform the Reformers will be able to construct in 1880! Up to date the material accumulated justifies the erection of a structure something like this: "Resolved, That the Democratic party is the same glorious old concern that it always was; that it is in favor of buying a Presidency if 'done only once,' and the coparcenary is not revealed by the surreptitious publication of the private papers of gentlemen; that it is just and gentle to 'redeem' the solid South by stuffing ballot-boxes with tissue ballots and by tail-dozing; that it is the highest patriotism to maintain a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives by seating Democrats in the seats to which the people have stolidly elected Republicans; that it is high-handed tyranny to interfere with ballot-box stuffers and repeaters working in the interest of Reform; that it is lofty statesmanship to break down resumption by using the fund provided for its maintenance to pay millions of pensions which have been voted to make capital for the Democratic party; and finally, that the penitentiary should be abolished since it is daily becoming more and more a peril to the existence of a Democratic majority in Congress." That's a platform of live issues.

COMING OVER.—The Crisfield Leader says: "It is amusing now to see the ring organs of the Democratic party who have been as dumb as oysters on the subject of the gubernatorial nomination, coming over to the support of Wm. T. Hamilton. They wiggle and squirm, but the voters are opposed to the ring candidate, hence they yield to the wishes of the 'dear people' and profess to be in favor of Hamilton's nomination."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D.C., Feb. 17, 1879.

When Congress was forced by the weight of public sentiment to summarily end the arbitrary career of the Board of Public Works it was found that this device for the Government of the District (permanent incumbents footing up less than 150,000) had saddled them with a debt of between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. This encumbrance is on property officially valued at less than $100,000,000. Although the usual officers were appointed when the experiment was made in 1871 of remanding into a Territorial form of government, the Board of Public Works was really and in fact the governing power. It is perhaps too late to revert to the jobs, the wholesale robbery, the peevish schemes, the corruption that ran riot, the prodigious waste, the arbitrary methods and general bad administration that characterized the regime of that administration, which went on in its work of impoverishing the District for the more than 20 years of its reign, right under the eyes of members of Congress. It is enough to say that the property—the houses of hundreds of poor people—is in danger of confiscation. Only the interposition of the powerful authorized the instrument of our ruin on avert that calamity. It laughed us to scorn when we implored it to save us from the tyranny and extortions of the irresponsible men it had clothed with practically unlimited power over us. The 14 New York National Bank advanced the money on the assessments that poor property owners could not pay, taking as collateral the tax-delinquent certificates issued against the property. These bore interest at 10 per cent., and the original amount has been nearly doubled by the accumulated interest. When the Bank sought to enforce payment on these tax-delinquents, our District Supreme Court decided the assessments unconstitutional, oppressive and without the warrant of law. But the bank had sufficient money or something else to secure the aid of such a reformer as Egna Hamon, M. C., to introduce a bill, legalizing all these assessments, to secure its passage by both Houses of Congress and to obtain a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court sustaining it. There the matter rests and it is understood that the work of eviction will begin soon after Congress gets out of the way unless it shall have passed a relief measure. One of the District Commissioners in a late appeal to Congress estimates the number of people who will lose their homes if payment is enforced, by hundreds. It should be remembered that these were not ordinary taxes which are so liberally onerous to people without work or the means of making money, but were taxes imposed for "special improvements" (in addition to current taxes) which damaged some of the abutting property by more than the amount of the taxes. This is no exaggerated statement; and if fair-minded men throughout the country understood how we were turned over to the clutches of a ring of greedily rapacious scoundrels by Congress, how it refused to revoke the license till we had been skinned and our blood sucked dry, how it thus empowered a bank which counts its money by millions, to complete the ruin by turning into the streets as large proportion of our laboring population, I know the storm of indignation aroused would frighten Congress into undoing something of the wrongs it has heaped on our heads. There is another local matter requiring Congressional interference to save residents here from an impending pestilence. While Congress has been annually voting away millions, ostensibly for river and harbor improvements, but really much of it to aid members to a re-election, the Potomac and its Eastern Branch forming four miles of our water front, have been allowed to become choked up until the acres of this lying between the two channels, are covered a foot thick with the fecal and other poison deposits from our sewers.

Up to Saturday only five of the twelve annual appropriation bills had received final Congressional action. Several other measures of great public movement were still before the House or Senate, besides hundreds of minor or no importance. Unless Democrats at once give way to their revolutionary purpose to force drastic legislation into the appropriation bills, they must fall and an extra session become a necessity.

LOGAN.

A bill has been introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature to prohibit the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors in the Commonwealth. A State Commissioner at a salary of $3,000 a year will see that the law is enforced and prosecute offenders. No liquor can be used in the State for a beverage and anybody's premises can be searched when it is suspected that any liquor may be found.

The New York 7:30 of Monday

contained a long letter from Senator Blaine, in reply to William Lloyd Garrison, defending himself and other Senators who voted for the bill restricting Chinese immigration. After detailing at some length the miserable character of 999-1000ths of the Chinese emigrants who reach our shores—mostly at San Francisco—a narration with the substance of which our readers are familiar, Mr. Blaine denies that the bill is a violation of the Burlingame treaty, which provided for voluntary immigration alone, and proceeds to show, by evidence of various kinds, that not more than one emigrant in a thousand from China to California is in any sense a voluntary one, but that all come there, sold body and soul to the "six companies" or a vile white man. They are nearly all from the criminal classes of China—the most degraded in the world, and the emigrants the lowest of their class. Mr. Blaine scents at the idea of our trade with China being damaged by any retaliation that might follow the repeal of the immigrant bill. He states that our entire commerce with China, except Hong Kong, last year was less than $1,000,000, and as Hong Kong is under British control that part cannot be closed against us by China. The attempt, says Mr. Blaine, to justify maltreatment of the negro in the South on the same grounds that we refuse to receive the Chinese is simply illogical. The bill is not aimed at the Chinese here, who, being here, are entitled to protection, but against the countless hordes that may come if we leave the way open. The writer touches briefly upon the "cheap labor" aspect of the Chinese question, but says the cheap labor experiment is a dangerous one, as we do not want cheap or day labor, but labor at fair rates, at rates that will give capital and labor each its fair share. He claims that we have a right to exclude the Chinese from our shores the Chinaman, with his physical and moral leprosy; his villainy; his fifth and servility, and closes as follows:

I feel and know that I am pleading the cause of the free American laborer and of his children and of his children's children. It has been well said that it is the cause of the house against the forest; of the comforts of the freeman against the splendor of the slave. It has been charged that our position would amount to labor saving machinery and condemn it. This answer is not only superficial; it is also absurd. Labor saving machinery has multiplied the power to pay, has developed new wants, and has richly rewarded the owner of labor and constantly advanced the wages of the laborer. The service toll has always dragged free labor to the lowest level and has stripped it of one monument after another until it was helpless and hopeless. Whenever that condition comes to the free laborer of America, the Republic of free men is gone, and we shall live under the worst of oligarchies—that of more wealth, whose profit only measures the wretchedness of the unpaid toilersmen that produce it.

The Struggle Begun.

The House Tuesday passed the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill, with an amendment repealing the National election laws. This action of the Democratic party amounts in substance to this declaration: "Repeat those laws, or we won't appropriate any money to pay the officers of the government!" The law which the Democratic party finds so odious is the one providing for the appointment of supervisors at Congressional elections. It was passed in 1871 in the exercise of the constitutional and natural power of Congress to regulate the elections of its own members. It provides that upon the application of a certain number of citizens a United States court shall appoint for each voting precinct two citizens, "who shall be of different political parties," who shall be known as supervisors of election. These supervisors are required to act as challengers, and to scrutinize the records both during the registration of voters prior to the Congressional election and during such an election; they must "remain near the ballot boxes are, at all times after the polls are open, until every vote cast at such time and place has been counted;" and "to the end that each candidate for the office of representative or delegate in Congress may obtain the benefit of every vote for him cast," they are required to "personally scrutinize, count and canvass each ballot in their election district or voting precinct cast." The law provides for the appointment of a chief supervisor of elections, to hold office during good behavior, whose duty it is to prepare the necessary form and blanks, receive applications for appointments to the position of supervisors of elections and present such applications to the court, and instruct the supervisors in the discharge of their duties. The law requires the United States Marshal and his deputies to support and protect the supervisors in the discharge of their duties.

There is nothing partisan or unfair in such a law as this. The presence of the supervisors in the polling places is in the interest of fair elections, and the law in this respect is very similar to the New York statute, which provides for the presence of party representatives in the polling places to scrutinize the conduct of the judges of election. The law is not in the interest of one party, but of all parties, and is intended as a check on the election frauds so prevalent in large cities. The judges of the United States courts are appointed for life, and are placed as far beyond the control of political influences as it is possible for officials to be. The chief supervisor also holds his position by a tenure independent of political favor. Many of the judges are Democrats and the chief supervisors also. Judge Giles, from whose court the appointments in this city are made, is a Democrat, and Chief Supervisor Bond is an independent Democrat. The value of the law in this community is conspicuously exhibited by the trials in the United States Court, which have resulted in the conviction of some notorious offenders, many of whom did not even deny their guilt, but who, as everyone knows, would never have been proceeded against in the state courts, although the state laws against election frauds are much more severe than the national laws. The strength of the Democratic move for the repeal of this law comes from motives of dishonesty, and fair Democratic organs so recognize it; nor does the demand come so much from the South as from the North. In this connection we cannot do better than quote the following from a good Democratic paper, the Richmond Star:

"We no longer fear the supervisor or his marshals, and, in fact, the better class of our people would prefer, in the interest of honest elections, that there should be witnesses present to attest the fairness of the count. But it is not for the South that they ask the repeal. * * * The sole hope of the party, the South being secure in the next presidential election, is in a divided North, and it is alleged that this measure of repeal is a life and death struggle with our party for existence in the North and South. They must repeal the law and get rid of federal espionage over the ballot there if they would carry any of the great States of the North, and especially is this demanded by New York and Ohio. This may be a wise and far-seeing sort of policy or tactics, and may be a very good party measure, but it is just possible that in this showing their hand our Democratic friends may overdo the thing, and again perpetrate one of those blunders which so often in the past few years have given the advantage to their enemy and resulted in disaster to their plans. The very fact that the party desires the removal of the federal supervisors or spies, now argues an intention on their part to carry the election. And this made plain to conscientious voters, the Democracy will lose more by the repeal and reaction against the party than they can possibly gain by the repeal of laws which are supposed to be a safeguard for the ballot box against fraud and corruption."

The Senate must not submit to the coercion of the House in this matter, whatever may be the consequences. The Republican party can well afford to go before the country on this issue.—Balto. American.

Iron Advancing.

The Philadelphia Record of Saturday says: Prices in iron are advancing. There has been a general rise of $1.50 per ton during the last two months, and an advance of 50 cents within a week. The demand has increased so much that producers say they could sell five tons for every one which they are turning out. All the rail mills in the State are full of orders, while structural iron is in such demand that many of the larger mills are engaging other mills to fill their orders.

The demand for steel rails has induced the makers to take a more independent stand than they have occupied for some time, and this of itself has a tendency to maintain and push present prices. Most of the mills in the State already have their production sold for many months ahead. One of the mills in the State has had to decline nearly 20,000 tons during the last few days, although prices would have been satisfactory had they been able to execute the order. Orders are in the market for several thousand tons of iron rails. The Thon as Iron company have sold one-third of their yearly production, while the Crane Iron company are so well sold up that they decline further business, except on the basis of $18 for No. 1. In structural iron a contract for 250 tons of beams has been received by a firm in this city, and the same house has been awarded a contract for 1,000 tons of plates and shapes for Baltimore. Inquiries are numerous for all descriptions, and it is anticipated that the demand will be fully equal to the capacity of the mills during the summer months. Large orders of sheet iron for immediate delivery are being made. The demand for bar iron is very strong, and dealers anticipate that higher prices will shortly prevail.

One of the largest machine-tool

establishments in the city are authorized by the statement that the demand for heavy machinery is greater than for several years past. This firm has on its books orders for eighteen machines, the cost of each one of which exceeds $5,000. This fact indicates a future heavy consumption of iron in establishments requiring the use of powerful tools and machines. Altogether the outlook of the iron trade is a most promising one.

The Open Polar Sea.

Captain A. B. Tuttle, who claims to have had a longer and more varied experience as a seaman than almost any man now living, was in the city yesterday on his way to Washington to negotiate with the Government for a small steamer to assist in his further explorations in Arctic seas. Captain Tuttle is a native of New York, but at the early age of sixteen ran away from his parents and went to sea and has ever since—some thirty-five years—been a sea-faring man. He has been all over the globe, he says, and has sailed in every sea and has made twenty voyages to the Arctic regions. Since his early manhood he has been captain of whaling and surveying ships. One of the things that particularly attracted his attention in sailing northward was that he found the sea more and more open, especially every fourth year. He made his last trip about a year ago, starting from Hakodadi, Japan, in a fullrigged ship with forty-five men all told. In latitude 78 he found an open sea clear of ice. In latitude 81 he noticed an extraordinary dip of the compass, and on taking soundings discovered the cause of it to be immense ledges of a magnetic substance in five fathoms of water. It was mixed with minerals and fine particles of gold. In latitude 82 he encountered the ice belt, grounded under the water and extending in height in some places over 400 feet. It stretched east and west as far as the eye could reach. He here discovered that the needle pointed due south, and in his own mind concluded that the magnetic deposit he had passed had some connection with the direction in which the needle usually pointed. By climbing to the highest points on the ice barrier he could see directly into an open polar sea lying beyond, and by tracing along the belt eastward he found a passage through into this sea, with a depth of 60 fathoms, or 50 fathoms. The water was quite warm, and a gulf stream was steadily setting out with a velocity of from four to six miles per hour. He sailed through this passage in whaleboats and found it to be about eighteen miles wide. In the north part of this open sea he found nearly fresh leaves of plums, bananas and other tropical plants floating in the water and showing that they had been off the tree but a short time.

Last October he found a large female whale going north through the open passage before mentioned, and also saw migratory birds going north. In July these birds went back south with their young and about the same time he observed whales going south with their young. From these facts he concludes that during a considerable part of the year there is warm climate within the open polar sea sufficient to produce tropical fruits. In the ice barriers on one of his trips he found bones and tusks of the mastodon, which in 1876 he carried to the Centennial at Philadelphia. They were so large that some naturalists thought the animal to which they belonged must have been forty feet in length. He also found some hard wood in the shape of troughs imbedded in the ice. They looked like feeding troughs, and in edges had the appearance of having been gnawed by animals. In sailing west he struck the north part of the coast of New Siberia, where he found a race of people that he thought no one had ever seen before or heard of. They spoke an unknown language which sounded like Hebrew. They spoke a few words of Hawaiian and the Eskimau language, and with these and the aid of signs they conveyed the idea that they came from the north. He was a little acquainted with the Eskimau language, having passed four winters with that people, living on raw walrus, whale blubber and bear meat. During one of these winters, which are without daylight, he made a journey of 380 miles in the dark. During his adventurous career he has met with many disasters, the most serious of which was an encounter with a polar bear. He had both arms and both legs broken, and lost one finger off his left hand, another being so badly lacerated by the teeth of the animal that it is still out of shape. He also lost two ribs, which were completely torn from his body, which bears the marks of wounds which it seems almost incredible that any man could receive and live. The polar bear attain an incredible size, some being reported to weigh as much as 3,000 pounds. He contemplates making another trip to further explore the open polar sea, but needs a small steamer for towing purposes, which he hopes to obtain from the Government. He proposes to start some time in 1880, and leaves for Washington city this morning.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1879.

NUMBER 2

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

- GROCERIES, etc.
- D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.
- W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.
- D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.
- I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.
- L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.
- J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.
- N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Alder & Main Sts.
- DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.
- C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.
- RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.
- HOTELS.
- CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.
- BOARDING HOUSES.
- MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.
- DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Oak & Second Streets.
- GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.
- LIVERY STABLE.
- THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.
- STOVES AND TINWARE.
- A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.
- PHYSICIANS.
- DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.
- DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.
- MILLS.
- GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.
- OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.
- PLASTERER.
- JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.
- BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
- W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.
- GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.
- SURVEYORS.
- J. B. BLANT,
Office in Offutt's Building,
opposite Auctioneer.
- JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.
- JEWELER.
- A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Stinson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.
- MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.
- MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.
- M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishings,
And Fancy Goods, and Stoves,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.
- MASONS.
- JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First Street.
- LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third Street.
- DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
- GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.
- G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Palmers, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.
- PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.
- E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Budd's Store.
- S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.
- BLACKSMITHS.
- CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

- JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.
- P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence next door to Express office.
- GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.
- JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.
- A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

- A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.
- JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

- H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, BARRETT CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. 428-3
- GILMORE S. HAMIL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
AND SELLER OF LANDS,
OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,
Lower Floor.
Particular attention given to conveying and
investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. 424-3
- J. W. VETTEL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 29-4
- THOS. J. PEDDICOCH, A. B. GOSWICK, PEDDICOCH & GOSWICK,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 29-4

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Has located permanently in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the ex-
clusive treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
April 1

A. LOEWENSTEIN, MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
ward large stock of

Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,

which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measure for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

His work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction. 424-3

850 ACRES

—OF—

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole

Road, about six miles north east

from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is

generally covered with good timber.

Would make several good farms.

Will be sold in bulk or in small

lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to

this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, No. 11—1879. In re: JAMES L. BROWN, debtor, and his creditors.

Ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that J. L. Brown, debtor, do appear in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, on the 1st day of May, 1879, to answer such interrogatories or allegations as his creditors,
indorsees or sureties may propose or allege against him;
and that in any of the orders be published
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.

W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett County.

True Copy—Test—
J. H. TOWER, Clerk.

SELLERS' LIVERPILLS

For the cure of Biliousness, Constipation, Headache, Indigestion, and all the ailments of the Liver. Sold in all the principal cities of the United States. Each box contains 25 pills, and is accompanied by a full direction. Price 25 cents. Sold by all the principal druggists. Prepared by J. C. SELLERS, 100 N. 3rd St., Philadelphia, Pa.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 9, 1879.
THE JOY OF FORGIVENESS.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

After the night of weeping breaks the morning of joy. David's sin has been confessed, his supplication offered, and his prayer bestowed. In this psalm, he records his gratitude for God's forgiving grace. It is entitled "Michti," meaning "a psalm of instruction," and was composed by St. Augustine so precious that, during his dying sickness, he caused it to be written upon the wall of his chamber, opposite his couch, so that his eyes might ever rest upon its comforting sentences.
In it we read, first, David's joy in the new experience of forgiveness, ver. 1, 2; secondly,
his memory of the bitter days of guilt, ver. 3, 4; thirdly, his confession and contrition, ver.
5; fourthly, his confident trust in the promise of God, ver. 6, 7; fifthly, his counsel to others, ver. 8, 9; lastly, his closing exhortation to joy in the Lord, ver. 10, 11.

Memory Verse, 7-11.

- 1 Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.
- 2 Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord
imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit
there is no guile.
- 3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through mourning all the day long.
- 4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture was turned into the drought of summer. Selah.
- 5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.
- 6 For thee every one that is guilty shall pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters
they shall not come nigh unto thee.
- 7 Thou art my hiding-place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance.
- 8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee
with mine eye.
- 9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule,
which have no understanding; whose mouth
must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.
- 10 In many sorrows shall he be troubled;
but thou shalt trust in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.
- 11 Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous, and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart.

HOME READINGS.

- M. The joy of forgiveness. Psa. 32, 1-11.
Th. Forgiveness promised. Psa. 1, 16-21.
W. Forgiveness through faith. Mark 2, 1-11.
F. Forgiveness through faith. Acts 10, 34-43.
S. Forgiveness for the sinner. Luke 7, 36-50.
N. Forgiveness for all. Rom. 8, 3-21.
S. Forgiveness for all. Psa. 103, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Psa. 32, 1.
LESSON HYMN. 78, 68.
Naught taught I count as treasure,
Compared, O Christ, with thee!
Thy sorrow without number,
Thy love and joy for me.

I have to own, Lord Jesus!
Thine claims over me and mine;
Bought with thy blood most precious,
Whose can I but thine?

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. SALVATION FROM SIN, v. 1-11; John 1, 9.
Who is blessed? Why? What is implied by "forgiveness"? What is implied by "imputation"? What is implied by "guile"?
What is the condition of the sinner before forgiveness? Explain the figures used. What is the way to secure forgiveness? How do we know that we have received it? John 8, 37.
2. SALVATION FROM DANGER, v. 6-12; 2 Tim.
4, 18, Isa. 41, 10. What calamity is referred to in v. 6? What does it symbolize? Psa. 18, 4, 5, 16. What is meant by a "hiding-place"? How does God keep us from all trouble? What does he do?
Rom. 8, 28. What effect does a joyous heart have upon trouble? How will following God's leading keep us from danger? What is the difference between being guided by the eye and by the spirit? If we are guided by the eye, how only can we keep from going astray?
3. SALVATION FROM SORROW, v. 13, 14; Job 1, 21.
11, 12, 13, 26, 33. What sorrows have the worshippers? How are those who trust in God saved from them? What is it that shall compass them about? Why should this make them glad? Why ought Christians to be the happy of men?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Wherein does this lesson teach that—1. Open confession is good for the soul? 2. In God's hiding-place there is ample refuge? 3. How is God such a refuge to his people? 4. What does the Lord do for his people? 5. How does he keep us from all trouble? 6. How does he save us from danger? 7. How does he save us from sorrow? 8. How does he keep us from all trouble? 9. How does he save us from danger? 10. How does he save us from sorrow?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. If you confess you will be forgiven.
2. If you trust you will be kept.
3. If you obey
you will be blessed.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. How and in what state of "transgression,"
"iniquity," "sin," which makes forgiveness necessary? v. 1, 2.
2. How revealed is the condition of the un-forgiven sinner? v. 3, 4.
3. How abundant and prompt the forgiveness when an honest confession has been offered? v. 5.
4. How great the encouragement for other sinners in God's forgiving grace? v. 6.
5. How eager should be the sinner to call upon God while he may yet be found? v. 8.
6. How secure the condition of him who has found mercy and forgiveness? v. 7.
7. How ready should be every saved sinner to counsel and urge others in the way of peace? v. 8, 9.
8. How happy and glad the heart of him who has tasted the grace of God? v. 11.

The Burmese monarch, who has just shocked the world by the wholesale slaughter of his relatives, seems to have had trouble with his "sisters"
and his cousins and his uncles. It seems these priests are very fond of fresh pork, and for a long time it was their custom to steal two fat pigs a day from the royal sty. This is now coming to the ears of the king, so enraged him that he determined to sever all connection with the priesthood, which intention he is expected soon to put into operation.

The Last Days of Congress.

Public thanksgiving is in order,
because this Congress is so near its end. If there has ever been a Congress, since first the old bell of Independence Hall rang out "Liberty to all the land," which has been more recklessly or malignantly bad in its conduct than this, we cannot now remember it. Matters have not been brought to such a shape, by the action of the past few days, that an extra session is on many accounts desirable, to put an end to the uncertainty which stupid or rascally legislation has produced with regard to important interests; and it is by no means clear that this uncertainty can be in a fair degree removed by legislation in conference committee, which now takes the place of action in the two Houses.

Beginning with the revenue bill,
which has been sent to a committee
on a disagreement of the two Houses in respect to the tax on matches, it is very doubtful whether the committee will have power to modify the other features of the bill. Yet those other features, upon which the Houses have agreed, diminish the revenue of the Government by several millions. Just how much it is difficult to judge. This reduction comes, too, at a time when the Secretary of the Treasury has officially reported that a large deficiency in the revenue will exist. It is not possible to resist the conclusion that there are some Democratic members who rejoice at the prospect that the Government may be embarrassed and crippled, and possibly so weakened as to become dishonored. But just here begins the uncertainty which must work injury to the large business interests affected. For if the revenues fall short, so that serious impairment of the public resources and credit is probable, the next Congress will be likely, it is very evident, to take a much better position than this one has taken with respect to the National honor. There can be no confidence, therefore, that any serious reduction of the revenue will stand beyond the next extra or regular session, and meanwhile the activity of business in many important branches will be paralyzed. For this reason, it might be better for the President to veto any measure involving a dangerous impairment of the public revenue, even though he should thus render an extra session inevitable, for the uncertainty could then be more speedily terminated.
Two months of stagnation in important branches of business will really cost the country far more than two months of extra session.

The passage of the "Sundry Civil"
Appropriation bill, under suspension of the rules and without a word of debate or a moment of consideration, was a disgraceful thing in itself. But it is the more disgraceful in view of the fact that the bill contains a clause calculated to repeal other legislation adopted by the very same House, at this very same session, to arrest the refunding of the public debt and to seriously impair the public credit.
Unquestionably it would be a most disastrous as well as dishonorable thing to deprive the holders of bonds
of their right to three months notice
before the payment of their bonds or the stoppage of interest thereon. So a Democratic Committee discovered, when Mr. Hewitt, with zeal which he afterwards manly enough to acknowledge was mistaken, had caused a special examination of the subject. At the motion of that Democratic Committee, an act was passed to continue refunding on the same
just terms, and yet this act, passed after full discussion, the House has now attempted to repeal by a clause
smuggled into an appropriation bill
where it has no business, and passed under suspension of the rules and without debate. Such is Democratic fidelity to the public honor!

It is presumed that the Republican Senate will stand firm to prevent the passage of this and many other mischievous or dishonorable acts, which the House has attempted to fasten upon the appropriation bills.
Not only are the proposed measures utterly wrong in themselves—such as the repeal of provision for the expense of enforcing election laws, the prohibition of troops at points where they may be ordered by the President in the discharge of his constitutional duty, or the repeal of the election laws—but the method by which it is attempted to pass them is essentially revolutionary. It is an insult to the Senate, and a menace to free government, to inject such partisan measures into the regular appropriation bills. Every Republican Senator owes it to his own self-respect, to the party of which he is a leader, and to the free institutions of which he is a sworn guardian, to resist to the end,

come what may, each and every revolutionary step of this nature. The intelligence of the people need not be distrusted. They know where the responsibility lies. They see, too, that the ravenous pack of office seekers and jobbers—the Democratic sufflers' brigade—has overpowered the more sober Democrats, in order to make an extra session inevitable.
If the Democratic party gives any just occasion for action that involves an extra session, the Republicans
may rest assured that one will not result to their disadvantage.

Presidential Prognostications.

It is rather early to discuss presidential nominations, but the drift of the currents are already perceptible,
and in the Democratic party the set is plainly towards Tilden. The explosion of the cipher bombshell threw the camp into confusion for a while, and there was running hither
and thither, but now that the worst of it is known, the Democratic scare
is subsiding and Tilden's availability
in the Eastern tier of States gives him a strength that the party managers cannot overlook. They begin their calculations with setting down 350 votes from the solid South, and they need 49 more to win; they will put down Indiana's 15, and for the remaining 34 they must look to New Jersey with 9, Connecticut with 6,
Ohio with 22 and New York with 35.
Leaving out New York they must carry all three of the other debatable States, but they will hardly dare to set down Ohio in that category; and then again, to attempt to shape a canvass so as to include three States
of such diverse preferences as regards economic issues would involve insuperable difficulties to the Democracy. If they could carry New York alone its electoral vote singly would be sufficient, while the campaign whose objective point would be New York would be the best fitted to carry Connecticut and New Jersey as well. Thurman is the only Western candidate that ever had any availability in the East, but his adoption of the Ohio idea has damned him irrevocably in that quarter. Bayard has positive force and availability in the Eastern States, but there is a certain weariness of his virtues manifest in the Democracy that makes against him. On the other hand Tilden, in the opinion of the average politician, will seem to have greater availability even than Bayard, and meanwhile he is working, while Bayard simply stands and waits in a dignified attitude. It will be pointed out when Tilden has the management he carries New York, but when his Tammany foes get the upper hand they lead the party to defeat.
The most cogent influences in the Democratic party are decidedly towards the nomination of Tilden, and we say this notwithstanding the omens that may be taken from the persistent advocacy of Mr. Montgomery Blair.

As regards the Republican party
the situation is still involved and obscure. It is hard to gauge the strength of the Grant movement, although it certainly has great strength.
It will be necessary to wait until after his return home and until after the effervescence over his reception
has subsided before an intelligent judgment can be expressed whether the movement in his favor is a mere blaze in the stubble of the old crop,
or a deep, strong, anthracite heat
among the masses. Blaine and Sherman loom up with large but indefinite magnitude as presidential candidates, but such are the complexity and balance of forces that prediction as to the outcome would be the merest conjecture. Who could have ranked Hayes any higher than among the remote possibilities in the Cincinnati Convention? Republican politics have nothing like the definiteness of shape already taken on by Democratic politics, and at the present time all we can put down upon the slate for our readers as the heads of the tickets is Tilden and Unknown.
—Baldwin American.

We are glad to hear it. Our druggist informs us that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup sells better than any other medicine, and always gives satisfaction. Its very cheap too, costs only 25 cents a bottle.

The Potters have spent $30,000 to find out what they wanted to conceal and to conceal what they wanted to find out. Are they satisfied with their job?

Only two Democrats of the House had the honesty to dissent from the action of their party in nominating
Mr. Illsbee, who was unquestionably elected to the House, and in sending a man who was never elected. The Democrats were so anxious to make a decision, remarkable, even among verdicts on collected election cases for utter disregard of the facts, that they violated the agreement entered into with the Republicans that this case should be taken up only after the Legislative Appropriation bill had been disposed of. The haste and partisan indecency of this action can be better appreciated when it is remembered that of the sub-committee which investigated this case, a majority reported in Mr. Illsbee's favor.
The sub-committee consisted of three members—Mr. DeLoach and one Republican; and the evidence on
Mr. Illsbee's side was so convincing that one of the Democrats joined with the Republican in demanding that Mr. Illsbee be allowed to retain the seat to which he had been elected. But the Democrat who takes a stand upon principle in such a matter usually finds himself, as this Democrat did, in a very lone some position.

GROWING OLD.—How strange our ideas of growing old change as we go on in life. To the girl in her teens the ripper maiden of twenty-five seems quite aged. Twenty-five "thinks thirty-five 'an old thing.'" Thirty-five dreads forty, but congratulates herself that there may still remain
some ground to be possessed in the fifteen years before the half century is attained. But fifty does not by any means give up the battle of life. It feels middle-aged and vigorous, and thinks old age a long way in the future. Sixty remembers those who have done great things at three-score;
and one doubts if there, when he was married at once hundred and twenty,
had at all begun to feel himself an old man. It is the desire of life within us which makes us feel young so long.

Ex-President Woolsey has a radical remedy for the cure of the anti-Chinese fever in California. Instead of trying to meet the problem by legislation, he thinks it would be well
first to have the Californians suffer a change of heart. The present bill he considers a violation of international law and treaties. He does not believe that there will ever be a large immigration of Chinese, unless a great famine should arise. The immigration has never been large, and has increased but little in twelve or fifteen years. The present bill would drive back the Chinese students in this country, who are carrying our arts and our religion to China.

—For Stiffness and Soreness of the muscles and joints of the body, Rheumatism, Neuralgia—in fact any ache
or pain of the body—nothing equals Keller's Roman Liniment. Sold by all Druggists.

The country, regardless of party,
does not seem to be particularly pleased with its forecast of Democratic rule.

From all parts of the country reports come of the immense sales and
increasing demand for that deserv-
ingly popular Sewing Machine, The Old Reliable "STANDARD," the
price of which the proprietors wisely
reduced to $20, including all the at-
tachments, and at once secured for
them a popularity among the people far beyond that ever yet attain-
ed by any other machine at any
price, the consequence of which is,
agents are leaving the old high priced
machines, and seeking territory for
the "STANDARD." Knowing from
experience that with the best goods
at the lowest price they can outsell
all other Machines, where the super-
ior quality and low price is made
known. This splendid Machine
combines all the improvements, is
far ahead of all others in beauty and
durability of its work, ease of management, light running and certainty
of operation, is sensibly made upon
sound principles, with positive working parts all steel, and can be safely
put down as the very perfection of a Serviceable Sewing Machine, in
every particular, that will outlast
any Machine, and at a price far down
below any other. It is thoroughly
warranted for five years. Kept in order free of charge. And sent to any part of the country for examination
by the customer before payment of
the bill. We can predict equally as
large a demand for them in this
section as in others. Families desiring the best Machine manufactured
should write direct to the Factory,
and enterprising persons wishing to seize the chance should apply for desirable an agency. See advertisement in another part of this paper.
Address, Standard Machine Co., Cor.
Broadway and Clinton Place, New York.

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

The Land of the Zulu.

On the 21st inst., a British column, consisting of a portion of the Twenty-fourth Regiment, a battery of artillery, and 600 native auxiliaries, was utterly annihilated near the Tugela River by 20,000 Zulus, who captured a valuable convoy of 102 wagons, 1,000 oxen, two cannons, 400 shot and shell, 250,000 pounds of ammunition, 93,000 pounds weight of provisions and the colors of the Twenty-fourth Regiment.

That was the news that flashed over the world from Cape Town, South Africa, on Monday. In some of the old school histories there is a picture of a half-naked negro, dancing before a couple of fat-faced, squat individuals, with long-stemmed pipes in their mouths, which the pupil learns by gazing at the small letter caption are "Views in Cape Colony; Hottentot and Dutch Farmers, or Boers."

As there is an air of easy repose about the Dutch farmers and an appearance of worry and fright about the negro, the pupil may be pardoned if, in his young ignorance, he gets the impression that "Hottentot" is the signification of a man compelled to stand on a hot griddle or something else, and dance and dance away for the protection of his feet till the Dutch farmers or "Boers" give him leave to come off. From this the pupil—still in his young ignorance—may get the idea that the Dutch farmer is something of a bully over the Hottentot, and his belief is not lessened when he turns further on and finds the aforesaid Boer with a long whip in his hand lashing a team of oxen with an air of being quite in the present century it came into possession of England; that the Dutch farmers, not liking the idea of coming under English rule, packed up their goods and took their cattle and moved northward across the Vaal River, where, having driven out the native tribes, they settled, forming an independent colony, under the name of the Transvaal Republic; that southeast of them, near the Indian Ocean, is a mountainous country, inhabited by savage tribes of Kafirs, the most warlike of which is the Zulu, therefore known as Zululand; that finally the Transvaal came under the English Government also, though the Boers still preserve their nationality.

There is in this city a member of a London firm of wool dealers who spent nearly ten years in Cape Colony, and became thoroughly familiar with the people, the habits of the natives and the relations between them and the Boers. For it is the Boers up in the Transvaal that are always the first to be attacked, their territory being farthest north and containing altogether not more than six thousand inhabitants. The thickly settled part is south in the old colony, about Cape Town and the Cape of Good Hope, the population there being chiefly English, many of them very wealthy. Concerning the news of the defeat of the English soldiers yesterday, the gentleman above-mentioned, who is an Englishman himself, says the English authorities may be blamed for it.

"There seems to have been some awkwardness about it," he said. "It is no use for English soldiers to go out to fight the Kafirs unless they know something about the Kafirs' habits and their mode of fighting. The details of this last fight are not known here, but they are known in my opinion the Tugela River affair will turn out to be the same old story of a second Braddock defeat. These soldiers and officers go out among them, knowing nothing of their habits, and get themselves into trouble to get both."

"Have not some of the tribes become domesticated?"

"Yes, the Hottentots and Bushmen. They never amounted to much as warlike tribes. They are both small in stature—the Bushmen not over three feet high. Both races are too nearly extinct to make trouble, even if they were disposed to. They have been beaten so often by the powerful Zulu Kafirs that they are glad to get on among the Dutch settlers and work for their living. They dig trenches and herd cattle principally. Both these tribes are broken up and have long lived in subjection to the Boers. It is the Red Kafir Zulu Kafir who is doing the trouble now. They live on the borders of the Transvaal. Their weapons of war originally were clubs and spears, the spears being made of hard wood. But for years they have been getting guns and by this time they must be well supplied both with arms and ammunition. Although there was a law against supplying them with guns or ammunition without a license, in times of peace they did not have much trouble to get both. Many of the Zulu Kafirs were settled in the Transvaal, engaged in farming and cattle raising. Ordinarily they are quiet enough. The danger has always been from their being stirred up by the Red Kafirs. This latter tribe is more warlike yet than the Zulus. They are a very haughty race, and have never shown any disposition to dwell among the settlers. Whenever a Red Kafir outbreak was threatened formerly the settlers had two things to—the protecting of themselves from the Zulu Kafirs in their midst and against the Red Kafirs outside their territory."

The Zulu Kafir and the Red Kafir grow to about the same size. Their average height is about five feet ten inches. They are very fleet of foot, and are often employed to carry the mails or to errands of long distance on foot. I have seen the Zulu Kafir in street fights. They are tough fellows when aroused and fight like Turks. In Cape Town many may be frequently seen. I speak of the half civilized or domesticated Kafir. There are few but what are civilized in the old Colony. Some live among the mountains and carry on traffic with the settlers, preserving their independence, but they are not to be feared. They are in the midst of a thickly settled country, and are, it may be said, at the mercy of the setters should the settlers be aroused. It is back in the Transvaal that the danger is threatened.

"Do you think the war will soon be over?"

"That is hard to tell. It will keep on, I suppose, until the settlers turn out and drive the savages back. They are more effective than the regular soldiers. They understand all about the Kafir's habits; soldiers taken there from England know nothing about them."

Another former resident of Cape Colony, who spent about four years in the Transvaal, described the whole cause to the outbreak to the Dutch farmers. The Boers, he says, are the most unsocial people in the world, and are destitute of common sympathies even to the point of depravity. If the Kafirs are hostile to them he claims the Boers are to blame. The latter have persecuted them, have taken their cattle from them, have compelled them to work at herding and trench-digging, have practiced impositions and penalties upon them even to the point of selling their women and children as slaves. They have been known to trade children and women off for cows and horses. The ones who have suffered most from them are the Bushmen and Hottentots. The Boers, almost without exception, hold that the savages are fit for nothing but slavery. They are not, or were not ten years ago, allowed to enter a church or to be anywhere within hearing of public worship. To have the blackman go into a place of worship the Boer held was sacrilege. The belief that the blacks had no chance of a hereafter, such as the Boer looked forward to was widespread and general. In every dealing with the native the Boer has manifested his feeling of superiority and his disregard of the former's interests. Instances have been known of a single Boer laying claim to twenty head of cattle of a single native chief under the pretence that they were found trespassing on his land. At the same time the law of the country provides that cattle found trespassing shall be impounded and held till damages have been assessed and paid. The Boer, however, in the majority of cases takes complete possession of them."

"On one occasion a native chief, finding it hard to live among the Boers, was invited by a neighboring chief to take his people and go and live with his tribe. The chief and his people, with their cattle and goods, started to leave the Boers' territory, and had almost reached the border when they were overtaken by a commando of Boers on horseback, who drove them back, took all their cattle from them, and compelled them to remain among them. The chief, leaving his goods and everything, made a second attempt to escape, when he was overtaken and shot."

"How is the Boer with regard to English residents and missionaries?"

"The Boer is constitutionally unsocial, and devilish. In 1854, when I first went to the town of Potchefstroom, the Transvaal, there was great difficulty for Englishmen to get permission to reside there. The Boer Magistrate, or 'landvoord,' would usually object to giving a license, on the ground that the English had caused their removal from the old colony, and they did not propose to give them a chance to drive them out of their new territory. The missionaries tried for many years to reach the savages north of the Transvaal, but were prevented by the Boers. They objected to the savages being taught, on the ground that they had no souls. They estimated them as among the lower order of animals. The Boer has been a great obstacle to civilization in South Africa. They are the kind of people that believe in doing everything in a particular way, because it was done in that way by their grandfathers. For this reason it has been the slowest colony to develop in the world. Less than ten years ago the Dutch farmers scarcely knew what a threshing machine was. The Centennial did a great deal to open up trade with the old colony itself. There have been large emigrations from time to time of French and English residents, and they are doing wonders toward infusing a spirit of enterprise into the place. Around Cape Town are some of the finest institutions and residences to be seen in any part of the world."

The Transvaal has a territory of about 50,000 square miles. It is inhabited by a Dutch population of about 30,000. The four principal villages are Orkneyburg, Zoutpansberg, Potchefstroom and Vryburg, separated by a distance of two hundred and three hundred miles from each other. Potchefstroom is the principal one. The distance from Natal, near the mouth of the Tugela River, to Cape Town is about eight hundred miles. —Philadelphia Times.

"Going Home."

THESE aren't a day in the year but what one can see just such a parting as yesterday morning took place at the Union depot. Man and wife had come down to the train and the husband had fully persuaded her that her health was failing, and that she ought to go home on a six week's visit. She thought she felt even better than usual, but her husband knew best about these things, of course. This wife seemed to have made her preparations quickly, and had not yet said what was on her mind to say. It lacked thirty-five minutes of train time, and as they sat down in the waiting room she said:

"Now, Henry, the last time I went away—"

"Just wait—I want to see if that's our train," interrupted the husband as she rose up. "Going out he was absent seven minutes. When he returned she was ready to say:

"I wanted to say to you that the neighbors—"

"Did I give you the check for your ticket?" she suddenly inquired.

She found it in her pocket, restored it, and began again:

"Of course I have confidence in you, but—"

"You remember that you must not change cars at the Junction," he said as he looked at his watch. "When you reach there you will hear men yelling change cars for this and that place, but you sit right still."

"Haven't I been over the road four different times, and don't I know all the stations? Now, Henry, although there will be no one in the house but you, I have—"

"Did you forget that lunch basket?" he excitedly asked as he looked around and under the seat.

She had it on her lap all the time. As soon as she had assured him of its safety she said:

"You now come from the office every evening at six, and of course, I shall expect—"

"That's our train!" he exclaimed as he leaped up and grabbed for the ticket.

"Dear me, but I wanted to say to you—"

"There goes the bell—I'll be let—let me kiss you—good-bye, dear?"

A man across the aisle who seemed to know how matters stood, looked at his watch and then called out:

"It lacks just twenty-two minutes of train-time rose up and walked to the door, but Henry was clear of the depot, and all she could do was to give one of her hand-boxes a kick and mutter:

"I'll pay him for this—I'll return unexpectedly!" —Free Press.

Isolated Alaska.

A REPORTER of the Chronicle called on William Gouverneur Morris, appointed Special Commissioner by the Government to make an examination of the condition of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory.

"What is your opinion of the mineral wealth of Alaska?"

"Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on the Territory. Alaska is undoubtedly rich in gold, silver, copper, iron, platinum, coal, and other mines. I look for one of the greatest mining excitements of the age at the coast of Alaska, and who is now in this city, and was accorded an interview, in which Mr. Morris outlined briefly some of the points of his forthcoming report on

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE SAUCY ROGUE.

FROM THE ROMAN.
There is a saucy rogue, well known
To youth and gray-headed men—
A boy, with eyes that mirth bespeak,
With early locks and dimpled cheek;
He has a wit, demure and air,
But maiden fair,
His dart may wound you, unaware!

With bow and arrows in his hand,
He wanders up and down the land;
His jolly sport to him a dart,
At some poor maiden's fluttering heart;
She wonders what has hurt her there,
Al, maiden fair,
Take care, take care!
His dart may wound you, unaware!

Her nimble hands the distaff ply;
A gallant soldier-lad rides by;
He gives her such a loving glance,
Her heart stands still, as in a trance,
And doubtless spies the maiden fair,
Quick, maiden fair,
Give heed, take care,
Else you may lose her, unaware!

Who stands there laughing at the door?
That rogue, who triumphs thus once more!
Both lad and maiden he has hit,
And laughs he through his doublet split,
And he sports him every where;
Now here, now there,
He mocks your care,
You fall his victim, unaware.

Now who so masterful and brave
To catch and hold this saucy knave?
Whoever binds him strong and fast,
His name and deed shall always last,
But, if this dangerous task you dare,
Beware! take care!
Lost till you face,
The rogue may catch you, unaware!

—Harper's Bazar.

JOSEPH'S ADVENTURE.

"Can't you tell us some of your adventures?" I asked of my friend Joseph, who had returned from his many travels in the bush, and was sitting with me and my wife. And though he had been absent so long, he was so to speak, a young man yet.

"Adventures? Well, I have met with plenty. Rough ones, some of them."

"Please tell us of one," chimed in Mary.

Joseph laughed: "I can tell you of a queer one that I met with in the mountains."

"O yes, do! Which mountains?"

"In California—up in one of its wild districts."

"That will be the very thing," said Joseph, running his fingers through his hair and smiling at my wife. "I'll soften down things in the telling as well as my blunt speech and uncivilized notions of thought will admit of, and you must excuse the rest."

"Oh, I'll excuse anything. Please begin."

"When I started from home to settle in infrequent districts," began Joseph. "I set up a theory that no man should ask a woman to marry him, till he has proved his worth to her. It is surprising how much you begin to think of a wife West yonder, which arises, I suppose, from the extreme loneliness of one's existence. I was no exception. The land I took up was in the Rogue River Valley, and after I had got it a bit ship-shape I worked away with only one object in view—to bring home a wife."

"But, Joseph, had you selected a wife?" I asked.

"No. I intended to do so as soon as I could, though you may say I was rather young to be thinking of it. I worked on, and was pretty successful. I built me a house, got a considerable stock of cattle, made a flower-garden for my wife, and even put up the pegs and nails she would want to hang her dresses on. I intended that same autumn to mount my horse, ride through the Wallamet Valley, find my wife and bring her home."

"At the notion of courting in that off-hand style we laughed a little. Joseph laughed too, as if the recollection pleased him."

"You think it strange, I see. It was not so very strange in those days out there, where girls were as scarce as hens. There was not a girl within forty miles of me; and I assure you that the very thought of one, as I drove those nails for her garments to hang upon through me life a thrill. You don't love? Go West yourself and try it."

"But I do believe."

"I had about 250 head of cattle, a good house with a garden, a young orchard, vegetables growing, sweet-scented flowers in readiness for the wife I hoped to bring home to bless me and to take care of these my possessions. And what do you think happened to them?"

"We could not tell. There came such a plague of grasshoppers upon the valley that everything perished. Crops, orchard, flowers, grass—every green and delightful and promising thing, the grasshoppers destroyed all. You remember the second chapter of Joel?"

"I do."

"The land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness." I said. "My stock died—at least the greater portion of it; the cattle had nothing to feed upon. Yes, it was complete and absolute ruin."

Joseph paused a moment, mentally looking at the past.

"I considered myself disappointed in love, too," he resumed in the quaintest of tones. "Though I had not yet been out to find my girl, I knew she was somewhere in that other valley, grasshoppers ate up everything I felt that I had been jilted. It actually gives me a pang now to think of those useless pegs on which my imagination had so often seen a girl's pink cotton dress and white sun-bonnet."

Joseph gave a great sigh. He was an eccentric fellow.

"I became misanthropic—said to myself that between Fate and the grasshoppers I had been hardly used. Picking up my books and a few other traps, I bade adieu to the Rogue River Valley forever, and started for the mountains. It was a longish journey, as I had to drive before me the stock which was left me. There, in the mountains, I settled down again, built myself a fort and played hermit. No jilting girls should come near me now."

"A fort?"

"A regular fort—a stockade eighteen feet high, with an embankment four feet high around it, and a strong gate in the middle. My tent was in the midst of the enclosure, with my books and household goods, firearms, and all the rest of my property stowed away in it."

"Were you afraid of Indians?"

"Indians and white men. Yes, I saw a good many Indians at first, and the range of my rifle. They learned to keep away from my fort, finding it did not pay to attempt an invasion. Down in the valley below there were mining camps; and you perhaps know what some of the dangers of such camps are. I sold beef—that is, heads of cattle—to the miners; and as I had sometimes a tidy sum of money by me, it was necessary to be careful."

"What a strange life for a young man!" said Mary. "For you, Joseph?"

"I herded my cattle, drove them to market, cooked, studied, wrote and indulged in a mixture of misanthropy and rife-practice. By the time I had mounted I felt quite at home, and was getting rich. After all, the life had its charms. A man cannot quite tire of it when he is but a few years out of his teens."

"And the girl-wife?"

"I am coming to her. Having had time to forget my ill-usage, a reaction set in, you see, and I thought, after all, I must ride to the Wallamet to see after my girl. But I was not in a hurry over it that I had been before. This is all very dull, you will say, but there'll be some stir presently."

"It is not at all dull."

"One Sunday afternoon (How did I know it was Sunday?) you ask. Because I had kept count of the days all along—kept my diary regularly—one Sunday afternoon I was sitting outside writing, when a shadow fell across the paper, and, looking up, I beheld a skeleton standing there before me. As I was to be so long, my hair stood on end as I stared at the specter. He was the merest boy in years, pretty and delicate by nature, and evidently reduced to his shadowy state by starvation. His story was soon told. He had left Boston on board a vessel bound for the Northwest Coast, had been wrecked at the mouth of the Umpqua, and been wandering about in the mountains ever since, subsisting on roots and berries."

"He was—"

"No, I assure you," interrupted Joseph with an amused look at my wife, "the boy was not a young woman in disguise, if that's what you are thinking. He was just a poor, weak, half-starved fellow named Edwards. I fed and nursed him until he was able to work for himself, and then I got Sam Chong Sung to let him take up a claim adjacent to my own, promising to favor the Chinaman in a beef-contract if he would be good to the boy. I still continued to see a great deal of him."

"And did Edwards succeed?"

"Yes, he got on. One day two Chinamen stole some of Sam Chong Sung's horses, and he offered four hundred dollars to Edwards if he would go after the thieves and track them. Edwards asked my advice, and I encouraged him to go, telling him where I feared he would find the men. So he started in pursuit, and I confess I missed him."

"Again Joseph paused. We did not interrupt him."

"A man came to my fort one day who was naked and starving. He was a bad-looking fellow, but you will say a man naturally does look bad when his clothes are nowhere and his bones protrude through the skin. I clothed him, fed him, cared for him kindly until he was able to travel, and then he went away. The next Sunday I was sitting outside my fort, as customary on that leisure day, reading some translations from the Greek poets—for I dare say you remember I was never much of a hand at the original when I studied to look off my book, I beheld a vision."

"A what?"

"A vision. A vision of a lovely woman. She was riding up the approach to my fort on a fine horse, riding gracefully and slowly, as if to give me time to get over my surprise; and I believe I needed it. The picture she made in my mind now; I see the very flicker of the shadow and the light across the road, and the glitter of some steel that fastened her horse's trappings as he arched his neck in impatience of her restraining hand. Are you tired, old friend?"

"Never less so in my life."

"That vision, breaking in suddenly, as it did, upon my solitude, gave me the queerest sensations. I was just spell-bound. Not so she. Reining in her horse at my gate, she squared round on her saddle and looked at me, silently asking my assistance in dismounting."

"—and then, at her request, gently preferred, went to put up and feed her horse. Had she dropped from the clouds? I did not know."

"Well?"

"If you'll believe me, when I turned indoors my guest had got her habit off. Evidently she meant to make herself at home. A tall, young, beautiful, well-dressed woman! Her eyes were large, black and melting; her hair was superb, her manner easy. She was hungry, she said; would I give her something to eat? And while I was making preparations to give her of my best she read aloud one of the Greek translations—an ode to Diana—commenting upon it herself. That she was a woman of culture and education, whatever might have brought her into her present strange position, was obvious. Well now," continued Joseph, "you can guess whether a young man, isolated in the mountains, ruined by the grasshoppers and jilted by the girl of the Wallamet Valley, was bewildered or not. Entertaining goddesses was not in my line."

"How long did she stay?"

"Wait a bit. What with reading and eating, our acquaintance improved fast. She offered to sing a song and gave me. 'Kate Kearney,' I might have lost my head to her perhaps—so saying nothing of my heart—but for a certain inward latent doubt. I did not care that my girl should ride about, elegantly attired, on prancing horses, and drop down unexpectedly on her—"

"Still, it was a pleasant feeling to find one's self near her, and certainly a novel one. I asked her her history. She told it me. She was of a good New England family, reared in affluence, well educated and accomplished, but by a freak of fortune she had become reduced to poverty and exile from home."

"What was it, Joseph?"

"All that indeed. The old story, I suppose, but I did not ask her. She had made her way to California, resolved to get on and get money; and she had got it. She went about from camp to camp, writing and various articles needed by the miners and others—sold them these things, wrote letters for them, sang to them, nursed them when sick, and carried their letters express to the nearest post-office. For all these services she received large payments, and she had also a good deal of rough gold given her as specimens."

"But what had brought her to you that day?"

"She had not told me herself then, but presently I asked her. I shall never forget the smile with which she turned to answer. It pretty nearly disarmed me. We were sitting somewhat close, her flowing silk gown touched my knees. Altogether I began to think of those useless pegs in my house down in Rogue River Valley. But what she said pulled up my wandering thoughts—"

"Shall you be surprised to hear that I came to do you a real service?" she asked. And she went on to relate that having to pass the previous night in a place not far from this, she had chanced to overhear a plan for murdering and robbing me, the villain-in-chief of the plot being the starved and naked wretch whom I had sheltered and nursed away from many days previously. All in a moment, while I was pondering on the doubtful problem of gratitude, a fancy came over me that she might not be telling the truth—that it might be her own vision; and I fully hinted as much. "A woman does not trifle with subjects like these, nor does she deceive when she goes out of her way to do a service," she averred. "I resolved from that morning, by one way or another, to save your life."

"And did you succeed?"

"I did not. A young man with a reputation to sustain up there in the mountains couldn't have done it, now?"

"I asked Joseph quaintly, which set us both laughing."

He went on thoughtfully: "She finally rode away, not having been able to find the horse, leaving me in anything but a pleasant frame of mind. From telling myself I was a bear, I turned to the other subject—the contemplated robbery and murder of myself. Had she simply invented that little tale, or was it a true bill? I felt inclined to believe it the latter. Anyway, I deemed it well to be prepared for all contingencies, barring and bolting my fort against intruders and sitting up late over the fire. The next morning three or four men rode up, one of whom was the traitor, my former naked and hungry protégé. He no longer attempted to conceal his character from me, he said he was a guard, and his comrades were determined to 'clean out' the Chinese camp, and he asked me to join them in the raid. I was on my guard in answering him, simply saying that I was not a soldier, and that I was not a Chinese. He said that they were my friends and customers, and I thought they had best be let alone. With that he went off. That same afternoon Edwards came in, having recaptured the horse, and he was very blue, and asked leave to stay with the horses at my place till next day. I said nothing to Edwards of the past, but he talked of making a raid on the Chinese camp, and he said he was guard, for it was my fort on which the attack was undoubtedly to be made."

"Dusk came on. I sent Edwards, dead tired to bed, made a great fire in the tent, and sat by it, facing the north. The villain! He made believe to have been drinking, and put that forward as a plea for asking shelter until the morning. The instant he was inside I made the gate fast, driving the big wooden pins home with an ax. I caught a gleam from his eyes as I was doing this which—"

"But why not have made the gate fast before he entered?"

"Because, he was safer inside than out. A conviction had come over me that this man was some desperate character. His comrades were no doubt waiting near, and his plan had been quietly to open the gate to them."

"I wanted none, but for your understanding each other, my rifle and I. This villain understood us too. I don't think, either, that he liked to see Edwards sleeping in the tent. The guard was not for much, but still, he was somebody. It would now be a contest of skill between the fellow and me. He was waiting his opportunity, and so was I. Of all villainous-looking men, I was the worst-looking. Tall, swarthy, black-bearded, and with a hard face that must have been handsome once, and fierce black eyes gleaming with evil. He sat on one side of the hearth, I on the other, our eyes fixed on one another."

"You guess, I dare say, that I have a quick ear, for you know what my temperament is—all sensitive consciousness. My good hearing had been cultivated, too, by listening for the Indians. By and by I detected a very stealthy movement outside the fort, and then a faint chirrup, such as a young squirrel might make. Up sprang the man, but I covered him with my rifle, cocked. He saw the movement, showed his teeth and drew out a pistol, but not before I had ordered him to throw down his arms or die! He hesitated, he saw that in my eye and aspect which made him quail. While I held the rifle leveled and my finger on the trigger he threw down his arms—pistol and knife—with a dreadful oath. I had the best of him, and he knew it, for before he could have put his pistol into form or rush on me with his knife the ball from my rifle would have been in him. His language was awful—and we are not nice in that respect, you know. He demanded to be let out of the house, denouncing me as a robber and a murderer. To all his ravings I had but one answer—to be quiet, to obey me and he should live; dare to disobey me and he should die. He sat there, cowed, on the opposite side of the fire, not daring to make even a doubtful motion. Then I told him what I knew—that I had heard what he was and what he meant to do. With that he broke down utterly, or pretended to do so—cried like a child, declaring that now he knew my pluck, and I had been the first man to get the better of him, he loved me like a brother. All the same, love or love, he had to sit where he was, and I in front of him with my rifle on my knees. There was a long night before us; he could have no liberty in it, and the restraint was horrible to him. One moment he laughed uneasily, the next cursed, the next cried. It was a strange experience, was it not? To pass away the time, I asked him to relate the history of his life. He said he would, but would first of all just shake the respect he bore me. Touching my rifle significantly, I pointed to the stick lying across the hearth-place between us. "That's your boundary-line, my man," said I, "don't go striding over it, or I'll shoot. This sent him into a fit of sul-luneness."

"What came of it?"

"We must have remained in this position till midnight. Several times I heard slight sounds outside the fort, but, though he too listened, he dared not respond to them; he could do nothing. After a while these sounds ceased; his associates, rightly judging that something or other had gone wrong, had left the camp, and he was left, tired of waiting. The fellow's head was bent, his chin rested on his breast, his shaggy beard spreading over it like a mantle. He suffered martyrdom. He and by his vigilance for an instant. Once started on his own history, the subject seemed to have a fascination for him. He had been honestly 'raised,' he said, by good and loving parents in the State of Missouri—had passionately loved a young girl in the town where he lived; and his description of her was so pretty and vivid that I declare it brought into my mind that other girl who was waiting for me down in the Wallamet Valley. To get the means to marry her he resolved to go to California. He went, was successful, and, full of joyful anticipations, returned to find that she had married another man. He, the husband, had played the part of a villain, and he had killed her. When he came out of the brain fever which this news gave him, he was invited to an evening party in the town. To this party came his love, and her husband; and when he put out his hand to welcome her eyes met, and both knew then how they had been betrayed. From that hour the man looked evil, and his first victim was the girl. He became a desperate outlaw. Once again he saw his love—met her in the streets of Sacramento; she was married again, and she turned from him with a cry of aversion. He might be a desperate man now, he added, but he had had his trials. I suppose I should have done society a benefit had I shot him as he sat there, but I did not. Perhaps you won't believe that I felt a sort of pity for the fellow, but I did. Well, morning came at last, and I sent Edwards to get the gate open, and escorted my visitor out, telling him that there was not room for him and me in that part of the country, and that he had better suit it for another."

"And did he?"

"I suppose so, for he never attempted to molest me again. Not long after I heard of his death. He met his fate at the mountain."

"And what of that pretty Amazon, Joseph? I'm sure she was almost as good to you as a guardian angel, coming on horseback to give you warning."

"Was she not? And I had returned it by behaving so unkindly to her! But now I just ask you, would it have been proper to let her come in on that week's visit, and I a young man with a reputation?"

"At any rate, you did not. But have you ever seen her since?"

"Once; it was in Frisco. She was married, and staying at the same hotel with me. Her husband was a tall, dashing man—what with you would be called a gentleman—and very wealthy. She had been lucky, you see. I knew her as soon as she came into the dining-room, and in a few minutes I saw that she recognized me; but she did not take any notice, neither did I. She told me with her eyes that she remembered, but there was an appealing glance in them which I interpreted rightly. After dinner we got into conversation, the three of us, just as strangers will do in a hotel, and I found the husband very intelligent, well-informed man. In parting I got just a word aside with her. 'I am glad to meet you again, and thus,' I said—'Hush!' she answered. 'I thank you for your recollection. In the past of a life that has been composed of ups and downs there is generally something or other lying on the memory that we don't care to recall or proclaim to the world.'"

"And about that young girl in the Wallamet Valley?"

"I never found her," replied Joseph, plaintively. "Truth to say, I never started fairly to look for her. Perhaps it's as well."—D. C. MacDonell, in Lippincott's Magazine for March.

—There's many a slipper 'twixt the boy and the stripper.

Our Young Folks.

AMY'S PSALM.

Darling little Amy,
Only two years old,
Sitting on the hearth rug,
Hears the story told

Of the tender Shepherd,
Who has loved once heals
By the pleasant waters,
Through the flowery meads.

Listening intently,
Close by mamma's side,
Cuddling over the lesson,
Not a bit of noise

Makes the tiny maiden,
Close by mamma's side;
But at length she rises,
Opens blue eyes wide;

Little arms uplift she,
"Take her!" baby cries;
"Amy say a lesson!"
And she looks so wise.

Saying words so holy,
In her childish way,
"The Lord He is my Shepherd,"
"Aye, of such as she," we say.

"He maketh me," she murmurs,
And as if from vague alarms,
Shrugs up her golden head,
"To lie down in mamma's arms!"

SAINT MARY ANN.

Two girls sat at one desk, bending over two slates. The teacher, Miss Moulton, thought they were engaged with the problem of the fox and the grayhound, in Davie's "First Lessons in Algebra."

"What are you going to wear to the sleighing-party to-morrow night?"

"This was one of the slates. Letty Marks wrote it, then nudged Sue Butterworth, who sat next to her. Sue read it out of the corners of her eyes, then wrote on the other slate:

"Perhaps I shan't go. I haven't been invited."

"Pshaw!" Letty wrote, "that is just affectation. You know you will be invited. You know Brate's going to invite you. He told me he was. So you wear, because you've decided what it shall be, you know you have."

"I'm going to wear my plaid," Sue's slate responded, and added, "Let's do our hair to-night, and have curls."

"All right," said Letty's slate, as cordially as is possible to a slate. "I'm going to put sugar and water on my hair to make it curl."

"I'm going to put molasses on mine," Sue's slate replied, and then out at which Letty laughed, and was called up to the teacher's stand, and made to sit near Miss Moulton till the bell sounded for recess.

Then the two correspondents were reunited, and were joined by four other girls to discuss the prospective sleighing-party and the party.

It was Brayton Steadman's affair. His father had allowed him to engage the great omnibus-sleigh. Brayton had selected five boys to join him, and each of the six boys was to invite a girl. They were to ride up and down the principal streets of the village, around the Square, and then out to the farm, where they were to have games and one of Aunt Brayton's rare suppers; then home again by moonlight to the music of sleigh-bells, stopping on the way to serenade Miss Moulton.

The favored few boys had already been invited—the cream of the High School—and each favored boy had gone through the formality of asking if he could have the pleasure of some one or two girls' company, and each certain girl had replied in ceremonious writing that he might.

"I don't see the use of all this bothering writing," Jessie Greenleaf had said, as she tore up the ninth note-sheet she had spoiled in her effort to reply to her invitation. "I don't see why Tom Clayborne couldn't just come at recess and ask me to go with him, and let me write a few lines on the note in his hands. When he had opened and read it, a surprised and puzzled look came into his face, which the girls greeted with shouts of laughter."

Then Sue, eager to be known as the author of this laughable joke, hastened to explain how she had managed to "sell" Saint Mary Ann. She and the girls of course expected him to join in the laugh against the saint—he had always been ready to laugh at her. But, instead of laughing, he looked quite grave—somewhat resentful, indeed, while his face flushed to crimson. The girls began to feel that they had made a mistake. Some of them, anxious to clear themselves, said it was too bad in Sue to make such a fool of Mary Ann.

"You must go right away, Sue, and let her know that it is all a joke," said Letty.

"No, don't tell her that," said Brayton; and there was something in his tone which arrested the girls. "I'll arrange the matter."

"What will you do about it?" one of the girls asked. "Will you tell Miss Moulton?"

"Do about it?" said Brayton, with a certain haughty pride of manner. "I shall keep the engagement which Sue Butterworth has made for me."

With that, he turned straight to the school-room, and over to Saint Mary Ann's desk. The rebuked girls followed with subdued manner. Sue with something like dismay at her heart. They approached near enough to hear Brayton say:

"We're going to start early to the party, Mary Ann—about seven. We fellows have promised to be at home and in bed by eleven, so we want the girls to be prompt."

"She looks like a plaster-of-paris image of the Virgin," said poor Sue, with a nervous giggle, meant to keep back the tears of humiliation and disappointment, which, nevertheless, were the next moment rolling down her cheeks.

Sue did not go to the party.—Youth's Companion.

her sitting in the midst of all our fun, with her face drawn down, and her lips pinched together, and to see her shying off from the boys as if they were monkeys she was afraid of."

"I don't believe she dislikes boys as much as she pretends to," said Sue, and then she added, suddenly, "O, girls, let's write her a note and sign Brate Steadman's name to it, asking the pleasure of her company to-morrow evening. She's such a simpleton she'll never suspect that it's a hoax, and she'll answer it, and I'll warrant she'll not decline; I'll get Brate to let us see her answer."

The girls applauded this, agreeing that the joke would be delightful. Not one of the thoughtless group entered a protest. Not even Jessie gave a thought to the pain and humiliation which might attend this sport.

Sue wrote her note in a large, boyish hand, and, at a convenient opportunity, it was laid on Mary Ann's desk by one of the boys who had been told the secret.

This was during school hours, when the boy was waiting for the recitation bench. There the note lay unopened during the session.

"Saint Mary Ann would no more touch it during school hours than she would handle a viper," said Letty.

At the ringing of the noon-bell, Mary Ann tidied up her desk, and then unconscious that she was the target of a dozen eyes, opened the note and read.

"O, she's blushing! I never saw her blush before," said Sue, in a half-whisper, to the group of eager, tittering girls.

"Really, I think it's almost too bad," said Jessie. "She's never done any harm, except not to be interesting."

"Now she's going to answer it," said Letty, as Saint Mary Ann brought forth writing materials, and proceeded, with much pains-taking, to write, while the spies kept up a continual whispering and giggling.

"O, it's too funny!" said Sue, scarcely able to whisper, she was in such a flutter.

One girl said, with a laugh, that it was as funny as a play to see the saint's prim face over that note; another assented, with a titter, and added that it was the jolliest thing that ever was.

"-see," cried Letty, "she's looking in the dictionary to find how to spell some word! I almost know it's 'accompany'—she's looking for it."

"O, look, look!" Sue exclaimed. "She's tearing up her reply, and is going to write another. It's such an important matter, she can't suit herself. O, it is amusing! But the funniest part will be to see Brate receive it. Won't he be surprised? O, it will be the greatest fun that ever was."

And so the comments continued amid the laughing confederates until they perceived that Saint Mary Ann had the reply ready to be delivered. Then Letty went over to her, and by way of offering her services as mail-carrier, asked Mary Ann what she had been doing.

Sitting up very straight and rigid, and prim as a walking-stick, she relaxed enough to say, in very precise words, that she had been writing a note to Brayton Steadman to signify her acceptance of his escort to the party of the next night.

Letty offered to deliver the note. As she received it, and turned to look at Mary Ann, she gave her confederates a wink.

Brayton was out in the hall, and thither the girls went trooping, and looked about him, giggling and tittering. Letty placed the note in his hands. When he had opened and read it, a surprised and puzzled look came into his face, which the girls greeted with shouts of laughter."

Then Sue, eager to be known as the author of this laughable joke, hastened to explain how she had managed to "sell" Saint Mary Ann. She and the girls of course expected him to join in the laugh against the saint—he had always been ready to laugh at her. But, instead of laughing, he looked quite grave—somewhat resentful, indeed, while his face flushed to crimson. The girls began to feel that they had made a mistake. Some of them, anxious to clear themselves, said it was too bad in Sue to make such a fool of Mary Ann.

"You must go right away, Sue, and let her know that it is all a joke," said Letty.

"No, don't tell her that," said Brayton; and there was something in his tone which arrested the girls. "I'll arrange the matter."

"What will you do about it?" one of the girls asked. "Will you tell Miss Moulton?"

"Do about it?" said Brayton, with a certain haughty pride of manner. "I shall keep the engagement which Sue Butterworth has made for me."

With that, he turned straight to the school-room, and over to Saint Mary Ann's desk. The rebuked girls followed with subdued manner. Sue with something like dismay at her heart. They approached near enough to hear Brayton say:

"We're going to start early to the party, Mary Ann—about seven. We fellows have promised to be at home and in bed by eleven, so we want the girls to be prompt."

"She looks like a plaster-of-paris image of the Virgin," said poor Sue, with a nervous giggle, meant to keep back the tears of humiliation and disappointment, which, nevertheless, were the next moment rolling down her cheeks.

Sue did not go to the party.—Youth's Companion.

The salary of the French President is 1,200,000 francs (about $240,000

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, $1 00
Three months, $0 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
subsequent insertions, 3¢ per square of 8 lines;
longer space, special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1879.

"I propose to have the Democratic nomination for the presidency in 1880," said J. Tilden. And the worst of it is that no man has yet been found bold enough to deny the statement.

It is said that Potter's report will cover one hundred closely printed pages—mostly devoted to specifications of fraud which he didn't unearth. Those which he did disclose are not mentioned.

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: The Democratic argument stands about thus: We know the Southern electors were dishonest, for they offered to sell to us. We tried to raise the money, and could not; therefore the Republicans must have bought them.

President Hayes deserves the thanks of the people generally for vetoing the outrageous Chinese bill. The evils, that are alleged to accompany Chinese immigration, can be met and conquered by other means than gross violations of the stipulations of solemn treaties.

The Potter Investigating Committee has cost the country between $20,000 and $40,000, and a peculiar feature is that it hasn't been able to tell the country a single thing that it didn't know before, if we may except the establishment of the fact that Jim Anderson can tell more lies in a given time than any other free man on the continent.—Baltimore Democrat.

The members of the Republican State Central Committee are requested by Hon. R. Stockett Matthews, the Chairman, to attend a meeting to be held at Raine's Hall, on Thursday, March 20th. The objects to be considered at this meeting, are the appointment of a time and place for the holding of a State Convention to nominate candidates for election in November, to provide for the choice of delegates thereto, and such other business as may be legitimately brought before the Committee.

It is said that at one poll in Congressman Good's district in Virginia at a tavern the white men were permitted to walk into the bar-room and deposit their votes on the table, but the negroes were compelled to pass theirs in at the window, which was higher than their heads. These votes were then placed upon a table upon which there were lots of scattering Democratic tickets, one of which was picked up in most instances and placed in the ballot-box instead of the Republican ticket passed in by the voter.

The report of the Republican minority of the Potter Investigating Committee, consisting of Messrs. Hiseock, Cox and Reed, stands out in marked contrast with the report of the majority. It shows how the original investigation resolution, the rulings of the chairman and the votes of the majority of the committee all curtailed the scope of their operations wherever evidence damaging to the Democratic case was reached or feared, and smothered all semblance of impartiality or fair investigation. The cipher despatches are dwelt upon at some length, showing in clear colors the corrupt methods resorted to by the Democrats to secure the election of Tilden, and the latter's intimate knowledge of the movements of his forces. It then reviews the elections of South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana, and meets the charges of the majority in every case with strong testimony, facts and logic.

The most obnoxious thing in existence, to the managing politicians of the Democratic party, is the United States election law, which was enacted for the purpose of punishing the reckless tools who perpetrate open and flagrant offenses at the polls. We have heard from Democratic sources for years past thread-worn diatribes upon the sanctity of the ballot-box, the liberties of the people, the purity of elections, and all that kind of thing. Yet we find the whole organization of that party devoted to the protection of men who are already proven to have been guilty of out-rages which deserve the severest punishment. In Maryland the elections of the past ten years have been characterized by lawless and fraudulent acts; the will of the people has not been permitted to be expressed through the ballot-box; the liberties of the people have been wholly overthrown, and their real wishes subverted. We have lived under a tyranny rendered absolute through systemized and organized fraud. The wrongs we complain of have not been wholly done in secret, but in many instances openly, publicly and in defiance of law and decency. When efforts have been made to punish the offenders, the courts, the legislatures, and the State officials have laughed at the complainants to scorn, and the partisan press, with utter shamelessness, has sustained the violators of the laws and their corrupt masters.

The condition of affairs has not improved. The same machinery of corruption is still being directed by the chiefs of the ring, and fraud is still triumphant. The Governor of the State, who holds his office through the medium of outrage, and by virtue of the most stupendous and disgraceful swindle ever known in the political history of the Commonwealth, is himself a contributor to the fund raised to pay the fines of men convicted of crimes in the late election. He and his coparceners in the great fraud of 1875 are endeavoring to shield men who deserve to be punished, and we may expect a continuance of the tyrannical rule under which the people of Maryland live.

The State laws have never been enforced against the servile instruments used to perpetrate Democratic power; they are not intended for the punishment of Democratic servants who obey the instructions issued by the ring managers. Since 1868, when Republican registrars and judges of elections were persecuted and driven to bankruptcy and ruin, to gratify partisan malice, the law has fallen into disuse. The history of the outrages in Baltimore, which have gone unpunished, forms a record the State should blush for, and is a humiliating demonstration of the subservience of her courts to political influences.

Since the United States laws take cognizance of these crimes which the State courts overlook, and since the ballot-box stuffers and ruffians are made amenable thereto, the virtuous press of the State and the Democratic House of Representatives demand the repeal of the laws which have for their object the purity of the ballot box and the security of the people. They demand that crime shall go unpunished, and that the country shall be left to the mercy of the ruffians who choose to stuff the ballot boxes, assault peaceable citizens, make false returns and wholly prevent fair elections.

The numerous convictions in the United States Courts, upon evidence clear as sunlight, have alarmed the defenders of these lawless acts, and they want to get rid of the law—which has no terrors for honest men. They go upon the record as men who do not dare to abide by the law; and who know that if fair and honest elections are held they must be defeated and driven from power.—Cumt. Civilian.

American manufacturers are creating no little uneasiness among their English brethren by the rapid progress they are making in public favor in Great Britain. To take a single example, all the locks on the English War Office are of American manufacture, and in answer to complaints from English manufacturers on the subject, an English contractor boldly avows that he "should be sorry to have direct dealings with the British Workman." "I still buy," he says, "a little from Wolverhampton and Willenhall when time is of consequence; but my chief supply comes now from America. I was driven there by the inferiority and high prices of English workmanship, and the unwillingness of the masters to entertain my ideas of improvements. My Willenhall friends," he continues, "are more annoyed at another matter than at my war office orders. If you will please to refer to my list herewith, you will find that I have supplied all the locks for a large hospital at Walsall—within a stone's throw of where locks are made! But these locks of mine came 3,500 miles, and cannot be equalled in this country." This is "sending coals to Newcastle" with a vengeance! The same authority in giving his reasons for preferring American to English locks ascribes the superiority of the former partly to the greater employment of machinery in America, and also to the better technical and general education of American workmen. Reference is also made to the greater sobriety and steadiness of American workmen, English mechanics, it appears, rarely working on Monday, and requiring that day to recover from the effects of Sunday's drinking.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 4, 1879.

The Democratic attitude towards the army since 1861, has been unvarying and malignantly hostile. Almost without exception, whether North, South, East or West, wherever a rebellion-sympathizing Democrat was to be found, there this feeling of unreasoning hatred of the army which has been persistently inculcated by the leaders, is cherished as one of the most binding of party dogmas, and the widest latitude of misrepresentation is indulged in without scruple. In Congress where men are supposed to be endowed with sufficient intelligence to comprehend matters upon which they seek to legislate, and too honorable to willfully and maliciously misrepresent, this same identical spirit has cropped out whenever the army or its interests were subjects of legislation. Its achievements have been belittled and derided; its officers who earned the gratitude of loyal men and women by their effective services during the war, have been held up to the scorn and detestation of their countrymen in the most odious character; and their very act of doubtful propriety or legality—measures taken in emergencies so threatening as to allow no time for second thought and under circumstances demanded that they should be entrusted with the widest discretion to avoid a greater—have been relished by ex-rebel Democratic Congressmen here and on the stump urged with every shade of false coloring and represented as having been inspired from the "central despotism," as they delight in stigmatizing the government. With people given to the slightest reflection, the absurdity of an army of 20,000, now overawing a nation of 50,000,000 is sufficiently patent; and the valiant spirit of a thousand Democratic voters who could be frightened from the polls before voting, or worse yet, be intimidated into voting the Republican ticket by the presence of five privates and a sergeant at the polls implies something too ridiculous to be for one moment entertained by people of common sense. It is altogether useless however, to argue the point with those who manufacture their facts to suit their position rather than square their politics with the real facts. But the laws permitting the President to order a sufficient military force to the polls to preserve the peace and insure every voter from molestation in the exercise of the highest privilege of citizenship, when State and local officers fail to do so through inability or indifference, was imperatively needed as every one familiar with the lawless condition of the South knows. It has been exercised very sparingly and only in places where repeated violations of the rights of citizenship had occurred. There is not a scrap of evidence to show that a single legal voter has ever been interfered with to deprive him of his right to vote for whomsoever he pleased by the United States military. But there are volumes to show that thousands entitled to vote have been enabled to do so through the presence, who had otherwise been driven by violence from the polls. If, indeed, many of them had escaped with only the loss of their vote. All this and much more to the same purport may be said relative to the need of supervising and marshaling. Johnny Davenport was the incarnation of all that was despotic, arbitrary and oppressive, from the Democratic standpoint. For years Democratic Congressmen have alluded to him as a type of the class of supervisors who had subverted our liberties. He had dragged thousands of the innocent voters who abound in the back slums of New York city, from the voting place to prison. The Democratic Journal were filled with the same sort of twaddle. Hoping to find some cases of abuse in the vast field Davenport supervised, a committee was hurriedly equipped to make a case against him, and to so time their report as to precipitate it during the closing hours of the session so as to strengthen the Democratic demand for the abolition of supervisors and turn the ballot-box in our large cities and the South over to the custody of the Democratic repugner and the Ku-Klux. After diligent search the committee was unable to find a single case of abuse, and was forced, virtually, to say so. It should not be forgotten that three Democratic Governors were first to appeal to the "central despotism" for United States troops to protect them from constituents who only sought to make a wider and more general application of the no-rent law taught them by their leaders. From the tone of comment heard here the Republicans in Congress will be commended for refusing to turn over the ballot-box to the absolute dictation of the ball-dozer and the Democratic braisers upon whom Democracy depends for its majorities. All but two of the bills—the executive, legislative and judicial, and the army were finally agreed to; but Republicans refused to yield the right to station soldiers at the polls when necessary to maintain order and to protect the legal voter, and to abolish the supervisors. They yielded about every other point in dispute to avoid the necessity of an extra session. The Democrats would yield nothing of revolutionary demands and the taxpayer and the business men must pay whatever the costs of an extra session may prove to be. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

Except with residents of the Pacific coast, the Presidential veto is almost unanimously approved.

LOGAN.

The Democratic House.

The inability of the Democratic party in the House to manage the public business has been shown every session since it got control. The Congress elected in the fall of 1874, met on the first Monday of December, 1875. At the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1876 several of the large appropriation bills had not been passed, and temporary laws had to be passed in order to find the departments in funds until the appropriations could be made. Five times was this expedient resorted to, and the last appropriation bill did not become a law until August 15, six weeks after the beginning of the fiscal year. At the second session of the same Congress the House tried to proceed with more despatch in acting on the appropriation bills, but the electoral controversy distracted their attention, and eight of the appropriation bills did not pass until the last day of the session, and the army bill failed. The Forty-fifth Congress had to be convened in extra session on October 15th, and it began to waste time as usual. It remained in session eight months, and did not get through five of the most important appropriation bills until the last day of the session. The Sundry Civil bill, appropriating $25,000,000, was so hastily enrolled that an important section was omitted. At the beginning of the present session it was announced that this time the House would try to use some despatch with the necessary public business, but with their usual genius for delay and obstructive maneuvering, the House has contrived to keep back all the important bills to the closing hours of Congress, so that another extra session is a necessity. How long is this disgraceful record to extend? We are greatly mistaken if the behavior of the present House does not bring about a Republican reaction which will be felt in the next Congressional election.—Baltimore American.

As regards the prospect of a return of the yellow fever scourge to New Orleans, the Times of that city presents some facts in regard to the sanitary arrangements there which are not reassuring. For instance, it says of the Potters Field:

The space which has been devoted to burial of the pauper dead for years is exactly seventy-one paces long by twenty paces wide. It is strewn with human bones so thickly that fifty-two were counted on one grave. The water was hardly six inches below the surface at the time of investigation, although two weeks had elapsed since a rain. Several new graves had been dug, and these were full of putrid water, from the shallow depths of one of which we drew a skull with brain not yet decayed, a thigh bone and portions of other members of a corpse, in the mould of whose coffin it had been dug, and whose bones were scattered all over the ground. The sides of this grave were formed by coffins in the adjoining graves, showing how closely the dead lie. Examination proved that the utmost depth of burial was not ten inches below the surface, in many instances not four. Although it was a cold day, the smell arising was horrible and could be perceived at some distance from the inclosure. A neighboring fence was almost entirely composed of boards taken from coffins—the gaunt, horrible shape still revealed. Into the ditches running along the cemetery ran the scum of the horrible corruption, conveying the poisonous ooze of the place through populous streets.

An Important Decision.

The Court of appeals for Maryland has just decided an interesting principle of law in the case of Annie Kennedy, by her next friend, Samuel Kennedy, vs. Robert Lange, argued at the present term of court, by ex-Judge Gleason for the appellant, and F. S. Hobbittzell for the appellee. Lange rented a dwelling house on Broadway to one Bartlett. Samuel Kennedy rented apartments in the house from Bartlett. The rent being due and in arrears, the landlord distrained upon a piano and certain articles of household furniture, the sole and separate property of Mrs. Kennedy, for Bartlett's rent. Mrs. Kennedy replied the articles, and the case came up on appeal. It was argued that the provision of the Constitution, act 3, section 49, which declares "that the property of a wife shall be protected from the debt of her husband," prevented the landlord from levying the distress upon the appellant's furniture. Judge Miller, in his opinion, says: That in this case the husband was not the tenant of Lange, but of Bartlett, nor was he in anywise indebted to Lange. The wife's property was not taken for the debts of the husband, but was seized by the landlord for rent in arrears due by Bartlett to Lange, and was so taken simply because it was on the demised premises. Had Kennedy been indebted to Lange instead of Bartlett, the constitution protection would here have applied, and the property of Mrs. Kennedy could not have been seized to satisfy her husband's arrearage of rent. The legitimate tendency of the decision is to the effect that the property of a wife cannot be taken in payment of rent owing by her husband.

The President in his veto of the anti-Chinese bill reviews at length the treaty of 1859 and the supplementary Burlingame treaty, showing more clearly than concisely the commercial advantages gained and the rights and prerogatives of American citizens in the Celestial Empire, and that the only advantages given to China under these treaties were reciprocal rights and privileges to her subjects living in the United States. He further points out, while acknowledging the necessity for some action in the matter, the danger of the hasty and irregular action proposed by the bill, and says that no circumstances could warrant an immediate withdrawal of our treaty protection of the Chinese in this country, or tolerate an exposure of our citizens in China to the consequences which might follow, and urges that it is incompatible with the national honor, and, in view of decreasing Chinese immigration, unnecessary to take any action in the matter other than through the regular diplomatic channels.

ADDITIONAL TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

ARCHBISHOP PURCELL'S DEBTS.
CINCINNATI, March 1.—The affairs of Archbishop Purcell were further complicated to-day by a suit being entered against him by a creditor. It is thought he will make an assignment next Tuesday, when a meeting of all the priests of the diocese will be held. His debts are now believed to aggregate $6,000,000.

PREVENTION OF THE PLAGUE IN AMERICA.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—A letter has been received by the Secretary of State from the Hon. John A. Kasson, United States Minister to Austria, giving some interesting particulars with regard to the precautions taken by that government to prevent the introduction into the empire of the much dreaded Russian plague. By order of the Austrian as well as of the Hungarian ministry, the transit of travelers across the frontier from Russia is prohibited, except in cases where the latter can show that for twenty days previous they have not been in an infected district. Railway carriages are disinfected at the frontier, and the importation of linen, clothes, rugs, furs, skins, leather, hair, bristles, feathers, caviar, fish, felt and paper from Russia is strictly forbidden. In the event of its possible revival with the cessation of the cold weather, Minister Kasson makes the pertinent inquiry whether the Government of the United States has sufficient warranty in law to take the unquestionably strong measures which will be required to prevent the introduction of the plague by some of the existing lines of American commercial intercourse.

This letter has been referred by Mr. Evans to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the recommendation that if the laws are not now sufficiently strong and explicit to warrant the adoption of the measures indicated, the subject be at once brought to the attention of Congress.

On the 18th ult., Surgeon-General Woodworth, of the United States Marine Hospital Service, addressed a letter to the Senate and House committees on epidemic diseases, recommending "that United States medical officers of health be stationed at Liverpool and at some point on the Mediterranean, with instructions to visit all places where infectious epidemic diseases should make their appearance, and furnish the health officers or our consorts with prompt, definite and reliable information with regard thereto." No action, however, has yet been taken upon the Surgeon General's recommendation.

THE ALABAMA INVESTIGATION.

WASHINGTON, February 27.—The report of the Teller Committee, made to the Senate to-day, reviews the testimony of ninety-one witnesses in Louisiana and one hundred and seven in South Carolina. It states that the fraud in South Carolina by the use of issue-balls extended to every county in that state but one, and that between thirty and forty murders were committed in Louisiana. The committee, in drawing their conclusions, says there appears to be a widespread determination in these states to restrict the freedom of speech as to political questions upon the claim that the discussion of the relations of labor and capital, employers and employees and other kindred subjects, is calculated to array the colored people against the whites, and thus endanger the safety of the people. This determination is not authorized by state enactments, but the Democrats who attend the political meetings, not only of their own party, but also of the opposition, are in the habit of refusing to allow the speakers to discuss these questions in their various forms. Any reference to the condition of the colored people before the war, and the causes that led to the war, are condemned as being of an incendiary character. It will be readily seen that if it is allowed to the attendance at a public meeting to determine what and what is not incendiary or inflammatory matter, and, therefore, objectionable and not to be permitted, there will be an end of all political discussion unless the speakers shall consent to discuss the questions in accordance with the view of the majority that may have been in attendance. However false and destitute of foundation these reports may have been, they have been made the excuse for most unheard of atrocities against these people. As this pretended fear of negro insurrection is made the excuse for the outrages on the colored people, it may be amiss to say that the Democratic witnesses when interrogated on that point all agreed that the negro was peaceful and unvengeful, and that all the reports of the uprising of this class of people to murder and outrage whites there was no instance in American history, within their knowledge, when this had been done, and all admitted that it would require great provocation to induce the colored people to resort to violence against the whites. Respect for authority, obedience to law, and attachment to persons and things are notable characteristics of the colored race. No prosecutions have been instituted by the state of South Carolina against the violators of her laws, and no efforts made to punish the men who have thus wantonly outraged its citizens, and when the United States courts have been resorted to for the purpose of punishing the outrages, the complainant has in very many instances been arrested clearly in violation of law by the state authorities on charges of perjury, and committed to jail unless he gave bail. Citizens are threatened if they attempt to punish the offenders in the United States courts. The witnesses will be punished in the state courts, and thus the state not only declines to punish these criminals, but refuses to allow it to be done in the United States courts. The state government is a white government. No colored men are represented in it, and so far, no man connected with it has had the honesty, courage or humanity to attempt to redress the outrages of these unfortunate men of color. The laws of South Carolina and Louisiana are undoubtedly sufficient for the protection of all their citizens, but there has been a lamentable failure to enforce them. This course must in the end be the destruction of the government of these states. To insure a lasting peace to the people, white and black, the fullest and freest exercise of all political rights must be conceded to all. The honor and prosperity of Louisiana demand that these outrages against the rights of citizens, these violations of state and national law shall be punished. That this duty devolves upon the state all admit, and whatever may be said of the duty of the general government to redress the wrongs of its citizens under these circumstances, no one will excuse the state authorities for the failure to punish the offenders.

In both states violence and fraud, so disreputable in themselves and so dangerous to the stability of a republican form of government, were used not only against the candidates of the Republican party, but against independent Democratic candidates, and candidates by whatever name known who were in opposition to the regular Democratic candidates, thus showing clearly that the result sought for and accomplished was not the prevention of so-called "Carpet-bag rule" and the establishment of so-called "Home rule" and the success of the Democratic party in these states and in the nation, by whatever means and at whatever cost. There must be a radical change in the management of political affairs. The time has come when Congress should exercise the power it clearly possesses, of providing by law for fair and free elections of members of Congress. The power to pass laws prescribing the times, places and manner of holding elections for members of Congress necessarily implies the power to provide for the punishment of violations of the laws.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Another hard snow storm visited us on Sunday.
—The health of our town is improving.
—Notice Mr. Willink's sale notice in another column.
—The school term for the present year closes on the 4th of April.
—The International Lesson Leaf will be found on our first page.
—We turn out the best kind of job work. Leave your orders and be happy.
—Work on Mr. Bailey's hotel is being pushed whenever the weather will permit.
—A force of hands is engaged in lowering the bridge over the railroad on Third street.

—Literary meets to-night at 7 o'clock. An interesting meeting was held on Saturday evening.
—A large fox hunt was indulged in by several of our sportsmen on Tuesday.

—A party of young folks went to the "Promised Land" on Saturday evening, where they spent an enjoyable time.
—Mr. Charles Bolden is erecting a store room, for Mr. Jno. C. Dunham, on the south east corner of his lot, on Second street.

—It is rumored that several changes will shortly be made in the working of the B. & O. railroad.
—The protracted meeting in the M. E. Church closed Monday night. Three accessions to the church was the result.

—Rev. J. M. Davis was re-elected Vice President of the Maryland S. S. Union, at a meeting held in Baltimore last month.
—Dr. Fullerton has had a great revival in Volcano, W. Va., resulting in seventy-two accessions to the church, forty of whom were adults.

—W. D. Burton, Esq., the lowest bidder on the Fike bridge, has taken an appeal from the decision of the County Commissioners in that case.
—The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal will probably be open for navigation April 1. The severe winter has retarded the usual winter repairs along the line.

—Dr. E. H. Parsons, lately of Cumberland, Md., and a practitioner of thirteen years' experience, offers his professional services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
—Herbert Bell, of Cumberland, confined in jail on the charge of shooting Samuel Cooper, was released on bail in the sum of $3,000, for his appearance at the April term of court.

—Rev. B. Ison attended a quarterly meeting at Fairview, on the Deer Park circuit, Sunday. There was a prospect of a revival, four persons being at the altar. Miss Jenkins paid over $2.50 missionary money.

—Notices have been posted at the Baltimore and Ohio railroad round-house and machine shops in Cumberland to the effect that employees will be discharged at once upon being found drunk or frequenting saloons.

—We learn from private sources that the West Va. Legislature has appointed a commission to wait upon the representatives of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, for the purpose of affecting a compromise as to rates on said road.

—The Baltimore and Ohio railroad company have for several weeks been running two freight trains through from Baltimore to Keyser, a distance of about two hundred miles, without charge of locomotive or crew. The object is, we understand, to ascertain whether the run can be made successful, and if so all of the freight trains will be run from Baltimore to this city. The two trains now running are taken beyond this city because no locomotives are kept here to replace those drawing the trains.—Comb. Citizen.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of February:
Benj. F. Crane and Clivia White.
Henry Sisler and Justina Fike.
Geo. F. Ault and Rebecca Durst.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 5:

James Kight and wife to Margaret and Alice Macher, the surface of a tract of land called "Rich Level," 109 acres; $1,500.

Josiah Wolf and wife to Dennis Prazee, Military Lot No. 1410, 50 acres; $200.

Joseph Frazier and wife to Wm. Guthrie, a tract of land containing 171 acres, on the waters of Buffalo; $225.

Alexander Thomas and wife to Wm. Guthrie, part of a tract of land westward of Fort Cumberland; $1,000.

Thanks.

Those of our subscribers who have paid up within the past month, have our sincere thanks for their promptness and generosity. We desire that many more would come and "do likewise." As we have to pay cash for labor, paper, ink, type, &c., we are at present in need of money, and all subscribers knowing themselves indebted to us will please come forward and settle.

Meeting of County Commissioners.

The County Commissioners met Monday at 10 A. M. All present.
Mr. Walton, the commissioner appointed to examine the court house, made the examination and reported to the effect that from the evidence of witnesses and from the examination he could make under the circumstances, thinks the building perfectly safe.

Proposals for building bridge in district No. 2, were opened and found to be as follows:

Adam S. Sell	$2,106
John M. Kessler	2,200
John M. Kessler	2,200
W. D. Burton & Co.	2,200
W. H. Riley	2,200
Benj. Griffith and Isaac Meyers	2,200
Lot and Lysess Frazier	3,000
John M. Miller	3,000
Adolph France	3,000
S. E. Flowers	3,000
J. M. Crim, (80 for old bridge)	2,000
Geo. W. Gassman	2,000

The contract for building bridge was awarded to W. H. Riley, of Selbyport district, for the sum of $2,200.

The Examiners' report on the David Chambers road was confirmed and the road ordered to be opened.

Messrs. McCulloch and Cookery, of the Allegany county Board of Commissioners, were in conference with the Garrett county Board, in relation to the matter of toll gates on the National Road, in Garrett and Allegany counties, and in conjunction with this Board agreed that S. A. Cox, attorney for the Allegany Commissioners, should submit the matter to Judge Alvey, as to whether or not the act of 1873 requires the continuance of toll gates on said road.

Board adjourned to meet Monday, April 7th.

WESTMINSTER, MD., Mar. 1, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—That "Daughter of Eve" up there among the pines of Garrett county, must neither drop her pen nor spare her almanac, for a person who can write so fluently, so brightly and naturally as she must not be allowed to die unheard of in the gloomy shades of suggestive pines. She is able to delight thousands, and as a man is not to "live unto himself" nor for himself, ne should a woman; especially she should not this daughter in or of the pines in Garrett.

J. M.

Death of Dr. Hummelshime.

Dr. J. K. Hummelshime, widely and favorably known in this city and through this county and adjoining counties of the States of West Virginia and Pennsylvania, died at his residence, No. 30 Baltimore street, about 20 minutes past 9 o'clock Saturday night. His sickness was of brief duration. About ten days since he went to Flintstone on business, and returned on Saturday, yesterday week. On his return he complained of feeling unwell and summoned his physician, Dr. Carr. Other medical men were afterwards summoned in consultation, and every possible aid was given, but all proved of no avail, and after suffering greatly for several days, he finally succumbed. Dr. Hummelshime was 51 years of age. There were peculiar phases of the disease of the deceased that led the attending physician to desire a post mortem examination, and the consent of the family having been obtained the examination was made, which resulted in the finding of thirty-three gall stones, or biliary calculi, varying from a quarter inch to five-eighths and three-quarters. These were of a pyramidal form, and had been secreted in the gall bladder, perhaps the work of years, producing inflammation of the bowels, of which disease he died. Dr. Hummelshime was a prominent practical dentist, a highly esteemed and respected citizen, and for some years past a prominent member of Centre street M. E. Church.—Comb. Times.

The Washington Star prints the following interview with Don Pitt, in regard to the assault made upon him by McGarrahan: "Did you have a pistol with you?" "I did. I always go armed, because so many people object to my style of editing a paper. The first impulse of an aggrieved party in searching for an editor is to degrade him with a cowardly or a horsewhip. I carry a revolver for that sort; but I will never complain of a man who resorts to his fist." "You do not, then, intend to have McGarrahan arrested?" "No; I would not subject any man who uses his fists on me to the inconvenience of an arrest. Fighting of that kind is healthy and exhilarating," replied Colonel Pitt, as he passed a handkerchief saturated with amica over the right side of his face.

TELEGRAPHIC.

AN EXCITING CONTEST.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., March 4.—

Precisely one of the most exciting elections ever held in Orange county took place here to-day, the principal strife being over the excise ticket. The temperance workers, led by Eccles Robinson, for the last week caused much anxiety among the saloon keepers. The latter held a rati fication meeting last evening. A number of speeches were made, and a brass band enlivened the proceedings. It was agreed that the saloons would be thrown open to all who voted for their candidate, Mr. Benj. Hoffman. The ladies of the National Christian Temperance Union took up the challenge and were led by Robinson. Their room was filled with tables, which were covered with tea, coffee, milk, &c., which were given out to all who would support the cause. The result was a complete victory for the temperance people, who elected their candidate, Mr. Edgar A. Wells, by 281 majority, and nearly 100 persons signed the Murphy pledge. Mr. Francis Marvin, Republican, is probably elected supervisor over Franklin R. Broadhead, Democrat.

THE LAST NIGHT.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The debate in the Senate on the amendment of Senator Hoar to exclude Jefferson Davis from the benefits of the arrangements of pension's bill, which was begun at 1 o'clock this morning, was not concluded until broad daylight. The exciting character of the discussion may be imagined when it is stated that nearly every senator remained in his seat throughout its discussion, while very few of the spectators in the galleries at the time of its commencement left until its conclusion. It was unquestionably one of the most animated and vehement political debates that has occurred in the Senate in many years. The arguments used by the Democrats in defence of Jefferson Davis was that he had not obeyed the summons of the Southern people, to lead them in their attempt to overthrow the Union, and that he was no more guilty of treason, and no more deserving of the stigma sought to be placed upon him by Mr. Hoar's amendment, than any of those Senators of the South who had participated in the rebellion. Mr. Lamar went still further, and lauded Davis to the skies, and in an eloquent strain referred to Davis' "exalted character, brilliant talents and well established reputation as a statesman, patriot and soldier." The speaker, in the height of his enthusiastic admiration for the ex-Confederate chieftain, declared that Davis was a worthy disciple of Washington himself, and that posterity would not fail to place both names side by side. Senator Harris, of Tennessee, followed Lamar in defending Mr. Davis "from the wanton and malicious attack" of those who were striving "to perpetuate the memories of the war for partisan purposes." He concluded a long eulogy of Davis by declaring that Mr. Davis was "the peer of any Senator upon the floor for purity, honor and personal character."

This was more than Senator Zack Chandler could bear, and in an outburst of impassioned oratory, which greatly surprised his closest friends, who had no idea that the veteran stalwart could speak so well, said:

Mr. President:—Twenty years ago, I, in company with Jefferson Davis, stood up in this chamber, and with him swore by Almighty God, that I would support the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Davis came direct from the Cabinet of Franklin Pierce into the Senate of the United States, and took the oath with me to be faithful to this government. During four years I sat in this body with Jefferson Davis and saw the preparations going on from day to day for the overthrow of this government. With treason in his heart and perjury upon his lips he took the oath to sustain the government that he meant to overthrow. Sir, there was method in this manner. He, in cooperation with other men from his section and in the cabinet of Mr. Buchanan, made careful preparations for the event that was to follow. Your fleets were scattered wherever the winds blew and water was found to float them, where they could not be used to put down a rebellion. Your armies were scattered all over this broad land, where they could not be used in an emergency. Your treasury was depleted until your bonds, bearing 6 per cent. interest, principal and interest payable in coin, were sold for eighty-eight cents on the dollar to pay current expenses, and no buyers. Preparations were carefully made. Your arms were sold under an apparently innocent clause in an army bill, providing that the Secretary of War might in his discretion sell such arms as he deemed best for the interests of the government.

Sir, eighteen years ago, last month, I sat in this hall and listened to Jefferson Davis delivering his farewell address, informing us what our constitutional duties to this government were, and then he left and entered into a rebellion to overthrow the government that he had sworn to support. I remained here, sir, during the whole of that terrible rebellion. I saw our brave soldiers by thousands, I might almost say millions, as they passed through here to the theatre of war. I saw their shattered ranks returning. I saw steamboats after steamboats, and railroad trains bringing back the wounded. I was with my friend from Rhode Island (Burnside) when he commanded the army of the Potomac, and saw files of legs and arms that made humanity shudder. I saw the widows and orphans made by this war, and heard them weep and mourn over the death of their dearest and best. Mr. President, I little thought at that time that I should live to hear in the Senate of the United States a living rebel—on the floor of the Senate of the United States. Sir, I am amazed to hear it, and can tell the gentlemen on the other side that they little know the spirit of the North when they come here at this day with bravado on their lips, uttering eulogies upon him whom every man, woman, and child in the North believe to have been a double-dyed traitor.

This was the speech of the debate. Strongas the text may appear, the vigor, the earnestness and boldness that attended its delivery enhanced its effect ten-fold. The Democrats were completely unprepared for such utterances. They have been so accustomed to such speeches during the past three or four years that they hardly expected to hear the like again, especially on the very eve of their again assuming control of the Senate. Mr. Chandler sat down, looking defiantly towards the Democratic side of the chamber, and evidently anxious that some one of them would come forward to reply. But there was no answer. The Democrats remained quietly seated and started at one another, none being willing to cope with the brave Michiganard, but each doubtless very anxious to see somebody else undertake the task. Even the loud applause that greeted Mr. Chandler's conclusion did not arouse them to action. And so Mr. Chandler, after waiting a few moments for some demonstration by the Democrats, arose to receive the hearty congratulations of his Republican brethren.

Mr. Conkling also distinguished himself by the delivery of one of his happiest satirical efforts, which was aimed entirely at Senator Thurman, and whose inconsistency and trimming he depicted in such polished language, but which, however, only added to the severity of the attack, that the Democrats themselves enjoyed the speech fully as much as the Republicans. Mr. Thurman's reply was exceedingly tame.

Finally, a vote was reached on Mr. Hoar's amendment, and it was agreed to by a strict party vote. The Arrears of Pensions bill was then passed.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Both Houses of Congress adjourned at 12 M., amid the usual scenes of confusion.

Much of the time last night and this morning in the Senate was occupied in executive session.

The legislative and army appropriation bills occupied the attention of the House, but no headway was made with either. The House at 9 A. M. passed the bill known as the "McGowan health bill"—yeas 169, nays 63. [It provides for a commission of health to set in Washington, to establish rules and regulations in regard to the public health, to obtain and communicate information on the subject of epidemic diseases, and to report to next Congress.]

THE ARREARS OF PENSIONS BILL PASSED.

The bill for arrears of pensions was taken up amid great confusion, and finally the rules were suspended and it was passed with amendments—yeas 293, nays 61. The original bill appropriates $25,000,000 for arrears of pensions for the next fiscal year. The amendments are:—first, to allow pension agents thirty cents for each payment, and appropriating $15,000 for the purpose; second, to strike out the clause excepting pensions granted by special act; third, that in no case shall arrears be allowed to date from before the actual disability; fourth, limiting the time of application for arrears to July, 1880.

The principal measures which have become laws during the last session, in addition to ten of the regular appropriation bills, are the bill reducing the tax on tobacco and amending the internal revenue laws; the census bill; bill to aid refunding the national debt by authorizing issue of small treasury certificates; the bill to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases, and the bills providing for the payment of arrears of pension for service during the war of the rebellion.

The failure to pass the legislative, executive and judicial, and the army appropriation bills render an extra session of the Forty sixth Congress necessary. The President and the Cabinet discussed the subject at the Capitol this morning, and it was decided to convene the new Congress on the 18th inst., two weeks from today. A proclamation to that effect was issued this afternoon. Senators and members residing in distant

States will be unable to go home before March 18.

PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PACIFIC SLOPE.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 3.—The city journals all treat the subject of the veto of the anti Chinese bill editorially this morning. The Call says after briefly reviewing the points of the veto message: "There is no intimation that negotiations are pending to accomplish the purposes aimed at by the bill objected to. On the contrary he seems to regard the nation as pledged to permit the immigration of free Chinese, with only such restriction on the influx of the Chinese as the capacity of the country to absorb them. This message does not indicate any comprehensive conception on the part of the executive of the question as it affects this coast. The argument of the message is not of a character to mitigate in any degree the disappointment of the people of this coast will feel at the failure of a bill on which so many hopes had been built."

The opinions of interior papers received by telegraph in many cases in advance of publication, are generally much stronger in tone than the utterances of city journals. The language of denunciation is pretty well exhausted on the subject. Some take a calmer view of the veto, and while crediting the President with statesmanlike devotion to inherent courtesy, regret his action none the less. The Marysville Appeal, San Jose Mercury and Santa Barbara Press approve the veto. In addition to press utterances the wires from all parts of the State are burdened with reports of mass meetings and other demonstrations, resolutions of county committees of both parties, and of assemblages of citizens, all deploring in the strongest terms the action of the President, and many indulging in forebodings of trouble to arise from the disappointment of the people.

At a meeting at Ballister, San Benito county, the President was burned in effigy, and at Fairfield, the county seat of Sonoma county, flags were at half-mast. On the reception of the news at Dutch flat, the last Chinese shanty within the town limits was burned and an indignation meeting was called this evening.

From Nevada and Oregon public and press opinions are coming in to the same purport as the above, and the whole Pacific coast seems to have united in a general expression of regret and denunciation.

In this city, notwithstanding the deep feeling prevailing, there is no hint of anything bordering on violence.

At the sand lots this afternoon there was an unusual attendance, about 7,000 persons being present. President Hayes was roundly denounced by the speakers, and in circulating through the crowd it was noticeable that a general sentiment of disapprobation of the veto prevailed, coupled with the intention to keep up the agitation and unite for a more radical cure of the Chinese evil in the future. Resolutions were adopted to the effect that the bill was a piece of political clap-trap, which the workmen would have accepted in good faith for what it was worth and demanded more, but that they did not consider the veto of sufficient importance to mourn over it or strike a blow for it. Everything is perfectly quiet in this city, and there is not the slightest reason to apprehend any violent incendiary action.

PEACHES IN NORTH CAROLINA.

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 25.—It has just been discovered by a portion of the public that ten persons who were members of the Legislature elected in 1876 were guilty of drawing money twice from the State treasury when they were entitled to draw only once. When these ten men came to Raleigh to attend the session of the legislature they brought the election returns of their respective counties and delivered them to the Secretary of State as deputy sheriffs. For this service each of the ten drew mileage at the rate of three cents a mile, and three dollars a day while serving the State as deputy sheriffs. It now appears, according to the printed report of the State Auditor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1877, that the ten persons named also drew mileage as members of the legislature for the number of miles and at the same rate for which they had been previously paid as deputy sheriffs, by the State. The amount thus wrongfully obtained, and for which there is no authority in law, is $631.40. One of the parties is now Lieutenant Governor of the State, and another Speaker of the House.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and Conveyancer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

FOR SALE.

I will offer for sale, either for cash or very liberal terms, one good

DWELLING HOUSE AND LOT,

situated ten miles west of Oakland, and four miles from Aurora, W. Va.

For further particulars address

ADAM GIESMANN,
Aurora, W. Va.

313

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

D. R. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
383m

IMPORTANT SALE

of Household Furniture, China, Glass Ware, Grand Piano, Spring Wagon, Sleigh, Harness and Horses,
the property of Daniel Willink, to be held at 10 30 A. M., in Offutt's Hall, above his new store, in Oakland, Md.

Wednesday, March 21, 1879,

Among other things will be offered 1 Spring wagon, nearly new, built in Baltimore, 1 sleigh, double and single harness, with two small bay horses; ladies' and men's saddles, harness, bridles, &c.; bed room furniture, double and single beds, mattresses, pillows, carpets, bedroom china ware, chandeliers and bracket lamps; Fine old carved oak extension table, desks, oak and walnut, book cases, rocking and easy chairs, open grate, stoves, the dinner and breakfast colored china, glass ware, fine piano, by Volume, splendid tone and very fine case, and numerous other things, all nearly new and in good order.

TERMS:—In all cases strict CASH before delivery.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, State of Maryland, and to me directed, at the suit of Frank & Adler, one of Joseph Hilkey against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Jesse W. Chaney, I have seized and taken in execution and the right title hereof, claim and demand, at law and equity, of the said Jesse W. Chaney in and to the following property, to-wit: In and to all the lands mentioned in the following deeds, to-wit: First, A. C. Good and wife, to Joseph Will, bearing date March 25, 1853, and recorded in Liber H. R., folio 67, one of the Land Records of Allegany county, Md.; the other a deed from John J. Stiles and wife, to Joseph Will, bearing date the 11th day of September, 1859, and recorded in Liber H. R., No. 32, folio 30, one of the Land Records of Allegany Co., Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, March 22d, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Colburn's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said debt and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON,
314 Sheriff.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

The following properties

have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 2.

One-half acre of ground in the centre of Oakland, improved by a

Large Frame Dwelling House

and out buildings. A well of excellent water in the yard. This is one of the handsomest properties in the town. Can easily be divided into three good building lots. Title good.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 20 acres, is well cultivated, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar, good barn and stable. The whole farm is under orchard of 75 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm is well situated for a summer home at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Sandy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 6 miles north-west of Oakland, 7 miles from Hutton's Section and 7 miles from Cranberry Summit. Is one of the best mill seats in the county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 16 rooms; good stable attached. The wheels and trawls for a saw mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole tract and land is accessible for.

FRAME HOUSE,

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland. Is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a PLEASANT HOME an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price 1/3 less than the cost of the buildings. Terms:—One third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,
Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

JOHN RICHARDSON,
Manufacturer of and Dealer in

WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MARYLAND.

Also, Improved Hand Sown Sower,
Jail- Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

VARIETIES.

—Lot's wife was too fresh.
—Chop sticks—Axe handles.
—Did you ever see a pie on ear?
—The live-toad-in-a-solid-rook story has started.
—Birds are not noted for courage, but many of them die game.
—A loan exhibition can be seen at any pawnbroker's shop.
—The miner who ate quartz found himself in a peck of trouble.
—A sure cure for sleeplessness is to imagine you have got to get up.
—Florida boys have commenced stealing the new crop of watermelons.
—What comes after death? Why, the undertaker, of course—Chat.
—English life insurance companies charge an extra per cent. on old bachelors.
—An unequal match—One having the brimstone all at one end.—N. O. Picayune.
—Question to be asked of a man in the rogues' gallery: Are you often taken that way?
—A Mexican convent has been converted into a jail. It was open to nun, but now to every one.
—Lawyers are never more earnest than when they work with a will—that is, if the estate is valuable.
—Marriageable girls may choose their husbands, but a man running short of tobacco husbands his cheeks.
—Old age killed twenty-three persons in one week in Philadelphia. O. A. is a new kind of a hot drink probably.
—One hundred and three boys between the ages of fourteen and fifteen are now confined in the California State prison at St. Quentin.
—Delicate consideration for the elephant: Considerate little girl—"please Mr. Keeper, will it hurt him if I give him a current of my bun?"
—Why is a boat rowed by a young woman like a candy scrape? Because it is a lasses pull. This is inserted sympathetically.—Commercial Bulletin.
—It is said that the sting of a hornet will cure paralysis. We believe it will cure death for that long.—Hank-Eye.
—One of the latest applicants for office at the Interior Department at Washington was a white-haired man, a Prussian, ninety-nine years of age.
—We never hear anything of the "evils of speculation" except from men who have invested and lost. It is all right as long as it pays.—Exc. Press.
—Topic: Geological discussion.—Principal: "Was it colder or warmer a hundred years ago than at present?" Pupil (honestly): "I really can't recollect, sir."
—When a man owes a debt and refuses to pay more than half of it, he calls the arrangement a compromise with his creditors. The creditors call it a swindle.—New Orleans Picayune.
—A really neat tramp, when he puts a piece of custard pie in his inside coat pocket, always carries the outside of it crust rim in first, allowing the central point of the triangle to gracefully hang over the edge, after the manner of a bandana handkerchief.
—"Mamma," said a wicked youngster, "am I a canoe?" "No child; why do you ask?" "Oh because you always say you like to see people who paddle their own canoe; and I didn't know but maybe I was yours." The boy went out of the door with more reference to speed than grace.
—An Eastern poet having seen "glimmering on the dumb, cold lips of dawn, Pale languor of insensible concern," a western critic inquires whether "the fellow who happened to be out about the same time, feeding his hogs or splitting wood for his wife to get breakfast with, noticed that remarkable phenomenon."
—There are 1,500 mule teams constantly on the road between Leadville and Carson City, both of Colorado. It is a fair estimate to suppose that at least one mule balks each day. Now imagine the rest, remembering that there are mule-drivers on that road who speak four languages and several dialects.—Exc. Press.
—These things, when the good citizen sith in the house with his howitzer ready to bombard the burglar, the editor sleepeth sweetly in his little bed, with down and windows open. The wise burglar knoweth full well that the blood cannot be squeezed out of a turnip; consequently he molesteth not the knight of the quill.—Paris (Tex.) Banner.
—A bonanza has been discovered in the harbor at Key West. It was supposed that sugar was extinct there, having been gathered years ago, but by accident it is ascertained that the neighboring bars are teeming with sponge of a superior quality. A few small boats secured between $8,000 and $10,000 worth of sponge in two days last week, and all within a half-hour's sail of the wharf.
—A pair of drawers—straws in lemonade.—Puck. A pair of pants—two dogs after a long chase.—Philadelphia Chronicle. A pair of ships—two eels.—Albany Argus. A pair of shoes—two women chasing a hen.—Rochester Democrat. A pair "does"—two physicians.—Whitell Times. A pair of dies—two drowning kittens.—Parkers Gazette. A pair of twins—Tom and Jerry.—West Jersey Press. Parachute—a double-barreled gun.—The Graphic.
—A small Belchertown girl was told that all such expressions as "Be you going?" must not be tolerated for a moment, but the word "are" must always be used. Soon after receiving the admonition she happened to hear a playmate speak of a bumble bee, for which she promptly reproved her, remarking, "You mustn't say bumble bee, but bumble are."

water in the wagon and stop every half-mile and wet his feet to cool them. Sometimes they would be red-hot." Old Teller broke in: "O, that's nothing. I once had a horse and he was such a forger that I could not take him out in a sleigh." The old man here looked around to see if anyone would ask him the reason of this, but they looked as ghastly as pall-bearers, so he continued: "No, I would never take him out sleighing, because such a shower of sparks were knocked from his shoes that the snow and ice were melted—turned to mud—before the sleigh-runners reached it."
—Desperate Wife.—(1) My husband is not only false to me, but treats me very unkindly. He knocks me down with a chair, or something, every few hours, and last week locked me up in the cellar while he went shooting. When he returned, after five days' absence, he released me with the remark: "Great Scott, you've got dead yet!" Yesterday I detected him putting arsenic in my tea. What shall I do about it? (2) Are undershirts cut zored with ruffles this winter, or not?—(1) You must win your husband by kindness. Having locked the door under the bed will only make him worse. Plait your hair like a trunk handle so that he can drag you around the floor more easily, and work him a satin-quilted club-holder to hang on the bed-post. The great thing is the proud consciousness of having performed your duty. Do this and all will be well in ten or fifteen days. (2) We'll find out this evening.—San Francisco Post answer to Correspondent.
—Andrews' Bazar, a fashion monthly, is about to adopt a new feature, viz: the illustration and description of fashions for gentlemen. It is hoped the proprietor of the Bazar will not place the new department in the hands of persons who describe female fashions. It would sound odd to read that "gentlemen's trousers this season are cut on the bias in the legs and trimmed with chenille fringe at the knees; coats are longer in the tails, and are worn without an overskirt; vests are cut de-cote in the neck, and are profusely trimmed with gimp braid. Skirts are still worn, but the polonaise is dispensed with; dress coats for parties are belted in the corsage, and the corset basque is worn tight; and—" But this is sufficient. Of course, we should know at once what the writer meant, but there are some fashionable gentlemen whose education has been awfully neglected in this particular.—Norristown Herald.
—Why Kerosene Lamps Explode.
Prof. R. C. Kedzie, M. D., President of the State Board of Health of Michigan and Professor in the State Agricultural College, lately delivered an address before the Michigan Legislature, in which he explained the manner in which kerosene lamps usually explode. He said: "Some persons seem to think the explosion of a kerosene lamp is caused in the same way as a boiler explosion; namely, by the pressure of the vapor of the oil inside the lamp. In rare instances explosions may be caused in this way; for example, where the lamp is heated by the flame and the lamp is enveloped in flame. But explosions usually occur in another way; namely, where the vapor of the kerosene is mixed in proper proportions with air, and then the explosive mixture is formed which will explode with the force of a gunshot when fired by flame. This explains why a lamp is in more danger of exploding when only partially filled with kerosene, because a larger amount of space is filled with the explosive mixture; it is the same as a larger load of powder in a gun. Many persons suppose that there can be no danger of a lamp explosion unless the whole lamp is heated, and the oil is heated to the flashing point; that because the temperature of our rooms never rise to one hundred and twenty degrees there can be no danger in using oil whose flashing point is one hundred and thirty degrees. But Dr. Baker, Secretary of the State Board of Health, has proved by experiment with lamps that an explosive mixture may form and the lamp may explode while the body of oil in the lamp is not above eighty-five degrees Fahrenheit. The temperature of the body of oil in the lamp is not the only factor to be considered, because different parts of the lamp become very unequally heated. If you light a lamp, a flame is formed which has been burning for some time you will find it quite hot, and the tube supporting the wick is still more strongly heated. The formation of vapor will be determined by the hottest part of the lamp which comes in contact with the oil. When the combustion is imperfect from any cause, the brass fittings of the lamp become excessively heated. Dr. Baker found in his experiments that when the chimney was removed by breaking or otherwise, and the lamp continued to burn, the temperature of the brass collar rose very rapidly in every instance; in one case in fourteen minutes it rose to one hundred and sixty-one degrees, and in another case in ten minutes to one hundred and fifty-five degrees Fahrenheit. In this last instance very rapid explosions occurred by the side of the wick, and to prevent the whole lamp from exploding the light was extinguished. In none of these experiments did the temperature of the oil rise above eighty-five degrees Fahrenheit. Many a person on leaving a room 'turn down the lamp' to save oil, but such economy is very liable to cause a lamp explosion, which is anything but economical. I know of a case in Charlotte which illustrates the danger of this practice. A lamp in a store was turned down during the absence of the clerk; a person passing saw the lamp explode, and by promptly breaking into the store he extinguished the fire. If a lamp is needed in a room, either extinguish the lamp or leave it burning with the usual blaze.
It is a noticeable fact that the people in the prairie country of Iowa do more work than any other people in the West. This is because there is nothing about the top rail of a barbed wire fence that invites men to sit on it and talk politics while the grasshoppers get in the crop.—Hank-Eye.

The Open Polar Sea.

Capt. A. B. Tuttle, the Arctic navigator, who claims to have had, and probably has had, a longer and more varied experience as a seaman than almost any man now living, was in the city yesterday on his way to Washington to negotiate with the Government for a small steamer to assist in his further explorations in the Arctic seas. Captain Tuttle is a native of New York, but at the early age of fifteen he ran away from his parents and went to sea, and has ever since—some thirty-five years—been a seafaring man. He is a large and muscular man, with the appearance of having been injured to hardships. He has been all over the globe, he says, and has sailed in every sea, and has made twenty voyages to the Arctic regions. Since his early manhood he has been Captain of whaling and surveying ships. One of the things that particularly attracted his attention in sailing northward was that he found the sea more and more open, especially every fourth year ago, starting from Hakodado, Japan, in a full-rigged ship with forty-five men, all told. In latitude seventy-eight he found an open sea clear of ice. In latitude eighty-one he noticed an extraordinary light, and on taking soundings discovered the cause of it to be immense loads of a magnetic substance in five fathoms of water. It was mixed with minerals and fine particles of gold. In latitude eighty-two he encountered the ice belt, grounded under the water and extending in height in some places over four hundred feet. It stretched East and West as far as the eye could reach. He here discovered the needle pointing South, and in his own mind concluded that the magnetic deposit he had passed had some connection with the direction in which thence usually pointed. By climbing to the highest point of his ship he found it pointed directly into an open polar sea lying beyond, and by tracing along the belt eastward, he found a passage through the sea, with a depth of ninety fathoms, or five hundred and thirty feet of his open sea he found nearly fresh leaves of plants, bananas and other tropical plants flowing on the water, and showing that they had been off the trees but a short time. Last October he sailed from New York, going North through the open passage before mentioned, and also saw migratory birds going North. In July these birds went back South with their young and about the same time he observed the same birds going South. From these facts he concludes that during a considerable part of the year there was a warm climate within the open polar sea, sufficient to produce tropical fruits. In the ice barrier south of his ship he found bones and tracks of the mastodon, which in 1876 he carried to the Centennial at Philadelphia. They were so large that some naturalists thought the animal to which they belonged must have been forty feet in length. He also found some hard wood in the shape of trunks imbedded in the ice. They looked like feeding troughs, and the edges had the appearance of having been gnawed by animals. In sailing West, he struck the North part of the coast of New Siberia, where he found a race of people that he thought no one had ever seen before or heard of. They spoke an unknown language which sounded like Hebrew. They spoke a few words of Hawaiian and the Esquimaux language, and with these and the aid of signs they conveyed the idea that they came from the North. He was a little acquainted with the Esquimaux language, having passed four winters with that people, living on raw walrus, whale blubber and bear meat. During one of these winters, which was without daylight, he made a journey of 380 miles. During his adventurous career he has met with many disasters, the most serious of which was an encounter with a polar bear. He had both arms and both legs broken, and lay one finger in his hand, the other being so badly lacerated by the teeth of the animal that it is sadly out of place. He also lost two ribs, which were completely torn from his body, which bears the marks of having been gnawed by a beast which he thought he could receive and live. The polar bear attained an incredible size, some being reported to weigh as much as 3,000 pounds. He contemplates making another trip to the Arctic, taking forty B. C. he says. "The obedience of a docile son is a blessing. God loves obedience. Disobedience is hated by God. The obedience of a son maketh glad the heart of his father." A son teachable in God's service will be happy in consequences of his obedience; he will grow to be old, he will find favor. This is the earliest appearance of the "first commandment with promise," (Eph. vi. 2) the obedience to God and man which was the essence of Hebrewism. The moral code of the Egyptians was exceedingly elaborate. It consisted of forty-two commandments or heads under which all sins might be classed. This code was the ideal pattern before men on earth. It was the standard of perfection according to which they would be judged in heaven. Some of them are of local interest only, but most belong to the eternal laws of right and wrong written on the tables of the heart. Men were taught from childhood, as children are nowadays taught their catechism, that they must appear in the presence of the Divine Judge and say: "I have not privily done evil to my neighbors. I have not afflicted anyone, nor caused any to weep. I have not told lies. I have not done any wicked thing. I have not done what is hateful to the gods. I have not calumniated the slave to his master. I have not committed adultery. I have not committed murder." And so on. But their commandments were positive as well as negative. On the tombs we find the common formula: "I have given bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothes to the naked, shelter to the stranger." In the lamentations at funerals, the mourners see the deceased entering the presence of the Divine Judge, and they chant the words: "There is no fault in him. No answer riseth up against him. In the truth he liveth, with the truth he nourishes himself. The gods are satisfied with all that he hath done." * * * He succeeded the afflicted, he gave bread to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, clothes to the naked, he sheltered the outcast, his doors were open to the stranger, he was a father to the fatherless." This was the principle of the final judgment announced by the Son of Man, to whom "all judgment is committed," some 4,000 years afterward, among the hills of Palestine. This tenderness for suffering humanity is characteristic of the nation. Gratefully does a man acknowledge in his autobiography (4,000 B. C.). "Wandering I have seen at the hungry, bread was set before me; I fled from the land naked, there was given me fine linen." It is a glory to a man that "the poor shall make their nation at the door of his tomb. An inscription on the tomb of Beni-Hassan, written about 2,500 B. C., reads: "I have not oppressed any widow. No prisoner languished in my days. No one died of hunger. When there were years of famine I had my fields ploughed for the poor, and I gave them seed. I was not a hungry person. I gave the widow equal portions with the married. I did not prefer the rich to the poor." On a wall of the temple of Karnak there is a scene of a man, a French extraliminary treaty. It is between Ramesses II. and a Khetian prince. The last clause provides that political fugitives are to be sent back, with the following humane provision for their personal safety: "Whoever shall be delivered up, himself, his wives, his children, let him not be smitten to the death; moreover, let him not suffer in the eyes, in the mouth, in the feet; moreover, let not any crime be set up against him." This treaty was engraved in the Khetian prince on a silver tablet. In a volume of maxims we read: "Mal-treat not an inferior. Let your wife find in you her protector; maltreat her not. Save not your own life at the cost of another." On the tomb of a man at El-Kalb (4,000 B. C.) it is recorded that he "never left home with anger in his heart."—Fortnightly Review.

—Why Bender Dissolved Partnership with Brown.
Any gentleman you will go around your face and talk in fact of your back, and you will find a shivder. I hear dot Brown say weck peck next about me, I was a henck-pecked husband. Dot was a lie. De proof of de eating was in de puddings; I am married twenty year already, and I was not yet bald. I don't vas wonder some pettygoats governments; still I ticks it was better if a feller vill insult mit life, and got her advice about something or other.
Deen American voman don't know somethings nofer about her husband's peesness, and ven den hart times comes, and nat so much money comes in de house, dot makes not some tiffel of dot bulback in de front hoop-skirt pettygoats, mit efer kind of trimmings. Pooty soon dot lusband get bankrupted all to pieces. They send for the doctor, and vhen de doctor comes dot makes de lusband vatter. Deen voman vas obliged to maye like mit four six children, on account of her first wife already, and possibly one or two mucklers by law—vone second-handled, and de other a step under outlar. Deen she says mit herself, "I often wish I vas dead a little."
Now if a Chermans goes dead dot makes no inference. Nopody would hardly know it, except him; at life vases on mit de peesness shunt like notings has happened to somebody.
American voman and Cherman vomaas vas a different kind of beoples. For instinet, dot same feller goes mit de lusband to lupture de heart of de vife. Vell, many times, ven efer peoplet got de panic pooty bad, dot voman comes to her husband and says she moost have money. Den she goes out ridling mit a carriage.
Vonce upon a time Brown says to me, "Bender, I wouldn't be henck-pecked." So he went off and got hisself tight shunt because his vife tells him these don't do it. Den he sits down under his back on de floor, and if I am not dere dot time he never would get home.
Vell, dot night, me and mine vife, we had a little talk about somethings, and den de next day I says to Brown: "Look here vone mit de lusband vas a muckler, and vork in de store, also muckler, she vorks in de store and makes head sheeze; and your vife vas going out ridling all de time mit de muckler, and a patent tied back efer striped stockings. Now your vife muck go vork in de store and eat beefsteaks and make sauerkraut, or else ve divide not equally and more dot profits."
Vell, Brown goes home and he tells his vife about dot. Den she comes pooty quick mit Brown around, and had misunderstanding about somethings, in vich eferbody took a part, including de little dot Kaiser. Pooty soon up comes a bolliceman, and arrested us for breeches of promise to keep the pieces, and assaulting de battery, or somethings. Den de firm Bender & Brown was broken up. I go about my peesness, and Brown goes mit his peesness. My vife she helps in de store. His vife goes ridling mit de horse-car, and efer night she vas by de theater.

Vot de consequences? Along comes dot Centennial panic. Dot knocks Brown higher as two kites, by jimmint! My income is still more as my out-comer. Dot Brown, he goes around de streets mit his hands out of his pockets, and he don't got a cent in his pack.
—Negro Slavery Under English Rule.
The English slave trade, in fact, began with Sir John Hawkins in the year 1562. He had obtained leave from the Queen to carry Africans to America with their own free consent; but he forced them on board his ship, not without slaughter, and escaped without punishment; nay, a few years later, received high honor from the Queen. When Virginia attained a fixed condition as a colony—scarcely before 1615, in which year fifty acres of land were assigned to every emigrant and his wife—the cultivation of tobacco instantly followed. Five years later a Dutch ship brought a cargo of negroes from the coast of Africa, whom the Virginians (a mixed body of very low morals) joyfully received as slaves. But neither the slave trade nor slavery had any legal sanction. King James was always in debt, and far too much occupied with his own miserable pleasures to care about such a peccadillo, though in granting a new Constitution for Virginia he reserved a veto to their laws for the court in England. Under James I. and Charles I. the English Parliament was helpless, and the slavery was introduced by other means; children and grandchildren were born in slavery, and the system spread to our new colonies on the continent. Of the West Indian Islands most were occupied, and slavery introduced by other means, and common sense taught every child in England, in conquering them, found slavery existing. No sooner had we got free from the struggle against the Stuarts than King William III. involved us in continued war. Our growing maritime power sufficed to enforce anything upon the colonies on which Parliament was bent; but the mass of the people knew little about the negroes, and the religion of Protestants, known extraliminary treaty. It is the mere letter of the Bible, was not at all shocked by the idea of slavery. It was otherwise with the slave trade. Man-stealing is denounced by name in the New Testament as an odious wickedness, and common sense taught every one that to hunt and capture Africans for slaves or to buy them of the captors was as gross and indefensible a cruelty as if Algerines were to land on our coasts and carry Englishmen into slavery. It was not until the year 1807, when the Khetian prince on a silver tablet. In a volume of maxims we read: "Mal-treat not an inferior. Let your wife find in you her protector; maltreat her not. Save not your own life at the cost of another." On the tomb of a man at El-Kalb (4,000 B. C.) it is recorded that he "never left home with anger in his heart."—Fortnightly Review.
—Care of Harness.
There are few people who know how to take proper care of harness, and who understand the extent of the damage that arises from carelessness in this respect. Harness that has been exposed to a storm for hours if not rightly cleaned and hung up when it is taken off will be irreparably damaged. The Harness Journal advises every harness maker to give a printed copy of rules for the preservation of the article to each purchaser. It also gives the following valuable suggestions, which, if followed, will keep harness looking nice for many years: The first point to be observed is to keep the leather soft and pliable; this can be done only by keeping it well charged with oil and grease; water is a destroyer of these, but mud and the saline moisture from the animal are even more destructive. Mud drying absorbs the grease and opens the pores of the leather, making it a ready prey to water, while the salty character of the perspiration from the animal injures the leather, stretching and cracking it. It therefore follows that to preserve a harness the straps should be oiled whenever it has been moistened by sweat or soiled by mud. To do this effectually the straps should all be unbuckled, and detached, then washed with a little water and good soap, then coated with a mixture of neatfoot oil and tallow, and be allowed to remain undisturbed until the water has dried out; then thoroughly rubbed with a brush, the rubbing is important, as it is in addition to removing the surplus oil and grease, tends to close the pores and gives a finish to the leather. In hanging harnesses care should be taken to allow all straps to hang their full length; bridles, pads, gig saddles and collars should be hung upon forms of the shape of each. Light is essential in the care of leather, and when the harness closet is dark the door should be left open least half of the time during each day. All closets should be ventilated, and when possible they should be well lighted. To clean plated mountings use a camels hair with a little turpentine, if possible. Rubber covered goods are cleaned in the same way. Leather covered needs to be well brushed and rubbed with a clean towel near, and when unduly exposed treated as we have recommended, the leather will retain its softness and strength for many years.
The ordinary life of a locomotive engine is stated at thirty years. Some of the small parts require renewal every six months. The boiler tubes last five years, and the crank-axes six years; tires, boilers and fire-boxes six to seven years. The side-frames, axles, and other parts thirty years.
The Melbourne Exposition is to open October 1 and close March 31, 1880. It is expected to do great things for Australian trade. January and February are very hot months in Australia.
A CENTRAL PARK, New York, official gets $1,650 a year, and has a man to do his work for $1 a day.
SITTING BULL, our American Minister to Canada, is about to return to his native land.—New Orleans Picayune.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The tea season at Hong Kong closed on Jan. 4; the total exports for the year were 157,000,000 pounds.
ST. PETERSBURG is now begirt with revolving ironclad towers.
It is said that no less than thirty officers high in authority in the Russian police have been assassinated since the murder of Mesentzoff, the Chief of Police in St. Petersburg.
Besides the funded national debt of Great Britain the floating liabilities of the British Treasury amount to about $140,000,000 and the question is what to do with this debt.
On the 27th of July next the Bank of England will be 185 years old. The charter, granted at first for eleven years, has been removed from time to time. In the large building on Threadneedle street eight hundred persons are now employed.
Since their accession to the throne King Humbert and Queen Margareta have never once presented themselves at a gala night at the Roman Theatre, the King being unwilling to become a mark for a bullet. Garibaldi wrote a letter a few weeks since to Alberto Merio in which he says: "In modern days justice has its seat in a leaden bullet well directed."
Owing to the severity of the weather, the forests of the Bernese Jura are infested by hordes of wild boars, sometimes so numerous as to defy attack. Bands of wolves loiter about the farus at night, and hundreds of loutery chamois have descended from the mountains, and are wandering about the valleys in search of food.
A RAILWAY employee in France, by way of a piece of bravado, lit his pipe with ticket No. 955,089 in the French lottery, and that there might be no doubt on the subject, he chalked the figures on a wall in the presence of several of his comrades, who stood all agape at the sight. Now, chance has so willed that the number in question has turned out a famous prize, and had the employee only been able to produce his ticket he would have received in exchange the sum—to him a fortune—of 24,000 francs.
THE CAP is said to be resolved upon the thorough reorganization of the Russian navy. He is very dissatisfied with the insignificant part played by his fleet during the recent war, especially with the ironclads, for which he has acquired a deep aversion. So important addition will be made to the Baltic fleet for several years to come, the energies of the Government being directed toward the creation of a fleet in the Black sea.
During their trial the City of Glasgow Bank Directors were permitted on Sunday to go out into the country in a closed carriage to take the air, a fact which moved an English paper to ask "whether there is no exercising yard and no Governor's garden within the walls of the Glasgow Tolbooth; and whether a tinker, indicted for larceny, would be taken for an airing on Sunday in the case of his trial extending over that day."
The steamer Coburg has, after several unsuccessful attempts, at last forced passage up the River San Juan from the sea to Lake Nicaragua. This feat cannot fail to have important results in extending the trade of this portion of Central America, and will no doubt give a fresh impetus to the plans for the construction of an interoceanic canal by this route. The length of the River San Juan from its mouth to its outflow from the lake is sixty-three miles; the lake itself is about fifty-six miles in length, leaving sixty-four miles—the remainder of the distance across the Isthmus—to be cut artificially. The cost of the undertaking has been estimated at $100,000,000.
AFTER all the experiences and lessons of the past few years, the German army still remains superior to all others in point of organization and discipline. In France, as in Austria, soldiers do not pass through the same school. Of the three categories of men which the divided troops of the line retain in service only three years, and the regiments of the reserve and the landwehr receive only a few months' instruction. In Germany, on the contrary, all soldiers must serve in the line for fifty-six months; the troops of the line receive only three months' instruction. The committee for encouraging the use of horseflesh as an article of food have issued a return showing that the number of horses, asses and mules slaughtered in Paris for consumption in 1878 was 11,619, or 700 more than in the previous year. The continued increase in the use of horseflesh is, they say, a proof that the prejudice against it is being gradually overcome. A prize of 1,200 francs was awarded by M. Deceiro to the founder of the first shop for the sale of horseflesh, in London, opened in May last. That venture, during the four months it was carried on, did not, however meet with all the desired success, the chief reason for which was, the committee say, that the director was quite ignorant of the English language. The committee now offer a medal of honor to any English butcher who shall take up the trade and continue it for three months at least.
The St. Gotthard tunnel is now the longest tunnel in the world, the length, bored from both sides, reaching a total of 13,481 yards—23 yards longer than the Mont Cenis. Very nearly 3,000 yards still remain to be excavated. Most of the laborers employed in the galleries are Italians. They work night and day in shifts of eight hours each, and their work is described as being terribly severe. The heat is so great that they can wear no clothes whatever. They return to the mouth of the tunnel streaming with perspiration, their faces are yellow and ghastly, they cannot bear the light of the sun, they walk with bent shoulders, and stagger as if carrying burdens too heavy for their strength. They are nevertheless said to be cheerful, and even merry. They support their hard lot without repining, and save money.
A SANITINE estimator gives Texas an increase of over 300,000 inhabitants within two years.

Has the Maine Law Hurt Maine?

(From the New York Observer.)
The New York Herald has a letter from Portland, complaining of the stringency of our anti liquor law, and asserting that it injures the business of the town and of the State, at the same time that it admits its favorable influence upon the morals of the people.

If it were true that the prohibition of the grog-shops is injurious to the business of the State, prohibition must go to the wall, because the virtue and piety of the State are not equal to the strain that would be put upon them in an effort to sustain the moral and spiritual interests of the community in any way involving an injury, however slight, to "trade."

This cry that the Maine Law "hurts trade" has been repeated many times by the enemies of temperance in other States, but it has never been uttered here in any respectable quarter, and all our intelligent people know that it is false in whole and in part. On the contrary, the law helps trade by saving to the State the health, character and lives of the people from the malignant influence of the liquor traffic, and by saving at least $10,000,000 a year, which but for the law would be wasted in drink; and another sum, fully equal in amount, which would be lost and wasted directly and indirectly in many ways through the grog-shops. It is not too much to say that Maine is a gainer by the Maine Law in the annual accumulating wealth of the people to the amount of $20,000,000.

Maine has suffered far less in this financial crisis than any other State, by reason of this vast saving of the wages of labor, which but for the Law would have been wasted in drink. Some time ago I saw this same statement in the New York Sun, in a letter from Portland, that the city had lost a large amount of most valuable business, never to return, as the result of the Maine Law, while the State had lost a large amount of revenue.

The State never at any time received a penny of revenue, directly or indirectly, from the grog-shops; nor is it true Portland has suffered financially from the Law in any way. I took this letter of the Sun at the time to the cashier of our largest bank, and asked him if the statement was true. His reply was: "Portland was never doing a more satisfactory business than now; some branches of trade are dull or depressed, but the general trade of the city was never better than now, as the traders will tell you." I went directly to a great wholesale house and said: "The New York Sun has a letter from Portland, saying that the Maine Law has greatly injured the business of the city; what is the fact?" His reply was exactly in these words: "I have been in business in Portland nineteen years, and have never had half so good a business as now,—nor payments so satisfactory. Other merchants will tell you very much the same." Our people are enabled to buy and pay for necessary, useful, convenient and beautiful goods, because they do not spend their money in drink.

Portland lost $10,000,000 in 1866 in a great conflagration, and 10,000 people were turned out of doors in a night. But the valuation of the city has been since constantly increasing, and is now larger than ever before, having gained $180,000 the last year under prohibition, while Boston, with "license" (free rum) lost $70,000,000. You, Mr. Editor, know much better than I do, how much New York and Brooklyn have lost. Four hundred and eighty thousand dollars are not a large sum in this connection, but it is better on the right side of the ledger, than a very great sum on the wrong side.

The Herald correspondent says: "The hotels have all they can do to pay rent; the bar is closed in each." That may be true about the "rent." Great hotels generally pay their rent and make money beside from the profits of the liquor they sell; but the bars are not for the accommodation of the guests of the house, but for outsiders. A friend of mine asked a landlord of one of our great hotels who complained that he could not sell liquors:

"Do you want a bar for the guests of the house?"

"No; for outsiders."

"Outsiders? who are they?"

"O, citizens who come in, townspeople who play billiards and are constantly passing on the sidewalk, who call in for drinks."

"Then why do you run a great, costly hotel for that? Why not have only a bar with the billiard room?"

"Why, then outsiders would not come in; the hotel renders the bar respectable, or at least when outsiders come in, persons who see them do not know it is to obtain drink."

A plan that great hotels should be allowed to sell liquors so as to draw in outsiders and make money from them in that way, is no more legitimate than one would be that they should be allowed to have a department for gambling, and another as a house of ill fame, and another for selling lottery tickets, and another where dealers in base money could meet their customers. If a house is needed for legitimate hotel purposes, it will pay; and if a great hotel will not pay in that way, its deficiencies should not be made good by any process which will inevitably impoverish, pauperize and degrade the people.

The Herald correspondent frankly admits the fact that the Maine Law does prohibit, does effectually extinguish the grog-shops, great and small, marble counters and dirty step boards all alike. In this he is truthful, while a great many say falsely that the law is a failure, and that there is as much liquor sold as ever. A committee of our Legislature has just issued a most candid report on this matter, asserting that "the consumption of liquor is as large" as before the law. The fact is that the quantity of them consumed in Maine is not one-twentieth as large as before the law, while the most careful and cautious say that the quantity is not one-tenth as large.

NEAL DOW.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

PUBLIC SALE.

I will offer for sale or rent the following well known farms: The

OLD CASTLE FARM,

containing 250 acres. The

McHENRY FARM,

containing 150 acres of cleared land, with good buildings, suitable for summer board, and for other water use; also the

DEER CREEK FARM,

containing 75 acres cleared land in cultivation. These farms will be sold on Wednesday, March 26th,

at 10 o'clock, at the place, to be held at the McHenry Farm.

I will also, at the same time and place, sell Horses, Cows, Sheep, Dogs, Young Cattle, Grain, Hay, Potatoes, Cabbages and House-hold and Kitchen Furniture.

For description of property and terms of sale, see handbills.

WILLIAM CASTELL.

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given,

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to view the lands through which the petition of A. Miller and P. L. Garfield and others, for the road leading from the Line Stone Quarry, or Summit Quarry, to Spring Hill road, and crossing the line of the Baltimore and Annapolis road, should be held, will meet on the 1st day of March, at 10 o'clock, at the place, to be held at the McHenry Farm.

For description of property and terms of sale, see handbills.

WILLIAM CASTELL.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT COUNTY, NO. 35—INSOLVENTS—SAMUEL SPEIGHT VS. HIS CREDITORS.

I, the undersigned, give notice to his creditors, that he has filed in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, to answer such interrogatories or allegations as his creditors, creditors and sureties may propose to allege and prove, and that a copy of this notice is published in the New York Sun, and in the Baltimore Sun, and in the Washington Post, on the 1st day of March, at 10 o'clock, at the place, to be held at the McHenry Farm.

W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

True copy—test.

W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

Road Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given,

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to examine and view the lands through which the road petitioned for by Peter Cooper, Jos. H. Cooper, James McCreedy and others is to pass: The said road to lead from the line of the Baltimore and Annapolis road, and crossing the line of the Baltimore and Annapolis road, should be held, will meet on the 1st day of March, at 10 o'clock, at the place, to be held at the McHenry Farm.

For description of property and terms of sale, see handbills.

WILLIAM CASTELL.

HEADACHE PILLS

NEURALGIA

"Dr. J. W. Benson, a

practicing physician at 106

St. Louis, Mo., who has paid much

attention to nervous diseases, has discovered that

Extract of Coleridge and

Chamomile combined in

pill form, cures either bilious

or dyspeptic nervous or

headache, neuralgia and

neuritis. This is a tri-

umph in medical chemis-

try, and sufferers all over

the country are ordering

it by mail. He prepares

in pills, at such prices, per box,

that the doctor is largely

known and highly respected in Baltimore.—Eps.

Dr. J. W. Benson, 106

St. Louis, Mo., who has paid much

attention to nervous diseases, has discovered that

Extract of Coleridge and

Chamomile combined in

pill form, cures either bilious

or dyspeptic nervous or

headache, neuralgia and

neuritis. This is a tri-

umph in medical chemis-

try, and sufferers all over

the country are ordering

it by mail. He prepares

in pills, at such prices, per box,

that the doctor is largely

known and highly respected in Baltimore.—Eps.

MISCELLANEOUS.

An Agent Wanted in this Locality, to Supply the Rapid Demand.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success!

The Former High Priced Machines REDUCED TO

TWENTY DOLLARS

Thoroughly warranted and sent to you for Examination Before You Pay For it.

And no obligation to keep one, if not better than any machine you ever had.

EVERY FAMILY CAN NOW OWN A FIRST-CLASS SEWING MACHINE.

The Old Favorite and Reliable STANDARD

SEWING MACHINE $20.

ACKNOWLEDGES NO SUPERIOR!!

We Can Not Make a Better Machine at Any Price.

A Superior First-Class Shuttle Double Thread Lock Stitch machine, more complete in equipments than any other, and combining all the late improvements, with the old and well tried qualities for which the STANDARD IS SO FAVORABLE.

A Faithful Family Sewing Machine is every one of the word—it runs smooth and does every description of plain and fancy sewing with ease and certainty—so strong and well made, and so thoroughly tested while in use for years in Thousands of Families, that each machine that leaves our Factory is warranted for five years, and kept in order free of charge.

Money refunded at once if not perfectly satisfactory. Reduced to Twenty Dollars by more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

more complete outfit of numerous and useful attachments for all kinds of work free of any

extra charge than is given with any other machine of any price. The Standard Machine has

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

—OF—

The Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1.50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of

Merchants, Mechanics, and Business

Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

GOOD PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing

purposes, an assortment of the best

Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards,

Business Cards,

Circulars,

Letter-Heads,

Bill-Heads,

Legal Blanks,

Certificates,

Envelopes,

Tags,

Statements, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

—COMPLETE—

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

G. J. SHIRER,

MANUFACTURER OF

TIN AND SHEET-IRON WARE

AND DEALER IN

Stoves and Stove Linings of all kinds.

Also agents in Oakland for the celebrated

Arlington Cook Stove,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

WAREHOUSE ON OAK STREET,

(OPPOSITE WHITE HOTEL),

OAKLAND, MD.

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of

September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday

of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.

Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter

and Geo. A. Penne.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.

Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.

State's Attorney—Jno. W. Vetch.

Court Auditor—W. P. Townsend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmer

S. Hamill and A. B

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

GOIN' HOME TO-DAY.

My business on the jury's done—the quibbles
all through
I've watched the lawyers right and left, and give my verdict time.
But now the court's adjourned for good, and I have got my pay.
I'm loose at last, and, thank the Lord, I'm goin'
home to-day.

I've somehow felt uneasy like, since first day I came down;
It is an awkward game to play the gentleman in town.
And this 'ere Sunday suit of mine, on Sunday
rightly sets,
But when I wear the stuff a week, it somehow galls and frets.

I have no doubt my wife looked out, as well as anyone—
As well as any woman could—to see that things were done.
But nothing prospers half so well when I go off
to-day.
And I will put things into shape when I get home
to-day.

The morning that I came away, we had a little bunt;
I could look my hat and left before the show
was out.
But then, she's first one to give up, when she has had her say;
And she will meet me with a kiss, when I go
home to-day.

My little boy—I'll give 'em leave to match him
if they can;
It's fun when he can start about, and try to beat
me.
The girls, too, I'll give 'em leave to match him
if they can;
It's fun when he can start about, and try to beat
me.

The little boy—I'll give 'em leave to match him
if they can;
It's fun when he can start about, and try to beat
me.
The girls, too, I'll give 'em leave to match him
if they can;
It's fun when he can start about, and try to beat
me.

My little girl—I can't contrive how it should happen this;
That God should pick that sweet bouquet, and hang it down to me.
My wife she says that han'some face will some day make a stir;
And then I laugh, because I think the child resembles her.
She'll meet me half-way down the hill, and kiss
me, anyway.
And light my heart up with her smiles, when I go home to-day.

It there's a heaven upon the earth, a fellow knows it when He's been away from home a week, and then gets back again.
—W. M. Carleton, in Detroit Tribune.

LAL.

We colonists are apt to say that there is no twilight in New Zealand, when waxing sentimental over memories of the land of our birth, and recalling many a pleasant half-hour "between the lights."

But although we have no lingering dusk, sunset with us seems to have a peculiar beauty, and a tender power to steal into one's heart. Many a time have I, rough colonial as I am, stood,
on my way home, to watch the fantastic clouds and colors of the sky as night
drew on.

Such a sunset-glow lit up the whole sky and the scud-dying sea beneath, one autumn evening many years ago, as I was riding home on a tired horse after a hard day's pounding after the outlying sheep.

At that time I was about thirty years old, and had a snug little place, as manager
on one of Lalworth & Clint's great runs near Nelson. Five hundred a year, with unlimited grub, and a sufficiently weather-tight house, was the station with no bad thing for a penniless man with no interest; and I often plumed myself on my own good luck when I came across other fellows with twice my brains and a little money who could hardly pay for their bread and cheese.

"A beautiful sky, Sprightly," I said,
patting my old chestnut as he carefully picked his way down the face of a steep hill covered with manuka scrub and yellowing fern; "but a wind to-morrow,
and rain before to-morrow night."

Sprightly shook his head till the bridle rang, and stepped out at my voice.
Winding down we went, till the immense hill ended abruptly in a level reach of sand, where, where we could canter for a couple of miles.

The sunset colors were fading from the high peaks we had left, but enough light lingered on the flat to give brilliant hues to the rocks which towered
above our heads or lay like fallen giants in our path, while far out to sea, beyond the shadow of the shore, stretched
a long streak of amber.

I rode that way twice a week, as a rule, sometimes oftener, but never do I remember to have met a living creature to exchange good-night with till this particular evening, when no sooner had Sprightly started at a weary canter
over the flat than I pulled him up short in sheer amazement, for there in front
was a fellow dressed like a picture, riding at a foot pace just in the direction we were going in too.

"Who the deuce can it be?" was my first mental observation. "Ten to one it's some new chum come to my out the land, though I'll answer that chap don't know a sheep when he sees it."

As I neared my unconscious friend I took in the fact that he rode his horse
like a gentleman; that his saddle, bridle
and saddle-bags were new and glossy; that, in fact, from his faintly
wide-awake to his English-made boots,
he was a new chum. Riding up alongside I observed a white collar and a pair of dog-skin gloves, which removed any lingering doubts as to the fact.

"Good evening, mate," I called out,
when I got up to the stranger; "going far to-night?"

"Not much farther, I hope," he answered, turning a face of almost girlish beauty upon me, and slightly raising his hat. "But that is a question I should be glad to ask you; that is, if you know this part of the country well."

"Lived here these six years, and know every corner a sheep can hide
in," I answered rather grimly, contrasting his high-bred accents with my own colonialisms.

"Ah! then you can tell me where is this Wyke station?"

"This Wyke station," I replied, in my crustiest manner, "is where I hope to be ending my supper in half an hour's time. And pray, sir, what may be your business there?"

The new corner turned to look more closely at me.

"Why, you must be—of course you must be—Ralph Westcott, the very man
I am going to see."

"I am Ralph Westcott," I rejoined,

seeing he paused, as if expecting me to say something.

"I thought so. Well, I am Fairfax
Clint. How d'ye do? I am awfully glad to meet you on this dreary and infernal mud-flat." So saying, he extended his hand with such a cordial gesture that I felt ashamed of my bearish manners, and gave him a hearty grip.

"Didn't the Governor write and tell you I was coming out?" he asked, as we resumed our journey.

"Several mails back he wrote that you might possibly be sent out, but I never heard anything certain."

"Oh, well, you see, Westcott, the Governor is getting old, and closer and more suspicious every day. Lately he won't even allow a fellow an opinion of his own. So one fine morning I got marching, or rather sailing, orders, and here I am."

All this was said in the same quiet, rather bored manner which had set my back up before; still I could not help softening to the boy when I looked at his face and saw how unfit he would prove for station life.

"And what do you intend to do, Mr.
Clint, now that you are here?" I asked,
after a pause.

"Do? O, nothing that I know of. I suppose I shall stay with you till I get orders to start again. I'll go about with you, unless you don't want my company; and I suppose I must write a report for the Governor's benefit, every month, in which I hope you'll help me."

He laughed as if there was a joke
somewhere, but for my part I felt rather put out. Here was a great baby sent out for me to take in tow, and yet
all the time he was my "boss," and had to report on my management. I was a bit of an autoerater on my station,
and resented this.

Fairfax Clint seemed to guess what I was thinking. "Look here, Westcott," he said, touching my horse's back with his whip, and speaking in a more manly and earnest tone, which I liked better, "my father's all wrong in this business. What's the use of sending me out to overlook his runs, when I know
less than a child about such things;
but that's no business of mine, and still less of yours. Let us be friends while we are together. Forget that my name is Clint at all. Call me Fairfax, and fancy me a new hand you've just picked up to clean your boots and saddle your horse. I can do both, I assure you."

All the while he had been speaking
we had slowly climbed a steep hill,
clothed with white flowering, manuka and fern. As he ceased we reached the summit, and began to descend on the other side, so my only answer was to point out the stockyard in the valley at our feet, flanked by a single storied wooden house.

"There's Wyke Station. I've lived here for six years, and am glad to welcome a son of the firm to it."

"That's kindly said," he answered, gravely, falling back in the narrow path. "I'll follow you, and only trust
this brute is sure-footed."

We reached the stock-yard and tied up our horses, the dogs barking out welcome to us, and the cook, opening the house door and showing a warm glow of firelight.

"Come in, Mr. Clint," I said, "and be prepared to rough it. This is the kitchen; here's the parlor, which is the drawing-room, smoking-room and feeding-room in one; you see there is no lack of dry wood here, so we have good fires; here's the bedroom, and left hand room shall be got ready for you by the time supper's over. Meantime, make yourself at home, and use mine," and having, as I thought, done the honors handsomely, I kicked the smoldering logs into a crackling blaze, and left him in possession of my sanctum. When I came in from seeing to our horses I found Clint in the kitchen, already at home, chattering to Tom, as that old rascal fired mutton-chop and potatoes,
and rain before to-morrow night."

"By Jove, I never thought of my horse," he exclaimed in consternation,
as he caught sight of me coming in;
"from the yard with his and my saddle;
"why on earth didn't you tell me, Westcott?"

"Did you think we kept a groom
here?" I retorted. "Never mind, young 'un; you shall do both horses tomorrow, I promise you. Show a light, Tom, while I wash my hands, and then for supper, for I'm starving."

Before a week was over Fairfax Clint was familiar with every corner of the run, and had made himself popular with all hands.

Never did I know a human being with such a gift of fascination, or such an inextinguishable flow of spirits and quaint humor.

Yet he was never noisy, very seldom laughed, and about his face and voice
sometimes seemed to hang a melan-cholly shadow. I thought, afterward,
a foreboding of what was coming.

But, as I say, never was there a man
so popular; even our rugged old Scotch shepherd found a smile for Clint's cheerful. "Well, old Thistles," while as for Tom, our cook and man of all work, I verily believe the happiest moments of his life were when Fairfax took it into his head to assist in the kitchen, making Tom fetch the ingredients and wait on him, while he elaborated unceasing dishes for our evening meal.

Though at first I had hated the idea
of any one always following me about,
and had perhaps found Clint's ignorance rather boring after the first amusement were off, still I got quite to miss the lad when ever he went off to Nelson for a day or two, and to feel lonely and off my feed when I sat down without his face at the other end of my table.

Among other of his fancies, when first he came, was one for a garden.
"Waste of time," I growled. "The weeds will out run the flowers." But he laughed at me and set to work all the same, and really he worked well;
for though digging blistered his hands,
and the sun scorched his face brick-color, he persevered until he had a plot of ground fenced in and planted to his mind.

"Flowers are great humanizers," he would say; "only look at those children, my dear Ralph."

"The children?" were a dirty, ragged, barefooted quartet from our second shepherd's hut; who hovered about wherever Clint was, and worshipped him as a wonderful being from a world afar.

Poor little wretches! At one time I had made some efforts to improve them;
and, thinking it best to strike at the root of the matter, began by urging their miserable, reprobate mother to introduce something like order and neatness into their hut. But I never made the attempt twice, being met by a torrent of half-dipsy abuse, and threatened with loss of her husband—an invaluable station hand, and one I should really have been unwilling to lose.

The only step I could take to mitigate the nuisance was to remove the whole family to a hillside, a mile further from the station, where Mrs. Mahady's peculiarities were less obtrusive. It would have seemed a wretched place,
perhaps, to many an English cottager, perched on a hillside, roughly built of planks half an inch apart, and thatched with towgrass. But, such as it was,
I've known people to live happily there,
and make it look neat and pleasant,
too. Pretty it could not fail to be in such a situation, and it always seemed to me a sin to poison such a view with cabbage-stalks, and potato-parings, and heaps of stinking mussel-shells.

Did the miserable, shock-headed imps
who sprawled among the few thatches
and shingles, never see the yellow sands
below their hill-side, and the restless, never changing sea? Did they never look up and learn anything from the peaks overhead, which, clothed in right shrubs and heather, towered above
till they set a sharp gleam of snow
against the blue of the sky?

These are some of the questions I used to ask myself when I first went to Wyke; but, you see, I had no time to think about them. I was a new reformer, after I had removed the blot a little further from my own door. I forgot all about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

In fact, I fell half in love with the
right shrubs and heather, and forgot all
about the needs, material and spiritual, of the young Mahadys.

new view of Lal to dispart it, and my companion passed on to other subjects.
"So soon as I parted from him I rode back quickly to the spot where we passed the sleeping girl. But she was gone, and I had to ride home without deciding the question whether parson's eyes or mine had been mistaken. At the veranda door, however, I saw Lal with her milk-can waiting till Tom chose to find time to fill it for her, leaning cross-legged against the door-post,
and looking moodily out at sea."

I walked up and took a critical survey. A long-limbed girl, with a very short and rather ragged stuff frock;
bare feet, brown as berries; arched hands to match; a good deal of brown hair, which lately she had taken to brushing and tying back with a serap of faded ribbon; a thin face, with a flush of bright color in the cheeks; and a pair of brown eyes, which were always watchful and suspicious to me,
but soft and wistful to Clint. My eyes, sharpened by the parson's careless remark, took note of all these points; and I summoned Lal sharply to me.

"Well, Mr. Westcott," coming unwillingly, and scowling at me with her curled black brows.

"How old are you, Lal?"

"I've turned fifteen last summer, but it ain't no business of yours, is it, Mr.
Westcott?"

"Not much, perhaps; but you are growing a big girl, and ought to go to service somewhere. Wouldn't you like to go away from this dull place?"

"Go away from the station," echoed Lal, all the color fading out of her face
as she raised her startled eyes to mine;
"I couldn't do it. Besides, who'd like to have me for a servant?" she added,
with a scornful little laugh.

"But if you'd like to try it, Lal, I could try for you. I went on, but she interrupted me fiercely:

"Look here, Mr. Westcott; I know I ain't a good girl, but I don't know as ever I did you any harm that you should try and drive me away. You can't go, I can't, I can't! I should die
if I couldn't never see his face nor hear him speak."

In the frenzy of passion and excitement which possessed her, Lal had fallen on her knees, and clutched my coat with both her hands, looking up with an agony of supplication, as if I could decide her fate. Here was a pretious situation for Ralph Westcott, manager, to stand in!

"Lal, my dear, don't be a fool," I interceded, disjunctly. "What nonsense is this? You shan't go away unless you like, but for Heaven's sake get up and behave yourself! There, that's better."

I said, as she dragged herself back to her feet, and stretched out her hand mechanically for her milk can, which had rolled off the veranda. "Now, Lal, be a good girl, and go home, and make up your mind never to talk such nonsense. The night nurse says Mr. Clint is a gentleman, and will be a very rich
one when his father dies, and how could you for one moment suppose—"

Lal put up her hand with a pathetic gesture to stop me.

"Lord," she cried, with her bitter little laugh, which was always made augry; "it's you as is talking nonsense
now! Don't you think I know he's set above us like the stars; and as if he could ever look at the likes of I? But that don't make no difference to me that I know of," she added, dropping all at once into a low tone of indescribable despair, and turning away. At this moment we both saw Clint returning with the dogs from a bath in the river.
He stopped a moment to pick a peach as he passed through old Reuben the Ma-or's garden, but we heard his clear voice singing: "Then tell me how to win thee, lad, then tell me how to win thee," as if in unconscious mockery of Lal's misery and pain. For once I felt really out of patience with Clint's beautiful good humor.

"Go home, child," I cried, sharply,
and Lal vanished without another word. I walked over the fence to meet Fairfax.

"Ralph, my boy, you look very glum!
How delicious those peaches are!" he added, feasting an another.

"Should I tell him I'm a secret, and beg him to show the wretched girl less kindness for the future?"

Whether wisely or not, I spoke.

"Fairfax, I have been talking to that poor girl Lal. She's a lovely creature, and I want her to go out to service."

"Whew! my prize pupil!" cried Clint, making a long face. "Well, my dear patriarch, and what will Miss Mahady say? Well, really, Clint, it's too absurd.
And yet it's a pity for the poor little soul, too. The fact is she has such a profound adoration for you that nothing will induce her to consent to it."

Clint looked amazed and then announced:

"Alack! alack! is this to be the end of my philanthropic efforts?" he cried
at last. "You don't really mean, Ralph, that you won't go because—because—"

"Upon my word, it's too preposterous. Well, Ralph," he went on, pettishly, after a pause, during which I lit my pipe and tried to look more comfortable than I felt, "what's a fellow to do now? Poor Lal! she had tried so awfully hard to learn and get
on. Perhaps you misunderstood her."

I shook my head.

"I don't pretend to understand these things, Clint, but it is a very real thing with her. How would it be for you to go on that visit to the Vernons you are always intending to pay? Stay a week or two, and I'll undertake to talk to Lal, and make her take a place at Dorrady's farm, Tureent. I know they want a dairy hand."

So Clint agreed, and, as the boat was going across next day for stores, we had no time to discuss and unsettle the matter. Lal, of course, saw the boat start, for she and her brother were always moving before any one else on the run; and Clint waved his hand to her,
and called out in his cheery way:
"Good-by, young 'uns! Stick to your books, and I'll bring over some jolly new ones when I come back." To Lal he said, "Good-by!" and no one but I noticed that Lal said nothing, but gazed with straining eyes after the boat
till it had disappeared round the point, and the level rays of sunlight turned
the gray sea to gold.

For my own part, I turned in to bed with a weight off my mind,

for Lal certainly was a pretty girl, and though I believed Clint to be an honest young fellow enough, but still there is something pleasant in being worshipped
by the only girl about the station. So, altogether, I was glad to get Fairfax safely off on his visit to a neighboring station where I knew the dashing Miss Vernons would soon give his thoughts
a new direction.

Some weeks went by, very busy weeks, and I had begun to get used to being alone again, when I received a message from Clint that the next time
the whale-boat went over to Nelson he would return by her, as a letter from his father had recalled him to England
sooner than he had expected.

All the time of his absence I had seen little of Lal. She had given up coming to the station, always sending Ted instead; and I had really almost forgotten our scene in the veranda.

The day after I got Clint's message,
however, I chanced to meet her as I rode home over the mud-flat. It had been a dull, foggy day, but as evening
closed in the wind began to rise fitfully, make a little sudden stir and moon and handle away into an ominous silence.
As I hurried Sprightly along I overtook Lal, walking home slowly under a load of pipis she had been collecting for supper off the rocks. At first she seemed inclined to pass me without recognition, but when I drew up, meaning to warn her of the coming storm,
she ran to my side and laid her hand
on my bridle.

"Mr. Westcott!" she asked, in such a despairing tone I could not find it in my heart to scold her.

"Why, Lal," I cried, "how ill you look! What have you done to your cheeks and eyes?"

She shook her head impatiently, and repeated her question: "Is he never coming home?"

"Well—yes, child. He's coming tomorrow; but only to say good-by. He little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

She was buried, when Parson Hooper
came over the next day, and the
little garden, with Peter's two sons and
the other poor fellows; but it was many
months before Clint could crawl out so
far, or hear how his life had been saved.
—All the Year Round

It took as a long time to undrap
Lal's hands, and I don't believe she
ever knew that she really had saved the
man she died for.

LOCAL NEWS.

—The Singer Manufacturing Company sold 356,432 genuine Singer sewing machines in 1878, being 73,720 more than in any previous year.

—Mr. Willink's sale will be held next Monday, in Offutt's Hall.

—Thos. J. Peddicord, Esq., is attending court at Kingwood, W. Va.

—The band was out Saturday evening, furnishing some very good music.

—The Orphans' Court met Tuesday, but transacted no business of general interest.

—Mr. Geo. J. Geitzendener, who has been visiting friends in Oakland, returned home on Thursday.

—J. W. Veitch, Esq., is having his property on Oak street, thoroughly renovated and repainted.

—Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kallbaugh, of Barton, Md., visited Oakland last week, as guests of William Combs, Esq.

—For the present at least, candidates for our county offices have ceased "bumping."

—For the past two months Dr. Bartlett has been giving the most of his time to the visitation of schools.

—Dr. J. Lee McComas was summoned to Baltimore on Wednesday night, by the illness of his father.

—Miller & Cleveland, of Frostburg, contractors for the plastering of Bailey's Hotel, commenced lathing Thursday.

—A protracted meeting is being held at the Endow school house, near Oakland, conducted under the auspices of the M. E. Church.

—Mr. Norman Cunningham left Oakland Sunday night for his home in Virginia, where he will engage in business. We wish him success.

—Mr. Jarboe, with a large force of hands, is again at work on Bailey's new hotel. It will be ready for summer visitors this season.

—We understand that Mr. D. H. Lear recently purchased a supply of Hagerstown Almanacs, which he will sell very low. This notice is gratuitous.

—The regular monthly meeting of the Band of Hope will be held in the M. E. Church next Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. A general invitation is extended.

—H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., is visiting Indiana. He will return by way of Ohio, where he will be detained a few days on business, not out of a "legal" nature, however.

—Shitzer & Ault are erecting a building on a lot recently purchased from Mr. Bailey. The building will be 20 by 50 feet, two stories high, and will be used as a furniture manufactory and ware rooms.

—A frame dwelling near the railroad reservoir at Cumberland was burned on Sunday afternoon. It was occupied by Peter Yarnall, who lost most of his furniture. There was no one at home when the fire occurred.

—Mr. N. B. Wayman, who has been merchandising here for the last four years, closed up his business last week, shipping the goods remaining on hand to Hagerstown county, Va., where they will be disposed of by his nephew, Mr. T. N. Cunningham.

—Mr. Jacob Brown, attorney for the widow and children of the late Samuel Cooper, has docketed a suit at Cumberland against Herbert Bell, at whose hands Cooper received a wound resulting in his death, for damages in the sum of $5,000.

—We have just received from the Fashion and Pattern House, of Philadelphia, a copy of the "Metropolitan." Any of our lady readers desirous of having the latest fashions will receive the "Metropolitan" gratis by sending her address to J. G. Ramsdell, 1113 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

—The Cumberland Citizen of the 9th inst. says: "Mr. T. L. Patterson, of this city, will commence the survey of the Cumberland and George's Creek railroad to-morrow. The surveys are for the purpose of locating a road of the regular gauge and a full surveying party has been organized."

—A rumor was current on our streets on Wednesday that the body of George Lisch, who mysteriously disappeared about three months ago, had been found. We can learn no particulars to the time of going to press, but hope to be able, if the rumor be true, to give a full account of the case in our next issue.

—The last will and testament of Dr. L. K. Hummelshime, deceased, was filed in the Orphans' court yesterday for probate. It disposes of his property, consisting of real and personal, as follows: After paying all his debts he gives a legacy of $500 to Miss Schlusser; $25 each to John W. and Brady Hummelshime, two of his sons; and all the rest and residue of his property he bequeaths to Theodore, his youngest son, and charges his whole estate with the maintenance and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday evening, Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

Joseph R. Anderson and wife, to Perry Broadwater, part of a tract of land called "Cheviot Dale;" $555.

Samuel C. Hoge to Wm. Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "William and Mary;" $355.62.

John Moot and wife, to Henry Beckman, parts of Lots Nos. 418, 419, 415 and Lot 417; and part of lot lying to the south of 419, containing 150 acres, 2 roads and 37½ perches; $1,500.

John Barnes and wife, to Mary E. Barnes, part of Lot No. 1071, containing 261 acres; $157.50.

Garrett Literary Society. The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock. The assembly of ladies and gentlemen was quite large, many having come for the purpose of hearing the debate which, owing to a misunderstanding, failed to come off.

There was a lively discussion upon the subject of excusing from a free those members who absented themselves from the preceding meeting for the purpose of taking a sleigh ride, or rather, mud ride, as it was more appropriately called by those who participated in that enjoyable occasion. After vainly attempting to come to a settlement of the question, it was, after much filibustering, laid on the table.

The programme was as follows: Selection, J. D. Humili, declamation, T. A. Hosley, debate, Deceased, That woman exerts a greater influence over the mind of man than money; reading of the paper by the editor, and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday eve.

Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

Joseph R. Anderson and wife, to Perry Broadwater, part of a tract of land called "Cheviot Dale;" $555.

Samuel C. Hoge to Wm. Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "William and Mary;" $355.62.

John Moot and wife, to Henry Beckman, parts of Lots Nos. 418, 419, 415 and Lot 417; and part of lot lying to the south of 419, containing 150 acres, 2 roads and 37½ perches; $1,500.

John Barnes and wife, to Mary E. Barnes, part of Lot No. 1071, containing 261 acres; $157.50.

Garrett Literary Society. The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock. The assembly of ladies and gentlemen was quite large, many having come for the purpose of hearing the debate which, owing to a misunderstanding, failed to come off.

There was a lively discussion upon the subject of excusing from a free those members who absented themselves from the preceding meeting for the purpose of taking a sleigh ride, or rather, mud ride, as it was more appropriately called by those who participated in that enjoyable occasion. After vainly attempting to come to a settlement of the question, it was, after much filibustering, laid on the table.

The programme was as follows: Selection, J. D. Humili, declamation, T. A. Hosley, debate, Deceased, That woman exerts a greater influence over the mind of man than money; reading of the paper by the editor, and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday eve.

Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

Joseph R. Anderson and wife, to Perry Broadwater, part of a tract of land called "Cheviot Dale;" $555.

Samuel C. Hoge to Wm. Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "William and Mary;" $355.62.

John Moot and wife, to Henry Beckman, parts of Lots Nos. 418, 419, 415 and Lot 417; and part of lot lying to the south of 419, containing 150 acres, 2 roads and 37½ perches; $1,500.

John Barnes and wife, to Mary E. Barnes, part of Lot No. 1071, containing 261 acres; $157.50.

Garrett Literary Society. The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock. The assembly of ladies and gentlemen was quite large, many having come for the purpose of hearing the debate which, owing to a misunderstanding, failed to come off.

There was a lively discussion upon the subject of excusing from a free those members who absented themselves from the preceding meeting for the purpose of taking a sleigh ride, or rather, mud ride, as it was more appropriately called by those who participated in that enjoyable occasion. After vainly attempting to come to a settlement of the question, it was, after much filibustering, laid on the table.

The programme was as follows: Selection, J. D. Humili, declamation, T. A. Hosley, debate, Deceased, That woman exerts a greater influence over the mind of man than money; reading of the paper by the editor, and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday eve.

Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

Joseph R. Anderson and wife, to Perry Broadwater, part of a tract of land called "Cheviot Dale;" $555.

Samuel C. Hoge to Wm. Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "William and Mary;" $355.62.

John Moot and wife, to Henry Beckman, parts of Lots Nos. 418, 419, 415 and Lot 417; and part of lot lying to the south of 419, containing 150 acres, 2 roads and 37½ perches; $1,500.

John Barnes and wife, to Mary E. Barnes, part of Lot No. 1071, containing 261 acres; $157.50.

Garrett Literary Society. The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock. The assembly of ladies and gentlemen was quite large, many having come for the purpose of hearing the debate which, owing to a misunderstanding, failed to come off.

There was a lively discussion upon the subject of excusing from a free those members who absented themselves from the preceding meeting for the purpose of taking a sleigh ride, or rather, mud ride, as it was more appropriately called by those who participated in that enjoyable occasion. After vainly attempting to come to a settlement of the question, it was, after much filibustering, laid on the table.

The programme was as follows: Selection, J. D. Humili, declamation, T. A. Hosley, debate, Deceased, That woman exerts a greater influence over the mind of man than money; reading of the paper by the editor, and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday eve.

Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

Joseph R. Anderson and wife, to Perry Broadwater, part of a tract of land called "Cheviot Dale;" $555.

Samuel C. Hoge to Wm. Chisholm, part of a tract of land called "William and Mary;" $355.62.

John Moot and wife, to Henry Beckman, parts of Lots Nos. 418, 419, 415 and Lot 417; and part of lot lying to the south of 419, containing 150 acres, 2 roads and 37½ perches; $1,500.

John Barnes and wife, to Mary E. Barnes, part of Lot No. 1071, containing 261 acres; $157.50.

Garrett Literary Society. The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock. The assembly of ladies and gentlemen was quite large, many having come for the purpose of hearing the debate which, owing to a misunderstanding, failed to come off.

There was a lively discussion upon the subject of excusing from a free those members who absented themselves from the preceding meeting for the purpose of taking a sleigh ride, or rather, mud ride, as it was more appropriately called by those who participated in that enjoyable occasion. After vainly attempting to come to a settlement of the question, it was, after much filibustering, laid on the table.

The programme was as follows: Selection, J. D. Humili, declamation, T. A. Hosley, debate, Deceased, That woman exerts a greater influence over the mind of man than money; reading of the paper by the editor, and support of his mother, who has been confined to her bed for many years and made her home with the doctor. Messrs. John H. Young and Theodore Hummelshime were appointed executors. —Cumt. Times.

—George Robicette, a highly respected citizen of Allegany county, died on the 7th instant. Mr. Robicette was a public spirited citizen, and served two terms as county commissioner. At one time he owned and operated a tannery and a saw-mill. The last years of his life were devoted to farming. He leaves a wife and five children—four sons and one daughter.

—Dr. D. C. Ohr, of Cumberland, has received a quantity of the seeds of the bluegum tree of Australia, and is distributing them among his friends. The tree attains a height of from 100 to 150 feet, and is said to have the property of drying up swampy land, thereby preventing malarial fevers. The trees have been grown in California with considerable success, and are said to spring to a height of from 12 to 15 feet during the first month.

—Church Services—Sunday. M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. H. Isom.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Subject, "The Eternity of Future Punishment." Services every Tuesday and Wednesday eve.

Tuesday evening, instruction in the Catechism, vocal music, and the study of the International Bible Lesson.

—Sale of Personal Property. The sale of the personal property of Mr. Willink, advertised to take place on Wednesday, the 19th, will be held on MONDAY, the 17th, in Offutt's Hall, over his new store room.

—Struck by a Locomotive. On Friday of last week, Mr. Chas. Shaffer, aged about sixty years, residing about one mile west of Oakland, was severely injured under the following circumstances: He was coming to town about 9 o'clock in the morning, walking upon the north track, and seeing an engine approaching upon the same track, he stepped to the south track, in front of a train coming from the west, and was struck by the locomotive, sustaining injuries as follows: Left arm broken between the shoulder and elbow, the small bone in both legs broken just above the ankle, some internal injuries and a sprain in the back. He was carried home and Dr. E. H. Parsons summoned, who reduced the fractures, and by skill and close attention has his patient in a fair way to recover.

—Real Estate Transfers. The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 12:

John H. Miller to Elizabeth Miller, 110 acres of land, being tracts called "Penarysville" and "Millersville;" $800.

James A. Warren and wife to Jno. N. Ervin, part of a tract of land called "Good Luck;" $800.

Jesse J. Ashby and wife, to Harriet M. Ashby, a piece of land bounded by tracts Small Meadows and Perry Bottom; $50.

Mary F. Nash to Mary E. McCrobie, Military Lot No. 150; $238.50.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAY DEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

"IF THIS BE LOVE."

It is to be and when all are gay:
To think all gone with one away;
To start, to thrill, then back to sink
From expectation's joys to drink
If a few pens have been lying
All the June sunshine had not given;
If all expression proved too weak
To tell of love and love to seek Above all others that to speak
Which was the pen's own passion free,
Brought back the soul's tranquility,
And laid the struggling heart at rest,
Dropped like a bird into the nest;
If this be love, as lovers say,
Dear, I have loved thee many a day.
If to oppose when suffering most
The pain the opposition cost;
To listen with averted face,
Yet yearn to close with an embrace;
To watch, to tend, to smile, to grieve,
To tend to hear, and never leave;
To work, to wait, to pray, to live,
To give all, and still to give;
If this be love, as lovers say,
Dear, I have loved thee many a day.
And if, amid the various whirling
Of men and things that, onward hurrying
In cloud and mist, and ever changing
From the loved goal of memory,
One face shines out, one form, one power,
One influence quickening every hour,
A speaking profile upward turned,
Or a deep look that through me burned;
If this be love, as lovers say,
Dear, I have loved thee many a day.
And stays, no, thinks, eternally.
—Epigram for March.

WORTHY OF EACH OTHER.

When Sayles Wilmoth returned, after an absence of a year, he was not a little surprised to be informed that a friend whom he had regarded as a most incorrigible bachelor was soon to be married.

"Who is the fortunate lady, Frank?" she is a most perfect and divine young creature, of course," he queried, in a voice somewhat sarcastic and slightly lugubrious.

"You may judge of that for yourself if you will permit me to introduce you to a cousin and confident smile of pride. "She expects a call from me this afternoon. I shall be glad if you will come with me, and so will she. Do come."

"Thanks. You are very kind, and I shall be pleased to accompany you," was the answer, rather unwillingly given. "And I hope, Frank, you are to have as good a wife as you deserve. For myself, I think I shall never marry; I have no faith in the disinterested affection of womanhood."

"Have you not, indeed?" observed Frank Wyeroff, nonchalantly. "Then you must feel very differently from what you used. I remember quite well of having heard you say that when a man lost faith in a woman's love he must have become unworthy of a wife. What can have changed you so, Wilmoth?"

"A woman's treachery," was the sentimental confession.

An expression of sympathetic pain passed over Frank Wyeroff's face, grave face, and for a moment he was silent. "I think you have asserted a skepticism that your feelings and reflections will some time controvert," he averred thoughtfully at length. "Because we can find one who is as true as the sun, ought we to believe that none are perfect and unspotted? I fancy only a most bitter experience could make a cynic of one so genial and trustful as you once were."

"My experience was bitter," declared the other, almost passionately; "did I never tell you before I went away that I was engaged?"

Frank shook his blonde head and lighted a cigar as fast as the other's. "Well, I was," acknowledged Wilmoth, "and had been for some months, engaged to as fair and seductive a siren as ever appeared in mortal shape to allure and deceive a lover. Never mind what her name may be. I shall call her Beatrix, for she is quite as winning and faithful and ambitious of that heroine of 'Emson'."

"The name will suffice," commented Mr. Wyeroff; "but where did you meet her?"

"On a train coming from Boston," he said. "It was evening, and we were just starting, when we entered the car, dressed in a charming traveling costume, a vision of slender grace and shy, frightened loveliness. She glanced wistfully at the few passengers, seemed greatly distressed and undecided, and as she passed by I saw the fire red mouth quiver and big tears gather in the heavy dark lashes of her innocent blue eyes. I think I should not have dared address her, had not her pretty features suddenly blanched, and she trembled so visibly that I thought I should speak. With a respectful apology for my seeming boldness, I instantly arose and assisted her to my vacant seat."

"You are very kind," she murmured, and a pretty blush came into each dimpled cheek. "I was so distressed that I really felt dazed for a moment."

"If you will tell me what is wrong I shall be pleased to help you," I assured her, gallantly.

"She looked up at me gratefully, but rather doubtfully, from under her rich, tawny curls, and I knew she was pondering whether or no it would be safe and proper to trust me."

"You will be very good to advise me," she ventured at last, after she seemed satisfied with my appearance. "My brother put me on the train, and then went back to attend to our baggage. I know he has been left behind, and although I have my ticket, I am afraid to travel alone, and beside I am terribly concerned about his safety. He may have been killed or some sad thing happened to him."

"I questioned her kindly, and ascertained that her brother was a gentleman whom I knew to be reputable, honorable and of an unexceptionable family, and that their destination was the same as my own. I assured her of this, and persuaded her that no harm would befall her brother, who would undoubtedly follow on the next train. Although she was not quite comforted, I think that long ride was as enjoyable to her as it was to me."

"What should I have done had I not found you to care for me, and console me?" she said, in her charming, childish way, when I relinquished her to her brother, who, as I had conjectured, followed on the express that was not far behind. That was the beginning of our love, for, unawakened as she has been, and loves me still. We became engaged, and for a time she seemed happy and content—sweet false one! But she was too fond of the high station, the opulence, the fine jewels, and the dazzling sort of life that I could not give her, to sacrifice her pride and love of pomp and pleasure to the passion of her heart. So, when a supposed Crusus tempted her, she sent back my ring, accompanied by a piteous little letter confessing her fault—the weakness and selfishness she could not conquer, and begging me not to judge her too harshly. Do you wonder now, Frank, that I have no longer faith in woman's love?"

"I wonder you can think of this woman as kindly as you do," asserted Wyeroff, with energy. "Though I should begin in loving such a creature, I should end in despising her so utterly that I should hate myself for ever having been duped by her. I should never be made to believe the typical woman, however—I should consider her rather a pitiful anomaly, and happily rare."

"Though the blow was heavy, I cannot forget I once loved her dearly," protested Wilmoth. "and though she has made me a soured and embittered man, by the memory of that old affection, I cannot help feeling a great pity for her at times, for she was justly punished. Her marriage proved a miserable mistake. Her supposed prince of affluence was a wretched, depraved impostor, and shortly after that marriage from which she had hoped to gain such grandeur and prosperity, he was brought home to her dying from wounds that had been dealt him in a drunken brawl. At times I can fancy her pale and lonely and sorrowful, repentant and chastened, a better woman, perhaps, because she has seen the sin she deplores in all its ugliness, and regretting nothing except wronging a love that might have kept her worthy of it. I should ever find her like that, Wyeroff, I believe I should take her back to my affections forgiven."

"Then you would be worthy of each other," returned Frank Wyeroff, speaking with the intensest scorn. "Really you are a miracle of cynicism, sentiment and inconsistency. I think I should prefer for the sake of all good women to pardon one but, than to forgive her because I thought all others no better than she."

"Don't sermonize, Frank," interposed the other. "I have not your blind faith that I devoutly hope may never be shaken as mine has been. You believe that the lady of your affections is but little lower than the angels, no doubt, but have you never heard that an angel's turn comes when tempted to fall. Nectar by keeping may change into gall. Goodness untended is no goodness at all."

"Your quotation is very apropos to the conversation," laughed Frank; "although it might offend me had you seen the lady who I suppose is expecting me. Are you coming, Wilmoth?"

An hour later they entered a pretty house where Wyeroff's betrothed resided, and were admitted to the parlor, where a lady was waiting.

She who rose to meet them was a slim, graceful woman, with handsome blue eyes and tawny, curly hair. She was dressed in plain black silk; a dainty white lace scarf was arranged about her shoulders; and she wore a string of pearls about her neck and a white rose in her hair.

"Dulce—Miss Gordon allow me"—began her lover, and then abruptly stopped.

"The face of the fair woman had blanched as white as the petals of her hair, the fan of pearl and lace dropped from her little shaking hands, and the childish, charming eyes were full of pain and terror, and something very akin to shame."

"Wilmoth—cruel Wilmoth," laughed a low, bitter laugh—at which Wyeroff started amazed and offended. "Pardon me, Frank," he said, instantly remorseful for his discourtesy; "I have met Miss Gordon here—she is the Beatrix of whom I told you."

"Impossible!" exclaimed Wyeroff, almost with fierceness. "Your jest is unseemly. Miss Gordon was never married. Dulce, speak! Assure Mr. Wilmoth that although you may resemble, yet you are not the person he has been pleased to call Beatrix."

The heavy, dark lashes drooped; the most lovely cheeks grew scarlet; she was mute with a confusion of indignity too evident to be denied.

"I am answered by your silence, Miss Gordon," he resumed presently in a firm, relentless voice. "Allow me to bid you good day, and good-by forever. She made no effort to detain him. She knew that she had lost him utterly, but if she cared she made no sign."

As Wilmoth followed his friend he turned upon her a curious look of regret and disdain.

"Wyeroff, I am half sorry for my rudeness," he affirmed very seriously, as they went away together. "I hope you will bear me no ill will."

"I credit you with more frankness than civility," returned his companion, rather gruffly. "You could have reserved your information until our call would be ended. However, I am not disposed to be angry with you. I am glad I heard the truth at a time when she could not deny it."

"But you will forgive her, Frank," pursued his friend. "Perhaps she loves you."

"A woman never deceives the man she loves," was the terse answer. "Miss Gordon deliberately allowed me to think her not a widow. You must not think I suffer, Wilmoth, for I do not. I have no feeling for her whatever, either of anger or tenderness. She has passed as absolutely out of my life as if I had never known her. It was my riches she wanted—not me; of that I am convinced. We will not speak of her again, if you please."

"I wish I could have your strength of resolution," commented Wilmoth, ruefully.

The slightest shadow of a sneer crossed Wyeroff's handsome lips. "They are worthy of each other," he thought. Some months after, Wilmoth met Dulce Gordon again. She looked at him with the shy, innocent glance he remembered so well, and blushed so prettily, as if they had parted lovers but an hour before, and in an instant the anger he had held against her was gone. Unwomanly and unkind as she had been, he was weak enough to love her still, and to pardon her freely and fully. If she had not been a good woman, he was just the sort of a man who, because he could not help loving her, was prone to believe that others were no better than she; besides he knew that in spite of her faults and falsity, the small affection she was capable of feeling was fixed on him.

She was winning and clever, and her little affected airs and graces pleased him, so when the kittenish creature came shyly to his side, and nestling her velvet hand in his willing palm, begged him, with tears in her childish eye, to please not think too badly of her now when she was so sorry because she had made him suffer so, he saw none of Topsy's confession of wickedness in the charmingly meek acknowledgment, and he took her in his arms and gave her the kiss of pardon and reconciliation.

They were married shortly after, and perhaps lived as peaceably and happily as most ordinary wedded people do. Frank Wyeroff laughed heartily when he heard of the event.

"Worthy of each other," was a kind very significant comment.—N. Y. Dispatch.

Cattle Plague—Australian Experience in 1859.

ALTHOUGH the contagious pleuropneumonia of cattle has been published of exact reports on the subject from the supposed centres of the disease, it may still be worth while, as a matter of curious information, to note the various methods of stamping out the plague. Disinfection, the destruction and immediate burial of infected animals, and rigid quarantine, are the principal agencies that have been relied upon in this country since 1859, when the plague was prevalent in New England. But there is still another method which was found more efficacious than either among the vast herds of Australia during that memorable year, when the lung-murrain slew cattle by the thousand. Prof. J. B. Coleman, of the New York College of Veterinary Surgeons, who was a cattle inspector in the colony at that date, said yesterday that he had often seen large streams completely blocked with the festering bodies of dead animals, and their shores covered with a flotilla of carrion. Herds, numbering thousands, were swept away in a week. No quarantine was possible where a disease seemed to prevail in all parts of the colony, as a last resort, in the blank despair of the colony, inoculation was attempted. The mode of procuring the pneumonia vaccine was first to inoculate an animal with the fibrinous exudation of a diseased lung; then a second animal with vaccine obtained from the local suppurations of the first inoculated one; finally a third. The vaccine generated in the third inoculation was found the safest and best for the purpose. The mode of operating was very simple. Little pellets of clean wool were first saturated with the vaccine. A trifling and very shallow incision was then made in the skin at the end of the tail, and the pellet caught between the lips of the wound. When the vaccine had been completely absorbed—a process which occupied usually but a few minutes—the pellet fell out, and no irritating matter remained, saying such a pneumonia matter as had been absorbed. Subsequent experience showed that this process not only saved the animals from attack in the same manner as vaccination saves from small pox, but that the vaccine actually contained that could be presented. Herds, consisting in some instances of 3,500 head, were inoculated en masse, with the result of preventing outbreak entirely where it had not occurred, and about the time everybody had taken their seats, and the minister had scarcely gotten under good headway, the house was discovered to be on fire; the ceiling had caught from being in too close contact with the stove-pipe, and was burning rapidly when discovered. There was a general rush for the door, and quite a scare among the ladies; indeed, some of them were so badly frightened that they left for home at once. As soon as it was found the house was on fire the well-bucket was sought, and found to be minus a head. As the ceiling was about fifteen feet from the floor, with no way of getting at the fire, it was thought for some moments that the church would be consumed. But old 'Necessity' was there to 'invent, some means to save the sanctuary. So they raised one of the long benches on the end, and by the help of several men, one man mounted the upper end, and with the mud, which was quite plentiful from the thawing ground, the fire was soon extinguished, and the congregation assembled again to listen to the Scriptures expounded as if nothing had happened.

THE Albany Press estimates the value of the ice harvest along the Hudson this season at $4,432,600, assuming the ice to be valued at $3 per ton, and that 1,811,200 tons have been gathered.

The Silk Industry in the United States.

THE progress made in this country since its settlement in the mechanical arts is perhaps greater than ever made elsewhere in the same length of time, and nearly every one will admit that few things have aided the growth of the country itself so much as the skill with which machinery has been adapted to the wants of a widely scattered people. The co-operation of the brains of our inventors with the energy of our people has enabled us to compete with other countries in nearly every thing to which machinery has been applied. This has become so marked a characteristic as to be recognized abroad as well as at home, and it is every day becoming more and more evident that if we would maintain the excellent position which we have won among the most skillful and highly civilized nations, we must continue to excel them in that art of adapting means to desired ends which has been taught us by our necessities, as otherwise the denser populations of other countries will give them an advantage in the arts of manufacture. Every effort, therefore, which improves our mechanical processes is of some consequence, and when it is of a kind to affect favorably a great manufacture, or to make the introduction of another staple industry profitable, it becomes a matter of national concern. Such an improvement has recently been made in the reeling of silk as would seem to come fairly under the head of an important addition to the Nation's capital of mechanical resource.

The production and manufacture of silk, which has become one of the staple industries of the world, is in a peculiar condition in this country, and although it has made great progress during the past twenty-five years, it has been in spite of a very serious difficulty. It is believed that this difficulty is now, through the progress of invention, quite removed, and that the United States may in the future become as much in the production of silk as they do in that of cotton. To give a clear idea of what has been needed and is now made possible in the silk industry of the United States, it will be best to divide the subject into three parts, as is done practically in "the trade," viz., first the culture, meaning the growing of the worm, and the other work required up to the time that the cocoon is spun; second, the drawing, or reeling, meaning the work of drawing filaments from the cocoons and combining them into the skeins of thread which are technically known as "raw silk"; and third, the manufacture, which is so divided into the operations of "throwing," "cleaning," "doubling," "twisting," "stretching," "dyeing and finishing," and many others.

As to the culture it has always been in many sections the product of fine and better than has ever been obtained from any other country. Nevertheless silk-culture has never been profitable, because, for reasons that will be explained, it has always been forced to divide into three parts, as is done practically in "the trade," viz., first the culture, meaning the growing of the worm, and the other work required up to the time that the cocoon is spun; second, the drawing, or reeling, meaning the work of drawing filaments from the cocoons and combining them into the skeins of thread which are technically known as "raw silk"; and third, the manufacture, which is so divided into the operations of "throwing," "cleaning," "doubling," "twisting," "stretching," "dyeing and finishing," and many others.

The reeling is the work of drawing filaments from the cocoons, and is the most important part of the process. It has been made for many years by hand, and is now being made by machinery. The reeling is the work of drawing filaments from the cocoons, and is the most important part of the process. It has been made for many years by hand, and is now being made by machinery.

The operation of reeling is as follows: The reeler puts a number of cocoons into hot water, and draws out the filament, which is then twisted into a thread. The reeling is the work of drawing filaments from the cocoons, and is the most important part of the process. It has been made for many years by hand, and is now being made by machinery.

The manufacture of raw silk into fabrics has become an important business in this country since 1859, the total value of silk manufactures here annually being now from $21,000,000 to $26,000,000. This industry is possible here because of a protective tariff and the use of very fine machinery. It would be very much more profitable and extensive could our manufacturers depend upon a home supply of silk, instead of being obliged to import their raw material.

It has long been supposed that but little could be done to improve the silk reel, because of the extreme delicacy of the work to be done, and for other reasons connected with mechanical requirements which can hardly be explained except at considerable length. It has recently been found, however, that by the use of an exceedingly simple electrical self-motion the reel may be so improved as to be capable of accomplishing, according to the kind of work to be done, from ten to thirty times as much work per operative as at present, besides turning out a much better and more uniform product. This will bring the cost of reeling, in labor, down to a point which will make it very profitable to engage in it here, and will, it is hoped, prove of very material advantage both to the silk trade and the country at large. The reeling is at the foundation of all silk manufacture, as all silk, except the refuse which is utilized as "spun" silk, passes through this process.

The consumption of silk in this country is now about $50,000,000 worth per annum. Nearly all of this is imported, either as raw or finished material, but it is believed that there is now no reason why this state of affairs should continue. In fact, it seems probable that before many years we shall be able to grow a sufficient quantity of silk to our growing list of exports, besides supplying the home demand. This improvement in the reel has been thoroughly tested. It involves the use of neither new methods of operation nor very delicate machinery, and is, in itself, it is extremely simple, but becomes important in view of its application to a great industry at a point where improvement has been so long and so sorely needed.—Harper's Weekly.

The Plague in Russia.

ALL over Russia the disturbing rumors of a new pestilence have manifested themselves. Near Moscow, even in Moscow itself, disquieting cases have occurred. The Government is doing what it can to check the foe, but, unless the masses will co-operate with it, almost serious epidemics are inevitable. The plague of 1771 swept away altogether about 130,000 of the inhabitants of Moscow, for the city was unprepared for the attack. On the other hand, when the terrible "cholera" broke out in Astrakhan in 1797, it was soon stamped out. But that city possessed a well-appointed naval hospital, and its physicians were not unaccustomed to deal with their deadly Asiatic foe.

The fifth of most Russian towns is something appalling. Even in St. Petersburg the typhus which raged last year, brought to light the existence of such foulness as the local administration has never to have so much as suspected. It may be imagined, then, what is the condition of such mercantile centres as Rybinsk on the Volga, or Rostov on the Don, or of cities where artisans herd together, as in the Tula district. Nor is it only the utter disregard of the Russian people for cleanliness and comfort which is now likely to accelerate the progress of the plague. Their poverty is also in its favor, lowering their physical tone, and thus exposing them to infection. It is hard for man, woman or child to obtain from a diet of rye bread, pickled cucumbers, and sour keas the strength necessary for struggling against germs so terrible as the cholera, which again proving itself to be.

Dr. Botkin, who, as physician to the Imperial family, is a man of great influence in Russia, fully deserves the praises which are now conferred upon him by the Russian physicians. In the straightforward manner in which he spoke about the present outbreak at the meeting which took place on the 24th of January, in the rooms of the "Society of Practical Physicians," there can be no question, he said, that Russia is again attacked by its old enemy, the cholera, or Eastern plague, which seems to be so closely akin to the "Black Death" of the Middle Ages. The symptoms are just the same as they were of old—violent fever, affections of the glands, inflammation of the throat and lungs, vomiting of blood, and the spread of the malady runs its very brief. Whenever the cholera has established itself in Russia, deaths have been as rapid as numerous. When it raged in Pskof in 1552, lasting from spring to winter, it carried off at least two-thirds of the inhabitants, while in Glukhof and Biedozersk, by the end of the same year, it is said to have not left a single soul alive. In 1560 it again attacked Pskof, and in 1563 it raged along the lower part of the Volga. From that time it frequently renewed its attacks, sometimes devastating whole districts. Of late years the plague has shown itself on several occasions in dangerous proximity to Russia. From 1856 to 1865 it appeared at several points of the Turco-Persian frontier. In 1870 an epidemic broke out in Western Persia, the symptoms of which were said to be identical with those of the Russian cholera. Toward the end of 1876 the plague broke out in Bagdad, and passed thence to Resht, where it assumed a virulent character, its victims dying on the third day of their illness, and there it continued its ravages till the February of 1878.

Prof. Tehudnovsky states positively that the cholera is curable, though its poison is "absolutely unknown to medical science." Cleanliness, care, diet, the use of hot and cold baths and fumigations,—these are the points on which he lays most stress; and he feels sure that the malady is not contagious. The peasants undoubtedly think that it is, but he attributes their belief entirely to fear. As to quarantines and "sanitary cordons," those are, according to Dr. Grish, who has closely investigated the matter, "a mere waste of money." In fact, quarantine buildings are far less likely to ward off the danger than to become hotbeds of disease. Of much more practical use, says another authority, Prof. Dobroslovin, will be disinfecting measures; and he relies greatly upon the beneficial force of fire.

Nut only ought the bodies of the dead to be burned, but also the houses in which they died. In many cases, indeed, it would be as well to burn down whole villages, and transport their inhabitants elsewhere. Strong measures must undoubtedly be taken. If the peasants are left alone they will hardly content themselves with two kinds of supposed remedies. The orthodox will send for the nearest "wonder-working" icona, or holy picture. It will be carried in procession, priests escorting it with incense and with song, the faithful flinging themselves prone on the ground as it passes, or kneeling down so that it may be borne over their bodies. The wilder and less respectable of the Kaskolniks, or sectaries, will also adopt some strange measures supposed to be connected with Christian doctrines. But in many a distant village, in the midst of "dreaming" forests of dreary swamps, the rusties will resort to the strange rites by which their heathen ancestors believed that they could drive away the demon of pestilence. Bonfires will be kindled at midnight, and lightly-clad women with loosely-flowing hair will dance around the flames and fling into them some kind of sacrifice. It may even be that in some remote spot a human victim will be immolated, with the idea of propitiating the demon to whose malice or hunger the pestilence is due.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Judge Black and the Doctor.

JUDGE BLACK, of Pennsylvania, tells a queer story of a trial in which a German doctor appeared for the defense in a case of damages against a client of his by the object of his assault. The eminent jurist soon recognized in his witness, who was produced as a medical expert, a laboring man, who some years before and in another part of the country, had been engaged by him as a builder of post-and-rail fences. With this case he opened his cross-examination: "You say, doctor, he began, with great deference and civility, 'that you operated upon Mr. —'s head after it was cut by Mr. —'?"

"O, yaw," replied the ex-fence builder, "me do dat; yaw, yaw!"

"Was the wound a very severe one, doctor?"

"Enough to kill him if I not save his life!"

"Well, doctor, what did you do for him?"

"Everything!"

"Did you perform the Caesarian operation?"

"O, yaw, yaw; if me not do dat he die."

"Did you decapitate him?"

"Yaw, yaw; me do dat, too."

"Did you hold a post mortem examination?"

"O, to be sure, Schudge; me always do dat."

"Well, now, doctor," and here the Judge bent over in a friendly, familiar way, "tell us whether you submitted your patient to the process known among medical men as post-and-rail-fencebuilding?"

The mock doctor drew himself up indignantly. "Scherry Plack," says he, "I always know'd you was a blamed jay-bawk lawyer, an' now I know you for a blamed mean man."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Old and Patriotic Apple Tree.

An apple tree standing in Mr. Dolos Hotchkiss' door-yard, in the northwestern part of the town of Cheshire, is thought to be the largest in the United States. Its age can be traced by a family tradition to 140 years at least, and it may be twenty or twenty-five years older. It is at the present time of symmetrical shape, and the trunk is nearly round, without a scar or blemish on it. There are eight large branches; five of these, Mr. Hotchkiss says, have been in the habit of bearing one year, and the remaining three the next; but, when the Centennial year came, the old tree, which must have attained the prime of ordinary apple tree life before the Nation was born, expanded its blossoms into a complete crown of glory, and bore fruit all over the tree. Mr. Hotchkiss has had a crop of eighty-five bushels of fruit in one year from the five branches, and his predecessor had harvested a crop of 110 bushels from the same live branches. The dimensions of the tree are: Girth, fourteen feet six inches; height, sixty feet; and the spread of the branches is six rods.—New Haven Palladium.

The Men and Women in the World.

Summarizing from the census of 1870, the Journal of Commerce answers a question of the relative numbers of the sexes thus: Of the 38,558,371 persons in the United States, according to the last National census (this was in 1870), there are over 43,000,000 now 19,492,565 were males and 19,064,806 were females, or 983 women to 1,000 men. No census of the world has been taken, but we have the proportion of women to men in all countries where an enumeration has been made. The highest in Europe is in Scotland, which has 1,050; England and Wales, 1,034; France has 1,007; old Prussia, 1,030. The lowest in Europe is in Greece, which has but 940 women to 1,000 men. The total of all Europe is 1,021 women to 1,000 men; the total of America, 980 women to 1,000 men; the total of Africa, as far as known, 975 women to 1,000 men; of Asia (including only Hong Kong in China), 940 women to 1,000 men; Australasia, 985 women to 1,000 men.

A HAPPY discovery made by the Arabs, that camels have a weakness for the company of telegraph poles, and march much more willingly beside these links of civilization, has resulted in special care being taken of poles and wires.

"Well, Pat, you didn't come to the three o'clock train to get me as I told you?" "Oh, indeed o did, sir; but I got too late too late for that train, and so I waited for the next one."—Harvard Lampoon.

ABSOLUTE secrecy is the confidence existing between a deaf man and a dumb belle.—Boston Courier.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
5¢ extra for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1879.

Ingratitude.

Does it not suggest itself to the Democratic delegation in Congress from Maryland, that they have been very deficient in their appreciation of the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn's services, in voting against him for Speaker?

During Mr. Blackburn's term in Congress he has been repeatedly called upon to come to the rescue of the Democrats in Maryland, and in every instance he has responded, and in the only instance when they could have manifested a common respect for his services to the Democratic party in Maryland, the Maryland delegation in Congress turn him down by voting for his opponent, Samuel J. Randall. We ask the Democracy of Maryland if they endorse such perfidy by their Representatives?

The Richmond State gives California a little good advice. It says: "Don't go! Be warned by several who have been there, and don't, for there's nothing succeeds like secession."

If the Democracy want to go upon the record as pensioning Jefferson Davis, they can pass a little resolution after to-morrow. The honorable member who proposes it will watch his opportunity when Zach Chandler is not in his seat.

The Democrats in Congress have made the open issue with Republicans, "repal the laws protecting the ballot, or we will stop the wheels of government by withholding appropriations." Upon such an issue the Republican party can stand firm. There is much ahead.

It is remarked with fervid unanimity by the Southern press that no question will more thoroughly unite the South than the demand for the repeal of the election laws. The same question appears to have a similar effect upon the North, also, but the solidarity is upon the other side.

It is strongly intimated in political circles, says the Baltimore Morning Herald, that there is a movement on foot by prominent city politicians, under the leadership of Senator Whyte, to throw Mr. Hamilton overboard as the gubernatorial candidate, and take up Hon. Charles B. Roberts, of Westminster, who has just closed his Congressional career.

The credit of the United States was never so good as now, and financially, this nation stands the peer of any on the globe. The Republican party, as it turns the law-making power over to the Democracy, can point with pride to the result of its work. Will the Democracy do as well? It is a question many are asking just now.

Arkansas must be awarded the palm for intelligent legislators. One of the members has introduced a bill abbreviating the session of Lent from forty to twenty days, and in explanation he remarked that since the war everything else has come down fifty per cent., and no discrimination should be made in favor of Lent.

Local elections took place in New Jersey, on Tuesday, the 11th inst. The law reducing the number of freholders of Morristown, from thirty to fifteen created immense interest in the election. The Republicans retained control of the board by one majority. The Republicans also defeated the Democrats at Elizabeth, a Republican gain, and Republican gains are noted in many places throughout the State.

The business before Congress that transcends in importance all others is the passage of some bill to regulate the settlement of contests over electoral votes. There is at present no law, rule or established procedure by which controversies can be settled. In view of the complications of the last presidential election and the bad blood engendered by them, the situation is one that cannot be viewed without alarm. In the early part of the last session of the Forty-fifth

Congress Mr. Edmunds brought forward an excellent bill on this subject, and it passed the Senate, Mr. Bayard and other Democrats voting for it. In the House it was antagonized by another bill on the same subject, and so failed of action. We cannot see how there can be any partisan objection to Mr. Edmunds' bill, as a more conservative measure cannot be found, and it should be revived and passed. It provides that the choice of presidential electors shall take place on the first Tuesday in October, instead of in November, as at present, in order to allow more time for the settlement of any controversy that may arise; the electors of each state shall meet and vote on the second Monday in January next following their appointment; each state may provide before the election for the trial and determination of any controversy concerning the appointment of electors before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, which determination shall be conclusive evidence of the lawfulness of the electors, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes. The bill further provides that Congress shall meet on the second Monday in February succeeding the meeting of the electors, as at present, and proceed according to the former method, with the exception that the functions of the President of the Senate are defined as purely ministerial, and he is required to call for objections after the reading of each electoral vote. Every objection is to be made in writing, signed by at least one senator and one representative, and shall be considered separately by the two houses. No electoral vote from any state from which but one return has been made shall be rejected except by the concurrent action of the two houses. In case of more than one return from a state in which no determination of such controversy shall have been legally provided for, only such return shall be counted as the two houses shall concurrently decide to be the proper one. In case the question shall arise which of two or more state tribunals determining which electors have been appointed is the legal tribunal, this also is to be determined by the concurrent action of the two houses.

How a Southern Editor Feels About It.

After a struggle of eighteen years in war and politics the Confederacy has at last captured the Capitol—Washington Republican.

Yes, thank God! we have captured the Capitol, and in 1899 our man will walk up the White House steps and take his seat in the Presidential chair. Then will our glorious triumph be complete. Then will we tear your amendments from the constitution and trample them in the mire. Then will we break the shackles you have forged for the free, sovereign and independent communities of the Union. Then will we recognize the right of secession—a right that is not dead, but sleeping. Then will we decorate the Capitol with pictures of Davis, and Lee, and Stuart, and all the glorious leaders of a cause that is not lost, but living still. Yes, thank God! we have captured the Capitol, and from that day of vantage we propose to rule the Republic in a way that will make your Radical laws and your Radical leaders forever odious in America.—Okechobee, (Miss.) Southern States, March 12.

Maryland Congressmen and Tilden.

The New York Herald has been interviewing members of Congress as to Mr. Tilden's chances for the Presidency. The Maryland Representatives are reported to have expressed themselves as follows:

Mr. A. M. Henry, of the First Maryland district, says: "I think I can safely say that the Maryland sentiment is anti-Tilden for the 1880 nomination. Our folks like back bone, and they do not think he has much of it on his person. As between him and other candidates I do not profess to know much. With a strong Republican candidate, such as Grant, Maryland might, and possibly would, prove a close State, and I really have my doubts whether Tilden could carry it. Bayard could, in my opinion, undoubtedly; so could Thurman or Hendricks."

Mr. Charles B. Roberts, of Westminster, Second Maryland district, declined to commit himself or his district at this early stage of the game.

Ex-Governor Swann, Fourth district, talked without the least reserve on the Presidential outlook for 1880. "I think," said he, "that Tilden is out of the question; not because I have not the highest regard for his character and uprightness, but solely on the ground that he has not the physical vitality required to properly administer the office. That was the view entertained by the late Mr. Kerr when Tilden was first mentioned, and I heartily concur in it now, as I did then. Maryland certainly is not in favor of his re-nomination. Mr. Bayard is a most estimable gentleman, but we must take into consideration the State backing a man has. The great State of New York and Pennsylvania can almost command the situation."

"There will be Bayard's weakness, I fear. I suppose Tilden could carry Maryland, but it will not do to be too positive. Admitting that the Republicans nominate Grant, which I take now to be almost a certainty, we might have trouble in our State. Many Democrats, I know, feel just as I do—that they could not vote for Mr. Tilden because he lacks vitality. Coming home after such a foreign vacation, Grant will enter the arena with great éclat, and the Democracy will have to select their candidate with great care if they expect to win. Of course it is too early yet to make any predictions, but I hope and trust that we shall not be driven to accept Tilden, for the sentiment against him is strong all over the South and West."

Mr. E. J. Henkle, of the Fifth Maryland district, has very positive views about the proper policy for his State. "The sentiment of Maryland, so far as I have been able to judge, is very largely against Tilden, and I hope sincerely they will not make any further attempts to force him upon the country. We want a conservative man on the money issues, who can harmonize all the conflicting elements in the party, for we shall have to rely largely on that Tilden can't do it. Whether true or not, the people in large numbers believe that he did not stand firm in 1876 because he was surrounded by the Wall-street influence, which was strong enough to induce him to accept a disgraceful compromise rather than precipitate disturbance. He has passed his whole life as a lawyer identified with vast monopolies and corporations not in sympathy with the people, and this is enough to taint him as an autocrat.

"For the next campaign we must have a man thoroughly conservative and thoroughly in sympathy with the progressive measures of the West and South. My own preference for 1880 is Hendricks. For the best interests of the party he consented in 1876 to take the second place on the ticket at a sacrifice, and I think the head of the ticket now belongs to him by a sort of implied right. A great many of our people think the same way. Bayard? Well, Bayard is a most estimable gentleman of undoubted integrity of character, but I doubt whether he would prove strong in the West and South. More than that Bayard is young enough and can afford to wait. I think the strongest ticket we could nominate would be Hendricks and Bayard. With that we could sweep the country against any Republican nominee. I only hope that we will run Grant, as now seems probable."

Mr. William Walsh, of the Sixth Maryland district, is now, and has been for some time, sick at his home in Cumberland.

THE TRADE OF THE COUNTRY.

New York, March 18.—The New York Times to-morrow will publish several columns of despatches and letters setting forth the present condition and future prospects of trades, manufactures, and other industries in fourteen States. They show that the condition of the business interests of the country as compared with the outlook of a year ago gives promise of a profitable season, and the beginning of the return of national prosperity. There are few branches of trade that do not share in the revival. The hard times sweep the weaker concerns out of existence. Capital is seeking profitable investment. Wholesale dealers generally report an increase in the bulk of their sales, ranging from ten to thirty per cent., although at low prices.

The Southern trade still shows the effect of the low prices of cotton and sugar. Desiring a somewhat unprofitable crop of these two great staples, planters are being encouraged. In the North and extreme West immigration, an active lumbering season and the beginning of work by farmers and builders have increased the circulation of money and stimulated trade. Manufacturing interests in the North and West are reported as generally flourishing.

NEARLY A MILLION FOR MISSIONS. NORWICH, CONN., March 16.—By the will of the late Deacon Asa Otis the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions is made residuary legatee. Bequests, amounting to nearly $750,000, are as follows: Amherst College, $25,000; Yale College Theological Seminary, $25,000; Buickley High School, of New London, 10,000; First Ecclesiastical Society, of New London, $10,000; American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, $10,000; American Home Missionary Society, $5,000; American Tract Society, $5,000. The balance of the property, amounting to over half a million, will go to the Foreign Missions. W. C. Cramm, Peter C. Turner and William H. Chapman are appointed executors.

LOUISIANA might appropriately be termed a constitution Tilden State. She has had a constitutional convention on an average every ten years since she became a State in 1812. Each constitution seems to have been worse than its predecessor, at least with each decade the State has been more poorly governed than before. As a last hope, a seventh convention has been called to meet April 21, to frame a new constitution. It is devoutly to be wished that their labors may prove successful, but too much cannot be expected, as the controlling elements of the convention are the same which had led the State into a condition of bankruptcy, and allowed the highest crimes to go unpunished.

THE SPRING HARVEST IN INDIA. LONDON, March 17.—The Lahore correspondent of the Times telegraphs that sufficient rain has fallen throughout that province to insure the safety of the spring harvest, thereby entirely altering the financial and political aspect of the situation, and affecting even the military, by facilitating the supply of grain and forage.

DEATH FROM TRICHINOSIS. NEW YORK, March 18.—Max Grinfeld, of 181 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, and his family were all taken sick on the 2d of February and physicians pronounced them to be suffering from trichinosis. Mr. Grinfeld died and an inquest was held on his remains. Trichinosis in all its forms was found. The jury this evening found a verdict that death resulted from emolition of the pulmonary arteries, due to trichinosis. Another member of the family is now lying at the point of death. The family, before their illness, had partaken of raw ham.

THE ALLEGHENY MINERS' STRIKE ENDED. PHILADELPHIA, March 15.—A dispatch from Pittsburgh states that the strike of the coal miners which has been in progress for three or four months is virtually ended, and a large majority of the men are willing to go to work at the old rates, although apprehensions of trouble among the miners in the Monongahela Valley are entertained, as nearly 1,000 men engaged near Elizabeth, in Allegheny county, have been trying to induce miners who have yielded to suspend operations, and while the general impression is that no outbreak will occur, yet those who have gone to work fear the body of the strikers will wreak vengeance on them at some future time.

Sheriff Hunter, of Allegheny county, and Sheriff Work, of Washington county, have sent a force of deputies to preserve order.

GENERAL GRANT IN INDIA. NEW YORK, March 16.—A Herald cable despatch says General Grant arrived at Allahabad on the 22d of February, where he was received by Sir George Cowper, Lieutenant Governor of the Northwest Provinces, and was escorted to the Government House. The General left Bombay on the evening of the 18th of February, after enjoying much hospitality and attention. Lord Cranbrook had sent word to announce the General's coming, and the intimation to the Viceroy to show the General every attention. On his arrival at Bombay, therefore, the General was the recipient of many telegraphic congratulations and invitations from the Viceroy, the Duke of Buckingham, and the governors of provinces. On the evening of the 17th a banquet was given to the General at the Government House, Malabar Point, Bombay, and after dinner he was presented to a delegation of native and Parsee gentlemen merchants. The scene was very picturesque and striking. The General left Bombay on the evening of the 18th, being escorted to the railway station by a guard of honor and all the officials. On the 20th of February the party arrived at the Tatalpur, and visited the Marble Rocks, on the Norbunda river, riding there on elephants provided by the government. The General left Allahabad on the 22d of February for Agra, thence to Delhi, Cawnpore, Lucknow, Benares, so as to be in Calcutta on March 10, thence to Madras and Ceylon. So far the General and party are very much pleased with their journey.

THE GREAT WALKING MATCH. NEW YORK, March 15.—The great international walking match is over, and Rowell, the English pedestrian, is the winner. The belt, which the thousands that have crowded into Gilmore's Garden during the week have wished might remain on this side of the water, is now to go out of the country. The champion long distance pedestrian of the world hails from England.

The ex-champion, O'Leary, is a broken down man, who can never make four hundred miles again. The last day of the six days' walk began at 1 o'clock this morning. At that hour Rowell and Harriman were on the track, and the score stood: Rowell, 127; Eanis, 495; Harriman, 390.

As night drew nigh the crowds gathered to large proportions in Gilmore's Garden, and the greatest excitement ensued. The gross receipts were $51,000, which sum, less expenses, will be divided—50 per cent. to Rowell, 30 per cent. to Eanis and 20 per cent. to Harriman. Before the money is divided the four starters will draw $1,000, which will at least save O'Leary from any money loss, though he is left to mourn the loss of the belt.

The Official score for the match at 10 o'clock when it closed, was: Rowell—500 miles and 10 yards. EANIS—475 miles. HARRIMAN—150 miles, 3 laps and 140 yards.

The men were off the track during the whole six days as follows: Rowell—38 hours, 12 minutes and 50 seconds. EANIS—26 hours, 21 minutes and 33 seconds. HARRIMAN—38 hours, 1 minute and 21 seconds.

The total number of miles made by each man each day of the match was as follows: Rowell.—First day, 110 miles; second day, 87 miles; third day, 86 miles; fourth day, 77 miles; fifth day, 68 miles; sixth day, 72 miles; total, 500 miles.

EANIS.—First day, 95 miles; second day, 78 miles; third day, 78 miles; fourth day, 85 miles; fifth day, 69 miles; sixth day, 70 miles; total, 475 miles.

HARRIMAN.—First day, 100 miles; second day, 86 miles; third day, 81 miles; fourth day, 55 miles; fifth day, 65 miles; sixth day, 60 miles; total, 450 miles.

ALARM AT SITKA, ALASKA. SAN FRANCISCO, March 16.—A dispatch from Victoria states that the steamer California arrived from Alaska this morning with news that the Indians are preparing for war. H. B. M. ship Osprey and the United States cutter Walcott had reached

Alaska. The chief received the Osprey cordially but informed her commander that they could take the Walcott whenever they chose. The flotilla of hostile canoes which were on their way to destroy the town of Sitka. The Osprey reinforced the Walcott with a number of mines and a Gatling gun. The situation is alarming and the Osprey will remain until relieved by an American man-of-war. The Sitka chiefs were given two hours to produce a certain female witness to the Brown murder. They pretended that the woman was absent but produced her long before the time expired. She confessed to having seen Brown's body after he had been shot twice. The body was then wrapped up in blankets, weighted with stones and thrown overboard. The Osprey had not been in port five minutes before the Indians surrendered Brown's gun, axe, books &c. The California has three witnesses to the murder on board.

THE GREAT CALAMITY AT SZEGEDIN. LONDON, March 14.—A special to the Times from Pesth says: "A large portion of the suburbs of Szegedin being below the level of the river Theiss, the water which rushed in from the higher ground behind the town being several feet above the present level of the river, bore down in its way the high road embankments, rushing in cascades into the lower grounds, inundating it with fearful rapidity. Instead of five or six hours, which it was calculated the flood would take to spread throughout the town, scarcely an hour and a half had passed before Szegedin lay submerged up to its present level. Whilst, however, some hope is entertained that on account of the alarm which for days before the occurrence of the calamity roused the population to a sense of their danger, and gave them an opportunity to fly for refuge, the loss of life has not been very great; but the victims must at any rate be numbered by many hundreds, if not by thousands. Nor is the havoc yet complete. Besides those swept away during that terrible night, all through Wednesday dull, fatal sounds were heard in all directions indicating successive falls of buildings. The special government commissioner says the poorer classes were extremely unwilling to abandon their homes. In many cases force had to be used to pluck the people from the houses that were in a dangerous condition. All the communities vie with each other in relieving the distress, sending provisions by land and water and opening their houses to receive refugees. (Comparatively few, however, seem to avail themselves of the latter offer. The working classes especially prefer abiding by the nearest safe spot in the town, or close to it. Thus thousands are crammed on the high embankment running along the river, which stands firm so that the opening of this embankment to let the water from above and behind the town run into the river in front could only be imperfectly carried out."

SZEGEDIN, March 16.—The lowest estimate now current fixes the number of drowned at 2,000. Many persons believe that 4,000 perished, as the gate prevented a majority of the inhabitants from hearing the first alarm. Some of the largest houses fell on Saturday. One is said to have overwhelmed eighty (probably eight) families, and another 56 persons. To-night many people are still on the roofs of houses and in trees. Diphtheria has broken out among the fugitives in Szegedin. Sixteen thousand horses and cattle, and 30,000 sheep have been lost. The water falls very slowly, only receding three inches on Saturday night. The frost is causing great suffering. Fearful tales are told of individual distress. Women on board rescuing steamers refuse to part with the corpses of children. The refugees on the embankments are eating seed corn. Accidents occur in boats and on railway tracks.

LONDON, March 17.—The pecuniary damage by the disaster at Szegedin is estimated at about £1,500,000 sterling. The Emperor Francis Joseph arrived to-day, and was conveyed through the ruined town. About 23,000 inhabitants have been removed. Those remaining are amply supplied with provisions. The Emperor, replying to an address, said his heart was deeply pained at the calamity which had befallen the inhabitants. The people must not be too much distressed; help would come. The Emperor was much affected. He started for Vienna this evening.

The work of saving life is over and that of saving property has now commenced. The authorities have telegraphed that no further supplies of provisions are necessary.

Two thousand farm houses in the surrounding country have been destroyed by the flood. It is believed the waters will not have entirely subsided before July.

LOCAL NEWS.

—The Singer Manufacturing Company sold 356,132 genuine Singer sewing machines in 1878, being 73,720 more than in any previous year.

—New goods arriving daily at Merrill's drug store.

—Easter comes this year on April 13th.

—Go to Merrill's for cigars and tobacco.

—We are having regular March weather now.

—Mr. D. E. Offutt shipped 20,000 shingles to Grafton this week.

—The B. & O. R. R. pay car passed through Oakland on Thursday.

—Merrill has a complete line of fine fishing tackle. Call and see.

—Mr. Samuel Lawton, Sr., who has been ill for some time, is convalescent.

—The rumor of the finding of the body of Lisch had no foundation in fact.

—Mr. Bishop is repairing his store room, preparatory to putting in a new stock of goods.

—Mr. Charles Shaffer, who was injured by the cars, as noted by us last week, is still improving.

—Twenty families left Lonaconing and Pekin last Monday for Nebraska, where they will locate.

—Miss Mary S. Little, of Cumberland, preached a sermon at Meyersdale, Pa., Sunday morning last.

—The father of Dr. J. Lee McComas died in Baltimore on Sunday last, in the 71st year of his age.

—Physicians prescriptions and family receipts accurately compounded at Merrill's drug store.

—Mr. Loewenstein has commenced the erection of a building on Alder street, to be used as a tailoring establishment.

—Miss Laura Lang, who has been at Clarksburg, W. Va., for some time past returned to Oakland on Wednesday.

—The protracted meeting at the Entice school house, closed Wednesday evening, resulting in about 20 accessions to the church.

—A large train of emigrants principally from Franklin county, Pa., passed through town on Tuesday evening, bound for Kansas.

—Mr. D. E. Offutt is putting a split stone culvert in front of his mammoth store building. Mr. Geo. Santeuier is doing the work.

—Shatzer & Ault have commenced the erection of their shop and furniture warehouse, on the lot recently purchased on Main street.

—Miss Fannie S. McBride, who has been spending the winter in Westernport, is visiting her parents and friends, near Swanton.

—The Douloureux or Neuralgia, can be instantly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Kiefer's Roman Liniment. Price 50 cents a bottle.

—The household goods of Mrs. Easter were sold on Tuesday. The prices realized were very high, owing in part to the fact that a credit of six months was given.

—The Rev. H. C. Halloway, pastor of Christ English Lutheran Church at Cumberland, surprised his congregation on Sunday by formally announcing his resignation.

—Mr. Willink obtained near four hundred dollars for his household goods, sold for cash on Monday last. When the scarcity of money is taken into consideration, good prices were realized.

—Rev. S. W. Davis stopped at Oakland Tuesday last, on his return from Europe, where he has been traveling for the past seven months. He spent most of the time in the Holy Land.

—A number of wild geese and ducks were shot on Monday at Cumberland while hovering overhead on their way north. Several large white birds were observed, and one of these, said to be a swan, was captured a live at Cresaptown. It has been caged as a curiosity.

—A refusal to give away a glass of beer at Frostburg on Thursday last week, led to an affray between Thomas Farrell and Henry Hinkle, in which Farrell had his skull fractured and Hinkle had his jaw cut open by a blow with a broken bottle.

—A fire was discovered about 11 o'clock on Sunday night in an upper story of the St. Nicholas Hotel at Cumberland. Without any general alarm the fire was extinguished before the occupants were aware of their danger.

—An unknown woman was killed by an express train on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Cherry Summit on the 11th inst. She was accompanied by four children, who it is said, had walked with her from the far West, bound for Doddridge county, West Virginia. The children were cared for by persons in the neighborhood.

Church Services—Sunday.
M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Benj. Ison. Class meeting at 10½ A. M. Sunday School at 2 P. M.

Garrett's Largest Hog.
Mr. Robert Porter, residing near town, butchered a hog Saturday last, which netted 737½ pounds. This, we believe, is the largest hog ever butchered in this county.

Dentistry.
Dr. J. Daily, Resident Dentist at Westernport, will visit Oakland on Monday, April 7th, and remain one week. Rooms at the New Glade Hotel.

Commissioners' Meeting.
The County Commissioners met in extra session Tuesday, March 18th. Among others were the following proceedings:

Examiners' report of Solomon Turney's private road received.

Petition of Urias Leitchy and others for road in district No. 2 received.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending March 19:

Samuel P. Smith to Thos. Miller, Military Lot No. 3103, containing 50 acres; $250.

Chauncey Kinnell and wife to Stephen P. Coffman, part of a tract of land called "Peace and Plenty," 1 acre; $75.

Thos. Coddington, sheriff, to Henry Beckman, part of a tract of land called "White's Homestead," composed of lots 1513, 1533, and 27 acres of 1537, 1526, 1521, 30 acres of 1525, and 9 acres of 1525; $285.

J. W. Ward and wife to Mariah Simouse, all their right, title and dower interest in and to a lot in Oakland; $100.

Robbery of a Church.
As a faithful chronicler of the news of our peaceable and orderly community, we must, against our will, record a dastardly robbery which was committed on Friday night, the 14th instant. On that night the sacristy of St. Peter's Catholic Church was burglariously entered, and articles consecrated to the worship of God, amounting to over one hundred dollars in value, were carried off by the thieves. The monstrosity, in giving the benediction of the most blessed sacrament, the silver ciborium and the holy water font, the water of which was poured into a flower vase, were among the articles stolen.

Strange to say the thieves did not even touch the valuable chalice, which Father True-chler found Saturday morning in the very same place he had placed it the previous day. The key of the tabernacle containing the blessed sacrament, was removed without disturbing anything, verifying the oft quoted line that

"Pooh! rush in where angels fear to tread."

The Reverend gentleman, for a young priest, displayed considerable zeal and ability in endeavoring to ferret out the miscreants who had committed this act of vandalism. He, soon after the discovery of the robbery, went to Altamont, where he telegraphed an account of the affair to Piedmont and Grafton.

On Tuesday evening, since writing the above, the stolen property was found near the railroad, about half a mile east of Oakland. The supposition is that the thieves had hidden the articles, but fearing detection, had afterward placed them where they would readily be seen.

Death of Mr. Joseph Dilley.
Mr. Joseph Dilley, one of the oldest residents of Allegany county, died at his residence on his farm, four miles west of this city, on the National road, at ten o'clock Saturday morning. He had been complaining for some time past, but had only been dangerously ill a few days, and his death was rather unexpected.

Mr. Dilley was eighty-six years old and was one of the pioneer residents of this county, having been extensively engaged in the blacksmith business at Frostburg as early as 1820. By industry and frugality the deceased had accumulated a large fortune. His property consists of several large farms in this county and considerable real estate in Cumberland. Mr. Dilley's wife died some years ago. They had five children, three daughters and two sons. Of the latter, Mr. Barney Dilley, of this city is well known to our readers. The other, Franklin, lives in St. Paul, Minn. Of the daughters, two are dead—Mrs. Samuel Athey, of this county, who died many years ago, and Mrs. Dr. John Everett, who died in 1866. The third is the wife of Mr. B. R. Edwards, of this city. Mr. Dilley had 37 grandchildren and 18 great grandchildren.

Mr. Dilley was not of late years active in politics. He never held but one political office, that of member of the Legislature in 1828, having been elected on the first Jackson Democratic ticket ever voted for in this county. His colleagues were Messrs. Wm. Price, Wm. McMahon and Wm. Van Buskirk. The deceased was vice President of the Agricultural society and a member of its board of directors. He never resided for any length of time in this city, having occupied several different country seats at various times, but was well known to most of our citizens, by whom he was generally respected. Mr. Dilley's demise has diminished the already small number of persons who can remember the pioneer days of our county.—Cumh. News.

Death of Lloyd Lowndes, Sr.
There are many of our citizens who will learn with regret of the decease of Mr. Lloyd Lowndes, sr., father of Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, of this city, who died in Clarksburg, W. Va., on Friday morning of last week, at 11 o'clock, in the 79th year of his age.

Mr. Lowndes was an excellent man of business and very enterprising. More than forty years ago he came to Cumberland, and with his brother, Richard T. Lowndes, opened the largest store then in the village, at the old stand known to our younger citizens as the store of Lowndes & Kramer, on North Mechanic street.

Mr. Lowndes was also engaged at the time in the mercantile business at Shepherdstown (Va.) and Frostburg. Upon the death of Mr. R. T. Lowndes, some years after beginning business here, Mr. Kramer, who was connected with them in business in Shepherdstown, came and took charge of the business here.

Mr. Lowndes then went to Clarksburg, Va., where he opened a large mercantile store, still holding his interests here and in Frostburg. He was married to a very estimable lady of Clarksburg, who died some time ago, leaving two sons, Lloyd and Richard, the former of whom is our esteemed fellow-townsmen.

Mr. Lowndes died possessed of a great deal of real estate, consisting of mineral and farming lands as well as mill sites in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and was one of the wealthiest citizens of West Virginia.

During the late war he was a decided Union man, though he very seldom discussed the issues of the day, but was in all other respects in unison with the Southern people in education and in their theory of what constituted refinement and culture.

Mr. Lowndes lived to a green old age, with comparative good health, surrounded with everything that could make life pleasant and happy; and in death evidenced that he was prepared and expected to enjoy the fruition of a life well spent. He has given up the evanescent pleasures of life for the eternal joys of a perpetual present. While sad hearts will mourn his death, the softening influences of time will temper the heart to bear the affliction with resignation.—Cumh. Times.

WESTMINSTER, March 18, 1879.
MR. EDITOR:

If your "very Meek Daughter of Eve" is there among the Pines, is in any danger of "shuffling off this mortal coil," or "dying to know who J. M. is," J. M., with his profoundest bow, begs to say that he is 3,500 miles from home, and steamboat landings on the Mississippi are constantly crowded with those fleeing from Democratic hatred and persecution. He believes that the depopulation of the parishes named, through the migration of the colored laborers, will speedily produce poverty and beggary throughout that section of Louisiana, and that the exodus, if continued, will certainly exert an influence upon the colored people in all those sections of the South in which the political privileges guaranteed them by the Constitution are denied and the ordinary protection of the law studiously and wickedly withheld.

Gold has been discovered near Abbeville, South Carolina, and the good and bad people of the adjoining country are wild with excitement. The "find" seems to be a genuine one, and Northern capitalists are reported to be looking into the matters. A big gold mine would seem to be needed to set South Carolina up again. If all her people, however, would display as much energy in the cultivation of their lands and the building up of business as they are likely to do in "prospecting" for Gold, South Carolina would speedily enter upon a new era of prosperity.

An intoxicated man is a dangerous custodian of nitro-glycerine. An celebrated individual staggered thro' the streets of Red Rock, Pa., Saturday, with a bag over his shoulder containing nine quart cans of this substance, and, falling, dropped it to the ground with sufficient force to explode it. The result was a terrible explosion and the sudden annihilation of the unfortunate person who carried the bag.

Florida in 1876.
Reports received from Florida foreshadow one important disclosure affecting the Presidential election of 1876 in that State.

It seems that some of the men who were active in perpetrating the frauds in Mr. Disbee's district last Autumn, and who were caught, have come to the conclusion that the candidates in whose interest they acted cannot do anything to save them from the penitentiary. They are now ready to confess, not only the frauds of which they were guilty in 1875, but also similar ones by which the greater part of the Republican majority in that State was destroyed in the Presidential election.

It may be remembered that the earliest reports from Florida, in 1876 represented the Republican majority in that state as at least 1,000, and that the returns from many of the Democratic counties were held back, as the Republicans then believed, in order that it might be ascertained how much it would be necessary to "doctor" the returns from those counties in order to overcome the Republican majority in the remainder of the State. The recent confessions, which are to be used in prosecutions in the United States Courts in Florida, show that this theory of the Republicans was correct, and that the changes which the Democrats made in the returns from a single county were sufficient, if they were corrected, to take Florida out of the list of doubtful States and make it a Republican on the face of the returns.

As so large a majority that if everything which the Democrats claimed before the Canvassing Board had been conceded to them the Republicans would still have been hundreds ahead.

The Literary.
The Garrett Literary Society met as usual Saturday evening, in their Hall. A large audience was present. The exercises consisted of the Society paper read by W. P. Townshend, a selection by E. Z. Tower, a declamation by Edward H. Sincell and the debate on the question, "Resolved, That woman has more influence on the mind of man than money."

Allen Ison and N. B. Wayman represented the affirmative, and W. P. Townshend and J. T. Mitchell the negative side. The President appointed as judges Fred Thayer and J. S. Devenom. After the arguments had been made, the question was submitted to the judges, who brought in their decision in favor of the affirmative. Thus is another great question settled.

The motion to take certain members was taken up, and, upon a vote being taken, the said persons were fined. Resolutions testifying to the personal worth of, and regret for the removal of Norman Cunningham were passed, and after a little routine business the Society adjourned until to-night, when a good programme will be presented, including another debate. All are invited.

Migration the Effect of Baling.
It is said that the colored people of Louisiana, finding that protection in their civil and personal rights cannot be assured them, are now deliberately seeking a relief through removal to other States. This is especially the case in Concordia, Texas, Ouachita and the neighboring parishes, where last Fall's campaign showed them that they must either forego their political principles or die. The Kansas land-agents have been among them, holding out inducements for them to remove to a State where they can live happily and safely. Gen. Morey, a former member of Congress from Louisiana, says:

"Hundreds of laborers are leaving the parishes mentioned. The exodus has fairly begun, and is creating great alarm among the planters and landholders of the localities mentioned. The colored people are selling off everything they own, and steamboat landings on the Mississippi are constantly crowded with those fleeing from Democratic hatred and persecution. He believes that the depopulation of the parishes named, through the migration of the colored laborers, will speedily produce poverty and beggary throughout that section of Louisiana, and that the exodus, if continued, will certainly exert an influence upon the colored people in all those sections of the South in which the political privileges guaranteed them by the Constitution are denied and the ordinary protection of the law studiously and wickedly withheld."

Gold has been discovered near Abbeville, South Carolina, and the good and bad people of the adjoining country are wild with excitement. The "find" seems to be a genuine one, and Northern capitalists are reported to be looking into the matters. A big gold mine would seem to be needed to set South Carolina up again. If all her people, however, would display as much energy in the cultivation of their lands and the building up of business as they are likely to do in "prospecting" for Gold, South Carolina would speedily enter upon a new era of prosperity.

An intoxicated man is a dangerous custodian of nitro-glycerine. An celebrated individual staggered thro' the streets of Red Rock, Pa., Saturday, with a bag over his shoulder containing nine quart cans of this substance, and, falling, dropped it to the ground with sufficient force to explode it. The result was a terrible explosion and the sudden annihilation of the unfortunate person who carried the bag.

Florida in 1876.
Reports received from Florida foreshadow one important disclosure affecting the Presidential election of 1876 in that State.

It seems that some of the men who were active in perpetrating the frauds in Mr. Disbee's district last Autumn, and who were caught, have come to the conclusion that the candidates in whose interest they acted cannot do anything to save them from the penitentiary. They are now ready to confess, not only the frauds of which they were guilty in 1875, but also similar ones by which the greater part of the Republican majority in that State was destroyed in the Presidential election.

It may be remembered that the earliest reports from Florida, in 1876 represented the Republican majority in that state as at least 1,000, and that the returns from many of the Democratic counties were held back, as the Republicans then believed, in order that it might be ascertained how much it would be necessary to "doctor" the returns from those counties in order to overcome the Republican majority in the remainder of the State. The recent confessions, which are to be used in prosecutions in the United States Courts in Florida, show that this theory of the Republicans was correct, and that the changes which the Democrats made in the returns from a single county were sufficient, if they were corrected, to take Florida out of the list of doubtful States and make it a Republican on the face of the returns.

As so large a majority that if everything which the Democrats claimed before the Canvassing Board had been conceded to them the Republicans would still have been hundreds ahead.

Effects of Beer Drinking.
There was a large attendance yesterday at the Hoy Tabernacle, on Pennsylvania avenue, to listen to an address by Mr. Wm. Silverwood, of this city. Mr. Silverwood contrasted the drinking customs of Europe and America, and the crimes, etc., resulting therefrom. In regard to the plea that beer was not intoxicating, he gave Dr. Livingston as authority for saying that natives of Africa, who did not know of spirituous liquors, were, many of them, drunkards, simply from using the commonest kind of beer.

Of the observance of the Sabbath in London, June, 1861, he said the average attendance at church was 361,000, and in the beer shops the same day were 789,000 persons. Baltimore has seven times as many in church attendance as in saloons on the Sabbath. So in beer drinking countries there are fewer churches and less attendance. Berlin with 900,000 population has but 2 churches, Paris only 147, while Baltimore has 250 or more, and Philadelphia 515 churches and chapels. Thus, he said, is Christianity slowly, yet surely blotting out the evil of intemperance. Whiskey is the cause of every particle of crime in the two great political parties of the day in this country, and yet in this city, out of 70,000 voters, only about 7,000 or 8,000 are what we might term habitual drinkers. The great distress, to-day in England is caused by the beer guzzling of its lower classes. Many spend all their substance in beer, and so when hard times come, as come they will, they have nothing on which to live. Another illustration was given in the fact that the mortality of the lower classes was much greater in proportion to that of the higher, the reason being that they have not the comforts of life. The speaker urged all to quit drinking.—Balt. American, Monday.

The New Orleans Preygame says:
A gentleman who has recently returned to this city from Brazil informs us that the accounts of the ravages of famine and pestilence in that country are greatly exaggerated. He states that in the Providence of Ceara it has not rained during the last three and a-half years, and that the consequence is that all vegetation and everything else dried up in the interior, and the natives had to resort to the capital for food during the months of May and June last. When they arrived at Ceara the number of 100,000, they lived in the streets for many days, and died of starvation at the rate of 2,000 persons per month. A month elapsed before the Brazilian government came to their rescue, and supplied them with food, which consisted of jerked beef and farina. This stopped to a great extent the number of deaths. In regard to those afflicted by the small-pox, the first disease came to the notice of the public on the first of November, when they were dying at the rate of 50 persons a day. The deaths gradually increased until the first of December, when they numbered 1,000 per day. During the month of November 8,841 died. They were buried at Lagon Funda, 12 corpses being placed in a grave without using any coffin. From the 1st of November to the 6th of December, 13,866 people died. It is believed that from the famine and drought 150,000 persons died in the year 1878. It is reported that many of the people coming from the interior are their own children. Ceara had 250,000 inhabitants, and almost every person there contracted the small-pox.

REPUBLICANISM IN NEW ORLEANS:
—There is no concealing or softening the fact that a widespread uneasiness exists in New Orleans relative to the lawlessness and violence which prevail here to such a startling extent. For several weeks past these alarming manifestations have been increasing in number and degree, until peaceable citizens are beginning to speculate with ominous frequency upon the propriety of vigilance committees. Whether matters will go as far as that is of course, doubtful. The whole city is infected with rowdies, tramps, thieves, and ruffians, who pursue their avocations with little or no interference on the part of the police, and with little or no prospect of punishment in the rare cases when they happen to stumble over a policeman and be captured. It is a common complaint that gentlemen returning home late at night from their places of business are insulted or assaulted by gangs of ruffians wandering about the streets, and there are numberless instances in which girls of 10, 12, or 11 years of age have been frightened and even pursued by men who waylay them for the purpose. As for the carrying of fire arms and other weapons, that is so notorious and general a practice as to be beyond comment, and the awful fruit thereof is visible in more than a dozen graves within the past few weeks.—New Orleans Times, March 12.

A Baltimore Morning Herald reporter has been interviewing a number of leading merchants of that city upon the business prospects of the future. From the views expressed by these representative merchants, and the general disposition of our exchanges, the indications are, that there is a decidedly more wholesome feeling in the business outlook, and that the business season now opening will be more liberal and more generally satisfactory than for several years past. Real estate, which is usually the last and the slowest to make an upward move, is gradually showing increased life, and in this regard hope is afforded that bottom has been touched, and that henceforth forward we shall steadily approach more nearly the "good time coming." Money is most abundant, it is true, but there is believed to be more disposition to use it, and the free use of capital in the productive industries is the first step toward a revival of trade. The crops, in their immense products last year, have filled the country with wealth, and our almost unequalled exports have enabled the great West and South to buy liberally of our merchants and to pay readily for what they buy.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.
OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., March 20th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Monday, April 7th, 1879, for the purpose of hearing appeals on assessments, and making transfers.

Persons who have allotted property during the last year are requested to appear before the board to have the transfers made correctly.

A tax collector for the year 1879 will be appointed at this session.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

Road Examiners' Notice.
Notice is hereby given,

That the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to examine and view the lands through which the road mentioned for by H. G. Davis, P. M. Sample, Wm. Harvey, and others is to pass: The said road to lead from the Oakland and Frostburg road, near the King's meadow road, and running through lands of Montgomery, H. G. Davis, John H. Miller and Miss Mary Perry, to intersect the Frostburg and Ligon's Glade road, or near Black Top, road should be located, will meet on the premises on Tuesday, the 23rd day of April, 1879, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said location of said proposed road, and if so, to locate the same, and partition their duty in the premises.

ROBERT HEAR, E. H. SCHUBERT, JOHN FRIDLAND, of N. Examiners.

DR. E. H. PARSONS.
offers his professional services to the people of Oakland and vicinity.

Corporation Notice.
All persons having claims against the corporation of Oakland, are requested to present them on or before

By order, D. E. OFFUTT, Burgess.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and Conveyancer.

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Auctioneer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS. GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY. Also, Improved Hand Saws, &c. &c. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARETT CO., MD.

TWO OF THEM.

In the farm-house porch the farmer sat,
With his daughter having a cozy chat;
She was his only child, and he was old,
Thought her as fair as a girl could be;
A wee bit jaundiced, the old man's eyes,
If he fancied any might come to woo;
His one pet lamb and her loving care,
He valued with nobody else to share.

"There should be two of you, child," said he—
"There should be two to welcome me.
When I come home from the field at night,
Two would make the loneliness bright.
There's a neighborly girl with the children four,
To be glad together. Had I one more,
A proud old father I'd be, my dear,
With two good children to greet me here."

Down by the gate heath the old man-tree
Donald sat alone, and he
For whom he waited his love-call heard,
And on either cheek the blushing red.
"Father," she said, and knelt her down,
And kissed the hand that was old and brown—
"Father, there may be two, if you will,
And I—your only daughter still."

"Two to welcome you home at night,
Two to make the old homestead bright;
I—somebody else," "I see,"
Said the farmer, "and whom may I somebody
be?"
Oh, the dimples in Bonnie's cheek,
That played with the dimples at his-and-her's;
Away from his gaze she turned her head,
"One of Neighbour Gray's children," she said.

"If I'm," said the farmer, "make it plain;
Is it Susan, Alice, or Mary Jane?"
Another kiss on the cheek and hand,
To help the farmer understand (?)
"If I'm," said the farmer, "yes, I see;
Is it for power, and for me?
But I know, said, 'There can be but one
For me and my heart till life is done.'"
—Harper's Weekly.

LOSS OR GAIN?

An old gentleman, leaning forward with his hands clasped over a gold-headed cane, was seated in a summerhouse situated upon the grounds of a hotel at a fashionable watering-place.
He was in a corner hidden by drooping vines, and his face expressed deep and apparently painful thought. The refrain of his sad musing was: "Only one person in the whole world to love me, and I shall lose even that love
now!"

On the other side of the summerhouse, divided from the side of the old gentleman occupied by a rustic partition, two ladies, young and fair, rustled
in, and taking out some fancy work settled down for a chat.

One was tall and dressed in a pretty costume that was at once youthful and matronly; the other was petite, blond,
and not more than eighteen. Mrs.
Courtland spoke first.

"Embroidery, Alice?" she said. "A handkerchief corner. For your trousseau?"

"Yes," and the sweet voice faltered, while a burning blush crimsoned the fair cheek. "Is it not pretty?"

"Very. I want to talk about your prospects, child. Your Aunt Mary tells me you are making a splendid match."

"Did she? I think so, Blanche.
Malcolm is so noble and good, and a true Christian!"

"But your aunt tells me he is the favorite nephew of the great merchant, Hubert Bates, whose wealth is something enormous. You have only to help him play his cards well and he will probably be heir to a magnificent fortune. But what will you? You look as if I was telling you a piece of news."

"I think Aunt Mary has been misinformed; that is all."

"Then he is not Mr. Bates' nephew?"

"I never heard him speak of a rich
uncle, and I am quite sure he has no hope of inheriting money. He has a good salary, and my little fortune will furnish a small house; so we can make a comfortable and, I hope, a happy home."

"Did he never speak to you of his uncle?"

"Not of a rich uncle. He has told me of a lame uncle, his mother's brother,
who has been very kind to him,
given him his education and a start in the world. He always talks of him with the deepest love and pity."

"Pity?"

"He suffers tortures from the effects of a fall that has lamed him for life
and often causes him weeks of agonizing pain. Malcolm tells me with tears in his eyes of his loss of losing this friend."

"I wonder if it is the same?" murmured Mrs. Courtland.

"Tell me, Blanche, some of the best places to go for our furniture and carpets. I want my new work for me to buy household goods, and Aunt Sophy is not well enough to help me much."

"O, I will go with you. But I declare, if I were you, I would wait and see if your Aunt Mary is right. Your fortune will never buy or furnish such a house as a future millionaire should live in."

"My fortune," said Alice Hunter, with a ring in her clear voice, will furnish a house suitable for a bank
clerk with five hundred a year salary,
which is what my husband will have.
If Malcolm has a rich uncle he is not the man to live in expectation of money to come to him over a grave. If his uncle Hubert is, as you say, very rich, Malcolm would have money won by the death of the nearest relative and dearest friend he has. But I don't believe in the money, for he never spoke of it to me."

Then the talk drifted into discussion
of bridal finery, of furniture, and stories of the young wife's content in her own married life.

But the old man leaning upon the cane was thinking. "Can it be true?
Does Malcolm think so little of my money, that will be his, that he has never even mentioned to his promised wife? Can it be that I shall gain a loving, tender niece instead of losing my nephew when Malcolm marries?"

Loving his nephew so deeply, Hubert Bates had felt a keen pain at the news of his betrothal. He had never seen Alice Hunter, but he knew she had been brought up in a circle of fashion and was the orphan niece of one of society's gayest votaries, Mrs. Mary Hayden.

While he mused upon the conversation he had overheard, the silvery voices of his young neighbors still sounding beside him, there was a sudden crash. Something struck him upon the head, and he lost consciousness.

Cries from the summer-house from groups of people collected in the grounds, brought a party of men speedily to the spot. The rotten posts supporting the roof upon one side had given way and the side and roof had fallen in. Mrs. Courtland and Miss Hunter were buried under the fallen timbers, adieu, but were uninjured. Not so the old gentleman, who had been their unsuspected listener. He was taken out pallid and senseless.

Nobody knew him. He had come by the morning train, had taken breakfast,
but no room, and asked the hour for the return train. A surgeon summoned as speedily as possible announced a broken arm and injury to the head,
making a likelihood of a long, tedious illness. There was some animated discussion, some suggestions of hospital,
a search through the pockets of the unconscious victim, resulting in the discovery of a small sum of money, but no letters, papers or cards; and finally a doctor of one and another, each giving his or her way, with the consoling
reflection: "It's none of my business."

But when they had all deserted the injured man the surgeon, still busy with his arm as he lay upon a bench brought from the ruined summer-house, felt a light touch on his hand and looked up.

"Can I help you?" Alice Hunter
asked.

"No, child, not now."

"What will they do with him?"

"I suppose he must go to a hospital."

"But the ride—the journey?"

"Will cause additional suffering, perhaps result in death."

"Doctor, will they keep him here if he is paid for?"

"Certainly; but there is not money enough about him to pay his board a week."

"I will pay it."

"You?"

"Yes; I will not let him die for want of money I have. He"—and her lips quivered—"he looks like my dear
father who is dead!"

"He is—yes. Here come the followers to carry him to the station. I think I will have him taken to the house where I board. It will cost less and be more quiet."

Mrs. Courtland declared Alice was outraging the proprieties most dreadfully when the young girl went to the house and offered her services as nurse
to the doctor; but Alice, with a smile,
all comment by moving all her belongings from the hotel to the quiet boarding house, and the doctor found he had a valuable assistant.

Alice explained, in her quiet, low voice, that her father was ill for nine months before he died, and she was his nurse. This accounted for the noiseless wooden dress, the velvet-shod
feet, the quick eye and the ready hand,
and when the sufferer recovered consciousness the gentle voice and tact
that quieted him in paroxysms of pain and fever. Aunt Sophy was too much of an invalid herself to help; but she sat beside the bed while Alice moved to and fro, and performed all nursing duties.

The invalid had one long talk with the doctor, and then submitted to the gentle ministrations of the two women,
only insisting upon a man the doctor provided being with him at night and within call.

The season was over, and only these three remained of the summer boarders
at the house, when, one cool October day, the sick man, now fast recovering, called Alice to him.

"I shall soon be well again," he said,
regretfully.

"Yes," she answered, cheerily,
"very soon."

"I shall miss my nurse."

"And I my patient; but I am glad you are recovering. We were afraid at one time there would be a more painful parting."

"You mean I was in danger of dying,
Why should that be painful? Lam old."

She made no answer, looking sorrow-
fully into his uplifted eyes.

"And a burden upon you, the doctor tells me. Why did you make yourself responsible for a stranger?"

The fair face flushed, the soft eyes were dewy with feeling, as Alice said softly.

"Because you are old and seemed poor and friendless. I was glad it was my power to aid you. Do not think it was at any great cost," she added, with a generous desire to lighten the burden of obligation. "I have some money lying idle."

"For the wedding-day, perhaps.
Well, child, you might as well give jewels to deck your bridal than an old man's tears of gratitude and love. I am getting well and shall soon leave
you. Will you give me a keepsake?"

The girl loosened a little silver from a chain round her throat, cut off one of her golden curls and put it in the place of some hairs he took out, and laid the trinket in the old man's hand.

"With my love," she said, softly.

"Ah, child!" he sighed, "an old man sick and feeble wins little love."

"Yet," she said earnestly, "you must believe that I have nursed you since you were conscious with affection.
My own father is gone, but if ever you want a daughter's care or affection, believe me, I will gladly come to you if possible."

Three days later the house was deserted. Aunt Sophy and Alice returned to their home, and Alice cheerfully paid out of her small patrimony for the board and expenses of her venerable patient.

She little guessed how deep an impression her care and tenderness had made upon the heart so long closed against human affection, so distrustful
of any advances from his fellow-creatures. It was a revelation to him, this active charity to an utter stranger. He had gone to the hotel merely to see Malcolm's choice and had purposely left all clue to his identity behind him.
He had intended meeting Alice, if possible, unknown and watching her unobserved; but accident had thrown them together in a way he little anticipated. The first use he made of his recovery was to write to his nephew,
and Malcolm met him at the station
when he returned home.

Knowing nothing of the recent accident, the young man was shocked in the change in his uncle's face.

"You have been ill?" he cried.

"Very ill."

"Why did you not send for me?"

"I had even better have sent than you, Malcolm. Don't ask me any questions now, but tell me about your marriage preparations."

"Alice has gone home and will remain until November. Then she comes to Mr. Haydon's, and will buy her furniture."

"In November?"

"Yes."

Late in November she came, her trunks full of Aunt Sophy's presents,
and Aunt Mary gave her cordial greeting. A grand wedding was the display
upon which the lady had set her heart,
and Alice shrank a little at the comments upon the rich uncle and her own good fortune in the "first-rate match."

But just before the wedding-day a little note was brought to Alice by a georgian footman, who was driven to her aunt's behind a private carriage.
The note was from Malcolm, and begged her to come to him in the carriage.

Wondering, but obedient, Alice was speedily ready, and was driven to a handsome house, where the door was opened to usher her into a stylish drawing-room, where a gentleman awaited her, and Malcolm advancing, said:

"My uncle Hubert, Alice!"

Kindly blue eyes looked up into her own, withered hands were raised, and a voice he knew well said: "We are old friends, Malcolm. Are we not, Alice?"

Then before she could answer, the old man continued: "I have thought Alice, it was unkind to have my nephew wait for my death before sharing in my wealth. I have borne a surge of distrust in my heart for many years,
thinking my money would me all the affection, save Malcolm's, that was of content to wed the young clerk and put your own patrimony into his home, you must not refuse my heir, who has accepted from me an income that makes him independent and rich."

"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

"I will come," said the old man.
"My love for Malcolm can bear
riches or poverty," was the answer;
"but, sir, our home needs you. You
will come, will you not, to the children
who will try to make you happy?"

Peace Society. His voice was heard constantly pleading for peace. During this time he became proprietor and editor of the Peace Advocate, and also issued a periodical tract entitled the "Boud of Brotherhood," and took a prominent part in all the European Congresses. The object of this Brotherhood was to use all legitimate means for the abolition of war throughout the world.

In 1853 Burritt returned to America.
He went to Philadelphia 1862 and edited the Citizen of the World, visiting Europe again in 1863, and in 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Birmingham. He returned finally to America in 1870, and settled down quietly to literary labor in his native place. The closing years of his life were uneventful but busy, passed chiefly in his study among his books. In 1839
he lost all his savings, made literally by the sweat of his brow. During struggles with poverty he worked through the Spring and Summer, earning enough to keep him in the Winter
while he studied languages. As a lecturer he was renowned for his eloquence and ability, always attracting large audiences by his magnetic influence, mental vigor and exquisite descriptive powers. He was always a large contributor to periodical literature. He spent his leisure during his residence in Birmingham in wandering round the beautiful spots in the neighborhood.

He was removed from his Consulate
by President Grant, shortly after his inauguration. For some time Mr. Bur-ritt had suffered from attacks of hem-orrhages of the lungs, and his death was not unexpected.—N. Y. Star.

Our Lead Product.

Among the many products of this country which the past few years have developed there is none so little known outside of the actual trade as lead, and although the United States is rich in this metal, many can remember the time when this country had to depend on England for its supply of lead and lead manufactures. But all this has changed, for not only does this country produce all the lead which it requires for home consumption, but it also exports from this harbor a large quantity annually—about one-tenth of the entire production being sent to foreign markets, chiefly to the continent of Europe.
As the country used last year for home consumption 150,000,000 pounds of lead, the loss of the foreign trade was very seriously felt in the English and Continental lead markets; the most important of these being the United States, which in 1878 imported 8,000,000 pounds of lead from China and Japan, where England had formerly held the monopoly. The American leads were there so much appreciated that England lost during 1878
in the sale of its lead, £5,000,000 pounds of the metal. As the Chinese and Japanese have found that the American leads are equal to those heretofore supplied to them from Great Britain, for all the purposes which make the metal required for these countries, and as it can be obtained cheaper and more readily, it is considered probable that, with the conservative ideas
of the Mongol race, America will supply the 32,000,000 pounds annually required by them. When England saw her trade with the United States, which amounted annually to about 50,000,000 pounds of lead, and with China to 32-000,000 pounds, shipping away from her port and the fact that the latter was going,
or the former had been, was clearly set forth last year—it is not to be wondered at that she made desperate but vain efforts, by reducing prices, to drive out her strong but stronger rival. So great, however, are the resources of this country, in lead as well as other products, that every week develops new fields to work, and makes the supply always equal to, even if it does not exceed, the demand for the metal. Last year, 1878, the products of the lead mines of the United States were 16,358,000 pounds
more than in 1877; the total product being $12,608,000 pounds a year, with valuable mines in Colorado, Nevada, etc., undeveloped. As the foreign demand increases, so also will the resources of this country to supply, for the new mines are sure to be worked. The time evidently is not far distant when America will supply the whole world
with lead not only in its simple form,
but also in the four chief manufactured conditions, which embrace white lead for paints, and the three other forms of sheet, shot and pipe lead. Of the 150,000, one-half was employed in the making of paint, and one-sixth each in the form of shot, pipe and sheet. It will be remembered that the making of cartridges
in this country has become a very large business, and is growing larger every day, both the lead and the process of manufacture being better esteemed abroad than those of any other part of the world.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Old Practices.

In some parts of Scotland, in former times, the plows used to be drawn by four horses abreast, and required the attendance of three men. The business of one man was to drive. For that purpose he placed himself between the middle horses, with his face toward the plow, to guide it straight, and in this position he stepped backward with the reins in his hand. Another walked behind the horses with a checked staff,
which he fastened in the front of the beam, and by means of it regulated the depth of the furrow, by raising or lowering the plow, as occasion required. The plowman followed, with a hold of the stiles; and in this formation and ludicrous manner they repeated their attacks on the soil. In harvest a basket machine was placed on horseback for carrying home the grain, and persons were employed on each side,
with forks, to keep it in a proper poise.
It is said that this practice is yet to be met with in Galloway.

It is said a shad lives but one year.
It is almost incredible that he can develop such a wilderness of bones in so brief a time.—Boston Transcript.

Our Young Folks.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Whatever you are, be brave, boys!
The hawk's a coward and a slave, boys;
Though clever at ruses,
And sharp at excuses,
He's a sneaking and pitiful knave, boys.

Whatever you are, be frank, boys;
'Tis better than money and rank, boys;
Still cleave to the right,
Be lovers of light,
Be open, above-board, and frank, boys.

Whatever you are, be kind, boys;
Be gentle in manner and mind, boys;
The man gentle in mind,
Words and temper, I wend,
Is the gentleman truly refined, boys.

Not whatever you are, be true, boys;
Be visible through and through, boys;
Leave to others the shamming,
The 'greening' and 'crayoning,'
In fun and in earnest be true, boys.

MOTHER MAGPIE'S MISCHIEF.

Old Mother Magpie was about the busiest character in the forest. But you must know that there is a great difference between being busy, and being industrious. One may be very busy all the time, and yet not in the least industrious; and this was the case with Mother Magpie.

She was always full of everybody's business but her own—up and down,
here and there, everywhere but in her own nest, knowing every one's affairs,
telling what everybody had been doing,
ought to do, and ready to cast her advice gratis at every bird and beast in the woods.

Now she bustled up to the parsonage
at the top of an oak tree, to tell old parson Toowhit what she thought he ought to preach for his next sermon,
and how dreadful the morals of the parish were becoming. Then, having perfectly bewildered the poor old gentleman, who was always sleepy of a Monday morning, Mother Magpie would take a peep into Mr. Oriole's nest, sitting on a bough above, and pour forth floods of advice, which, poor little Mrs. Oriole used to say to her husband, bewildered her more than a hard northeast storm.

"Depend upon it, my dear," Mother Magpie would say, "this way of building your nest, swinging like an old empty stocking from a bough, isn't at all the thing. I never built one so in my life, and I never have headaches,
my dear, as you complain always that your head aches whenever I call upon you.
Its all on account of this way of swinging and swaying about in such an absurd manner."

"But, my dear," piped Mrs. Oriole, timidly, "the Orioles have always built it in this manner, and it suits our constitution."

"A fiddle on your constitution! How can you tell what agrees with your constitution unless you try? You own you are not well; you are subject to headaches, and every physician will tell you that a tilting motion disorders the stomach and acts upon the brain. Ask old Dr. Kite. I was talking to him about your case only yesterday, and says he, 'Mrs. Magpie, I perfectly agree with you.'"

"But my husband prefers this style
of building."

"That's only because he isn't properly structured. Pray did you ever attend Dr. Kite's lectures on the nervous system?"

"No, I have no time to attend lectures. Who would sit on the eggs?"

"Why, your husband to be sure;
don't he take his turn in setting? If he don't, he ought to. I shall speak to him about it. My husband always sets regularly half the time, that I may have time to go about and exercise."

"O, Mrs. Magpie, pray don't speak to my husband, he will think that I've been complaining."

"No, no, he won't. Let me alone. I understand. Who would sit on the thing, I've advised hundreds of young husbands in my day, and I never gave offense."

"But I tell you, Mrs. Magpie, I don't want any interference between my husband and me, and I will not have it," says Mrs. Oriole, her little round eyes flashing with indignation.

"Don't put yourself in a passion, my
dear; the more you talk, the more sure I am that your nervous system is running down, and you wouldn't forget good manners in this way. You'd better take advice, for I understand just what you do, and why says Mother
Magpie

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .85
Three months, .45
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
second, 4¢; third, 3¢; fourth, 2¢; fifth, 1¢.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 1879.

Only 73 per cent of the Democrats
in the House are ex-Confederates, but 99 per cent of the remainder will vote as the Confederates bid them.

The painful lack of Democratic leadership and intelligent following is beginning to manifest itself in Washington. — Baltimore Gazette, Democratic.

All the President's most intimate friends agree in declaring that he will not back down a particle on the question of repealing the election laws. That is where he is solid with his party.

The Solid South thinks it ought to be trusted with the control of the House, so that it can show that it is capable of self-restraint; but the country thinks the power of self-restraint
should be shown in advance,
as a qualification.

Judge Wm. Fell Giles, who had occupied the bench in the United States District Court, for the State of Maryland, for twenty-six years, died
at a late hour Friday night of last week, in Baltimore, in the 72 year of his age.

Nearly one-half of the Democratic Senators who meet with the new Congress are ex-Confederates. They number nineteen, while of the Republicans there are only four who served in the war. This would seem to show that the South clings to the past and its sectional issues full as tenaciously as the North does.

Just before the adjournment of the Wisconsin Legislature a vote was taken on the Republican side as to Presidential preferences, with the following result: In the Senate,
Grant 8, Sherman 2, Garfield 2,
Blaine 2, Edmunds 2, anti-Grant 2, scattering 1; in the Assembly, Grant
23, Blaine 12, Edmunds 4, Washburn
3, Carpenter 2, Sherman 2. The Democrats of the Senate were found to be generally for Bayard, and of the Assembly largely in favor of Tilden.

The decision of the Greenbackers to stand together and oppose attaching the proposed legislation to appropriation bills, has introduced an element into the pending contest
which the Democrats had not contemplated. If this decision is adhered to, it will give the Democrats
but two majorities for the measures in question, the entire vote being but 115, including the speaker. In this view of the case an all summer fight with the Administration is much easier talked about than carried on.
The Republicans are preparing to contest the Democratic advance on the laws for honest elections at every step both by exhaustive debate, which they can easily force, and by all the parliamentary weapons at their control. There is no disposition to yield anything, and the proposed bills will only reach the President when all means of contesting them have been exhausted first by the Republicans of the House, and afterwards by those of the Senate.

The Southern Congressmen are very much surprised to find, as they do from the figures reported by Secretary Sherman, that the total amounts expended in the entire South
for the pay of marshals at the late election was less than five thousand dollars. The large expenditure in New York city is calling their attention to the points that many Republicans have made from the first, that this whole movement to repeal the election laws is one mainly devised for the purpose of carrying New York. This gives a Tilden coloring to the whole affair which is far from pleasing to a large element from the South. Besides this, few of the Southern members are much disturbed
by the idea that they may have to endure supervisors and marshals at the next elections at the South, since they regard the results of the coming campaign as virtually recorded in advance. The only care in this quarter does not relate to their ability to carry the elections, but to a wish to avoid the small annoyance of nominal arrests and trials.

Republican State Central Committee.

The Republican State Central Committee of Maryland met at Raine's Hall, Baltimore, on Thursday, R.
Stockett Matthews in the chair.
Sixty-two members out of a total of one hundred and ten, were present.
Mr. Weatherly, of Balto. city, offered a resolution for holding primaries on May 1st, to elect delegates to a State convention to meet
May 7th, for the purpose of forming a new State committee, and to elect delegates to a State convention to nominate candidates for Governor and other offices, &c. A set of resolutions of last week, were offered as a substitute and were finally adopted.
They are as follows:

Resolved, That when this committee adjourn it shall adjourn subject to the call of its chairman, whenever in his judgment the interests or necessities of the Republican party shall require its reassembling.

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee, at such times as in his judgment may be most expedient, shall call together the members of the executive committee of the State central committee for the purpose of fixing the time and place for the holding of a State convention to nominate the several candidates who are to be voted for on the State ticket at the next election; and it is the sense of this committee that the State executive committee shall be called together at some time not later than the first day of July next.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this committee it is inexpedient to call a State convention solely for the purpose of selecting a new State
committee.

Resolved, That the executive committee of the State central committee,
at the same time that it provides for the calling of the next State convention, as hereinbefore provided for,
shall also designate the time and place for the holding of separate conventions in the legislative districts of Baltimore city and in the respective counties of the State to select delegates to such State convention. The executive committee of the city of Baltimore and of the several counties shall make such arrangements as may be necessary to designate the time and place for the holding of primary meetings to elect delegates to the city and county conventions herein provided for.

Resolved, That the executive committee of the State committee shall also at its aforesaid meeting direct the conventions of the several legislative districts of Baltimore and of the respective counties, called as aforesaid, to choose at their respective sessions their representatives on the State central committee, and the persons thus chosen to represent said districts and said counties shall constitute the Republican State central committee for the next ensuing two years.

The meeting then adjourned.

President's Message.

We publish below President
Hayes' proclamation, which is probably the shortest ever sent to a new Congress. It does not go beyond the mention of the express purpose for which the extra session was called,
and it is much to be desired that Congress will take the hint and emulate the President's brevity. A much suffering country expects its adjournment at the earliest possible day, and
as there is very little legislation necessary, that day should not be very distant.

Fellow Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The failure of the last Congress to make the requisite appropriations for legislative and judicial purposes, for the expenses of the several Executive Departments of the Government, and for the support of the army, has made it necessary to call a special session of the Forty-sixth Congress.
The estimates of the appropriations needed, which were sent to Congress
by the Secretary of the Treasury at the opening of the last session are renewed, and herewith transmitted to both the Senate and House of Representatives. Regretting the existence of the emergency which requires a special session of Congress at a time when it is the general wish of the country that the public welfare will be best promoted by permanency in our legislation, and by peace and rest, I commend these few necessary measures to your considerate attention.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES,
Washington, March 19th, 1879.

Mr. Tilden must hurry the progress of that fresh barrel through the South. There are no little matters of discontent, and open remarks
that Bayard is a much more desirable candidate than Tilden, since he has a backbone and a warmer place in his heart for the South. It is also said that Bayard can carry New York as surely as Tilden can, which seems to be a fact, for neither of them
can carry it with the present obstacles
to ballot-box-stuffing in the way.

The Southern press is unanimous in declaring that if the President vetoes the appropriation bills which are saddled with a repeal of the election laws, and thus stops the machinery of the Government, the country will visit the Republican party with swift condemnation. The trouble with this opinion is that its authors regard the Solid South as the country. They will find out on election day that it is only a minority of the country.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 25, 1879.

The excitement over the political situation continues notwithstanding the many assurances that the Democratic brag and bluster has no real foundation as far as the President is concerned. Springer's announcement in caucus that he favored the retention of the superior law with some "modifications" was the first inkling anyone outside the Bourbon circle of intriguers had of what was going on. Of course Democrats and Republicans who didn't stop to consider the wide latitude for hedg-ing which the blatant Illinois demagogue had allowed himself on his
"modifications," were alike surprised that so orthodox a politician as Mr.
Springer should be willing to capitu-late without firing a gun. Democrats spoke in a contemptuous way of what seemed like an exhibition of the "white feather," while Republicans hoped the sober second thought had convinced the revolutionaries that leaders who have command of their party in Congress, of the danger of presiding in their programme. But the case was suspected from the first
by the more sagacious of all parties,
and it was not long before rumors were flying thick and fast, to the effect that the Bourbon managers had been secretly negotiating with the President and that he had committed himself to a modification of the superior law that was equivalent to its abrogation and to the absolute surrender of the Republican position.
It was not a noisy demonstration that followed; but there was no
mistaking the feelings of profound indignation that appeared to move Republicans as by a common impulse. The leaders professed to see the surrender of the President which their opponents were basely proclaiming; but their manner belied
their affected incredulity. The situation has continued without material change since Saturday. The Tribune, Times, Globe, and the local papers
all agree in the belief that the President has not come to any formal agreement with the Democratic negotiators, but it is said in such manipulation by one and all as to strengthen the apprehension that such an arrangement is by no means improbable, judging from the antecedents of the administration and from the spirit pervading the White House as communicated to gentlemen who have visited that centre of political interest on political mission within the past sixty-two hours. I can only say in addition that should these apprehensions prove well founded it seems likely that the President will find himself without a single supporter on the Republican side of either House or Senate; for nothing that has occurred since Mr.
Hayes' occupancy of the Executive Mansion has seemed to drive together and unite Republicans of every degree of stalwartness or liberality (in the vernacular of the politician) as have the developments of the last three days. The contest will be formally opened in the House to-day
by the presentation of the Army appropriation bill with a rider, providing for the repeal of the law permitting soldiers in the vicinity of the polls on election days.

It is now rumored that the Green-backers have originated another compromise which all of them save Ladd (a Maine Bourbon) have agreed to support; and they (the Green-backers) profess to have had the assurance of several Republicans that they will second this maiden effort of statistas as a mediator between the two great parties, flanking them on either hand. It proposes, substantially, to appoint a committee from the three parties now represented in the House, to devise the most effective method of protecting the elective franchise by law. Its originators say that if the Democrats reject the plan it will be a notification to the country that they will accept nothing that does not promise them a partisan advantage, and they (the Greenbackers) will govern their affiliations accordingly. It is noticeable that they have generally manifested a partiality for the Republicans
since the opening of the session.

Though Mr. Gorham loses his position as Secretary of the Senate by the substitution of Birch, unless very exacting, he must feel gratified
at the many panegyrics on his character, both as a private citizen and public man, uttered on the occasion of his official death yesterday.
The tenor of everything worked during the debate was that the Senate had never had a more efficient official than he, and I am sure could but concede the truth of this estimate of him.

LOGAN.

The reduction of the tax on tobaco is said to be a perfect swindle, inasmuch as it goes into the pockets of men who have already become rich
in the business.

Action of the Joint Caucus Committee.

The two committees appointed respectively by the House and Senate Democratic caucuses to make recommendations concerning the order of business for the extra session held a joint meeting of five and a half hours continuous duration on Saturday.

There were present Senators Thur-
man, Whyte, Kernan, Saulsbury, Jones (Fla.), Vance and Bailey, and Representatives Chalmers, Carlisle,
Cox (N. Y.), Ewing, Springer,
Tucker, Atkins, Clymer, Reagan,
Dicknell and Phelps. Senator Thurman presided.

The first question discussed was whether the political legislation desired by the dominant party in Congress should be effected by the passage of a separate measure or by the incorporation of repealing clauses,
&c., in the appropriation bills.

Nearly every one present participated in the discussion.
It was finally determined that the
after course would be most expedient, especially for the reason that there being a general desire to finish
the necessary business of the session at as early day as possible.

The determination was reached by a vote of 13 against 5; two Senators and three Representatives voting
in the negative.

The next question considered was whether the political portions of the appropriation bills should now be passed in the same terms which they were passed at the last session, or whether the repealing clauses in regard to the Federal election laws should be modified so as to repeal only those sections which authorize the appointment of chief supervisor
and deputy marshals for elections,
together with the sections conferring police powers on the supervisors, thus continuing the authorization for the appointment of two supervisors of different politics to serve in a respectional capacity at each poll as witnesses at the count of votes.

After an exhaustive discussion it was decided to recommend the adoption of the modified position above described. The vote was 11 against 4, there being two Senators and two Representatives in favor of total repeal.

The joint meeting then authorized Senators Thurman, Saulsbury, Bailey
and Kernan, and Representatives Chalmers, Springer, Carlisle and Atkins to formulate provisions in accordance with the decision in regard to the election laws, and also provisions for the total repeal of the juris-dict test acts and the existing authorization of the presence of the troops at the polls for incorporation
in the legislative, executive, and judicial, and the army appropriation bills, together with such additional provisions as they may deem necessary to secure free and fair elections for Representatives and Delegates to Congress.

After appointing the sub-commi-
tee the joint meeting proceeded to consider the question whether the legislation of the present session should be strictly confined to the appropriation bills, including the measures above indicated, or whether general business should be transacted
by either House when not engaged on an appropriation bill.

A decided majority of the Senate caucus committee favored restriction
of the business of the session to appropriation bills, and to the enactment of what is known as the yellow lever bill.

A majority (but not a large one) of the House committee insisted that the opportunities for transacting general business should be improved, without, however, prolonging the session after the appropriation bills shall have been disposed of.

It was finally decided to report a disagreement on this subject to a joint caucus, and leave the settlement of the question to a majority of the Democratic members of both Houses.

After the Battle.

The "reorganizers" of the Republican party who met with a rather crushing defeat at the Raine's Hall
State Central committee meeting Thursday, have recovered from the shock which the action of the committee caused, and as heretofore intimated, are now talking of coming back to the rank and file of the party and creating no more trouble. All of them, with the exception of a few extremists, are satisfied with the action of the committee, and consider it final. They do not conceal their disappointment at the committee's action, but they know that at the meeting of the disaffected at Raine's Hall, it was the sentiment that the decision of the State Central Committee shall be final, and are content to let the matter rest until the State Executive Committee decides to call a State convention, when efforts will be made to elect a new State central committee. Many of the "reorganizers" are consoled in their defeat by the clause in Mr. Mathews' resolution providing that hereafter the election of delegates to State conventions shall be held by legislative districts in the city, instead of by wards, and claim that they have gained a partial victory in this respect. The members of the regular wing of the party, however, do not concede this to be a victory for the "reorganizers," as Mr. Mathews and the present committee were never averse to conducting elections on this plan. A gentleman heretofore identified with the "reorganizers" movement said that all were now satisfied except a few persons, and those have no great weight with the party.

Gen. King, one of the most dissatisfied, said he bowed to the decision of the committee, although he disagreed with them. Mr. Ditty is also averse to any action at present, but blames
the defeat of his wing of the party
on his "coparceners" who opposed the assembling of the Raine's Hall convention. The action of the committee ends the movement inaugurated by Mr. Ditty last summer for the overthrow of the present State Central Committee.

How Hiscock Settled Tilden.

The brief but fervid stump speeches which Tilden injected into his cross examination are being copied with delight by the Democratic editors. Of course they omit to quote the subsequent questions, which invariably destroyed the eloquence.
One of the most instances of the way this was done occurred in the later part of the examination. Mr.
Tilden remarked that the "danger of tolerating a wrong on either side is its tendency to grow. One man does a thing because another man does it.
This was one of the reasons that impelled me to put my foot down against every approach of this kind."
This was a lovely contribution to the high moral fraud literature, till Mr.
Hiscock destroyed its symmetry by saying quietly, "Yes; and it is in that same line, upon the assumption that you would have done that, that I desire to make the fact prominent in this case, that the National committee of the Democratic party absolved all this correspondence with the South Carolina and Florida
statesmen to be in the name of Col.
Pelton, and after it was discovered that he was, at least receiving propositions, and that he was putting himself in position to be tempted by such propositions, that neither you nor the Democratic executive committee removed him from that position." Mr. Tilden did not return to the stump speaking business again
after that stopper was administered.

Why Davis is to Go Back to the Senate.

The Meridian Mississippi, Mercury, of March 15, says: Is Jefferson Davis capable of being a martyr to the ruin of his people who sigh for peace? Is he not a saint-like fall of wisdom and State craft as he is of years. Is it safe, while the past is not yet passed, and dangers of a bad settlement of conflicting questions
beset, to take tyros for statesmen,
if we can obtain the services of so great and good a man to help to steer the ship of State through the breakers of conflicting opinions? As we said,
we sigh for peace, and who is more capable of helping to secure it for us than the man who held the highest position for us in the midst of flagrant war? As we have sometimes said, the sending of him to the United States Senate would be the highest evidence that Mississippi can give of a desire for the most perfect reconciliation, and to reach the end of that past the Vicksburg Herald
insists he belongs to, and bury it out of sight. It ought to be so accepted by our Northern brethren, and, we believe, would be by the reflective and patriotic men of that section, and that again in the seat he once adorned he could and would expedite the happy day more than any man now living. That's the reason we propose to send him to the United States Senate.

Reports from the great wheat-growing States of the West and Northwest show that the prospects for an abundant wheat crop this year
are without exception very favorable.
The increase in acreage in different States varies from five to twenty five per cent, and nearly an equal increase in yield per acre is expected.
The grasshopper, which alone has very seriously injured the wheat
product of the country of late years,
has had his day, and unusual droughts
or heavy rains during the harvest season are the only agents liable to prevent the crop this year from being larger by 50,000,000 or 75,000,000 bushels than last year. During the past two years the fall in the price of wheat has been about forty per cent,
and it was hoped that it had about reached bottom prices. This hope will probably not be realized. With abundant harvests here, and, now that the plague is a thing of the past,
there being nothing to interfere with the export of Russia's enormous crop of 1,881,301,000, it is believed that the average price for 1879 will be lower than at any time since 1851.

If the Southern bulldozing Congressmen can do as they please, Congress will be likely to sit all Summer.
A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial obtained the opinion of several of them on the length of the session, and the unanimous voice was for a long fight with the President.
General Hooker, of Mississippi,
thinks Congress may sit till March 4, 1881, "unless the Radicals adopt a different programme from the one that they have marked out." General Manning, also of Mississippi, expects to stay all Summer. Carlisle, of Kentucky; adjournment won't come for a long time. General Gilson, of Louisiana, has the calm assurance to say the session will be a long one "unless Hayes should behave himself, which is not probable."
Casey Young, of Tennessee, is prepared to "sit till we carry our points
if it takes all Summer." Eppa Huntton, of Virginia, expects "an eighteen months fight." The forocious Chalmers is going to sit for the rest of time, for he will "sit till hell freezes over, if the Republicans persist in their policy." There is the true swaggar of the bulldozer about all this, talk, and it will alarm no
one in the slightest degree.

If Congress opens the door to general legislation now, there will be no adjournment before the Christmas holidays. The good effect of the extra session will be lost entirely to the Democrats if the session is to be a driveling and prolonged affair. The country is not suffering for legislation beyond that which has caused the calling of this extra session and the sooner this fact is recognized in Washington the better.

The country has had enough Congress this year. — Baltimore Gazette.

The Democrats even are beginning to realize that the Extra Forty-sixth proposes to dip extensively into the business of the country, to the detriment of business and everything else, including the new managers of the country. We hope, if general legislation is gone into, that the session will last until the Christmas holidays. The country will probably get enough of the Confederate Congress by that time. — Cumbe News.

The work of the extra session has been pretty well mapped out. For obvious reasons the Democrats do not care to have the session a long one,
but, as they forced the extra session,
they declare that they will carry their point at all hazards. The federal supervisors' law must be repealed, if it is vetoed, and cannot pass over the veto as a separate bill, it will take a second ride on the appropriation bill
and stick there, if necessary, all summer. As the leaders did not hesitate in making the extra session
necessary, so they will not hesitate to leave the chief departments of the government without funds to accomplish their purposes. Until this is settled it is quite probable that no important legislation will be voted upon. This is the programme just
now. Later on it may lose its charm.

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois Legislature to abolish the grand jury system. It provides that every person accused of crime shall have a preliminary investigation of the facts (unless he waive the same), and, when committed or held to bail, the State's attorney shall thereupon, if in his judgment the evidence and circumstances warrant,
file an information in which he shall charge the person with the crime in non-technical language, but in terms
so clear and specific that the prisoner shall understand with what he is charged. Any errors or mistakes in the information may be corrected at any time by the court. This is substantially the law of Michigan. Referring to the bill the Chicago Tribune says: "The abolition of the grand jury system will hardly be seriously regretted, except by those who are in the protection of crime."

General Garfield sums up the Democratic attitude in Congress tersely and accurately. Talking with a correspondent of the Cleveland Leader
about the causes of the extra session,
he says: "The demand which the Democrats make is this: 'If you don't let us take away every barrier against fraud at the Presidential election, in short, if you don't allow free fraud in the choice of a President and Members of Congress, we will stop the Government! We will control or stop it!' That is the issue in a nut shell. It all turns on New York City. Without an election law, a majority for 'Reform' can be rolled up to any size there; with an election law only an honest vote can be cast, and an honest vote means a Republican victory in New York State and a Republican President."

The strike of the Greenbackers was a miserable fizzle. They were able to get only fourteen votes together,
and bested all but one of those upon Hendricks B. Wright. The House has been organized without them,
and henceforth they will be of no importance to anybody.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1879.

NUMBER 6.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.
D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Fruit, Pistols, etc.
G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.
D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.
I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.
L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.
J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.
N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Alder & Main Sts.
DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.
C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.
RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.
HOTELS.
CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Court House.
BOARDING HOUSES.
MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.
DAVIS HOUSE,
MRS. M. E. DAVIS, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second Streets.
GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.
LIVERY STABLE.
THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.
STOVES AND TINWARE.
G. A. SHIRER,
Oak street, near Second.
PHYSICIAN.
DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.
DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.
MILLS.
GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS.
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.
OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS.
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.
PLASTERER.
JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.
BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.
GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.
SURVEYORS.
J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.
JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.
JEWELER.
A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Smith's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.
MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.
MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.
M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.
MASON.
JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First street.
LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.
DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.
G. W. MERRILL,
Next Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, Perfumery, Compounds, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.
PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.
E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Rush's Store.
S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.
BLACKSMITHS.
CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. FARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.
P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence next door to Express office.
GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.
JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.
CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.
JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.
PROFESSIONAL CARDS.
H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. d-ssy
Jan. 30-tf.
GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,
Lower Floor.
Particular attention given to conveying and
investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Terms negotiated. d-ssy
Jan. 30-tf.
J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 30-tf.
THOS. J. PEDDICOOR, A. B. GOSBER, PEDDICOOR & GOSBER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 30-tf.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his creditors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street,
ap-ly
A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
new large shop,
Fall and Winter Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measures for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction. a-ly
350 ACRES
—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.
This Land lies on the Hooppole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots, Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.
INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.
IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 21-18801 CASES—L. C.
ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his credi-
tors, employees and suppliers, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett county, to answer such bills, demands
or attachments as his creditors, employees
or suppliers may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.
W. H. TOWNE,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett county.
True Copy—Test— W. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1879.
SACRIFICED AFFECTION.
GENERAL STATEMENT.
About twenty centuries before Christ, or not far from the days of Abraham, an oriental prince named Job lived in a district called Uz, which is supposed by many to have been on the northern edge of the great Arabian desert, near Damascus. He was a man of perfect integrity, but sorely tried by afflictions and disease. His friends, three chief ones of the vicinity, came to lament his troubles, and are led into a discussion of their cause, which they assume must be some great sin on the sufferer's part. Job replies, attesting his innocence, and declaring the mystery of God's dealings. At last Elihu, a younger man, enters the discussion, asserting that trial comes from God, but only to be removed when his object has been attained.
The action of his soul is described. A great multitude of enlightened men from heaven—visions, afflictions and a divine messenger, who interprets the discipline of the sufferer. In this book, the most ancient and most wonderful in all literature, is unfolding, though some suppose it to have proceeded from the pen of Moses.
Job 23, 11-29.
Memory Verse, 23-25.
14 For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet
men perceive him not.
15 In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep hath fallen upon men, in slumberings
upon the bed.
16 Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction.
17 That he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide his counsel from him: and he keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword.
18 He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with sorrow.
19 So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul dainty meat.
20 His flesh is consumed away, that it con-
sumeth him; and his bones are not seen.
21 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave,
and his life to the destroyers.
22 Therefore he remembereth that which was in his former day, and he saith, I will not intercede, nor among a thousand, to show me
my iniquities:
23 For I am afraid to come to him, and will not deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found that I have sinned.
24 The flesh shall be freer than a bird's,
he shall return to the days of his youth.
25 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favorable unto him; and he shall see his face with joy; for he will render unto man his righteousness.
26 He looked upon men, and if any say, I have sinned, and he will not acquiesce, and he will not be grieved.
27 He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light.
28 All these things worketh God with him,
that he may see his face without guile.
29 To bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

ROBE READINGS.

17. Sacrificed affection, Job 23, 11-23.
18. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
19. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
20. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
21. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
22. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
23. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
24. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
25. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
26. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
27. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
28. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.
29. Affliction beneficial to the Israelites.

GOLDEN TEXT.

My soul, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor when thou art rebuked of him,
say, I have sinned.
LESSON HYMN, L. M.
Lord, humbled, humbled,
Thy grace hath made me feel thy rod,
And turned my soul to thee, my God.
I love thy chastenings, O my God,
They fix my hopes on thy abode;
Where, in thy presence, fully blest,
Thy stricken servant foreverrest.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

Who was Job? Where and when did he live? State briefly the story of his life. Who were his friends? What was their purpose?
1. God's chastening of Job, 1:1-22:1.
What was God's will to Job? Why does he speak twice? Isa. 8, 16. How is his interest in Job? What is his object in all this? Job 11, 14. By what means does God speak to Job?
What were his friends? What proofs does
Job give of his faithful service of God?
Job 42.
2. GOD'S CHASTENING OF JOB, 1:1-22:1.
12, 16. If men still refuse the invitation, what then? Is this kind? Why? Isa. 10, 17.
Describe the sorrows of the chastening.
Where is God when he chastens? Isa. 63, 9.
What comes of such suffering? Isa. 10, 47.
Does sorrow ever come to the good? Isa. 62, 4.
Give two reasons for the afflictions of the good. To what extent only does God hear afflictions come? Luke 22, 31, 32.
3. GOD'S CHASTENING OF JOB, 23:1-42:1.
13. What will God do for his afflicted children? What is his purpose? 2 Pet. 1:6, 7.
What is our duty when the tempter prosues himself? John 1, 11, 12. Who is our ransom? What are the duties in verses 20
2-4? What are the blessings in verses 25, 26?
28? Are you doing the duties and receiving the blessings?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—1. The helpless weakness of man? 2. That God is pitiful and kind? 3. That there is a God for every man? 4. That, coming by him, we will have help?
1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tribulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judgment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Remember that God sees the troubles of even a little child. 2. Go to him in every tri-
bulation, and he will help. 3. Wait patiently, and he will explain what you cannot
understand.
All things work together for good to them
that love God, Rom. 8, 28.
DUTIES AND SUGGESTIONS: God's tender judg-
ment. Rev. 7, 17.

"Turn Back the Hands!"

The party in power in the Legislative Department of the Government has served its notice upon the country. It may as well be accepted at once. In the Senate Mr. Saulsbury, for his party, arrogantly assumes the responsibilities of power, and with a resonant crack of the whip that brings back the old days bids the republicans in that body be not only patient, but silent and submissive,
while he and his political associates
work their own sweet will. Confederate generals direct the counsels of the organization that controls the Senate, apportion among themselves
the committees and among their constituents the patronage, dictate the course of legislation, and shape the policy of the party. At the other end of the Capitol Mr. Stephens, late Vice President of the Confederacy,
Mr. Reagan, late Postmaster General of the Confederacy, Mr. Chalmers, late a Brigadier General in the Confederate army, with others more or less prominently connected with that disastrous political venture, have given out that the people having called the Democratic party back to power to relieve the country from the evil consequences of eighteen years of Radical misrule, it is the duty of the present Congress to enter immediately upon the task. In both Senate and House there is uncommon anxiety on the part of the gentlemen
newly invested with power, to enter at once upon its exercise. Instead of shrinking from its responsibilities they are eager to assume them. And we must give them credit at least for apparent sincerity. They certainly do act as though they fully believed in themselves, and believed that they had actually been sent for in a crisis.
In their expressions, their tone, their manner, their whole behavior, they indicate as plainly as possible their belief that their reappointment in Congress is the result, not of their own,
but of the country's confession of error and repentance. They have come back, they say, in so many words, to correct the mistakes and sweep away the legislation of the last eighteen years. They have confidence in themselves to say the last.

And who, pray, are the gentlemen

stepping so confidently to the front,
and bidding every body else stand back while they take the Government in hand? Their inspiring condemnation of existing laws and their startling proposals of radical changes invite us to a scrutiny of their record, and an inquiry as to their fitness for the revolutionary proceedings they have in contemplation. What is the record of these men who assume responsibility with such jaunty self-confidence? It is not far to seek. In 1857 they were intrusted with almost unquestioned power in all the departments of the Government and nearly all the states.
There was scarcely an opposition.
What was their statesmanship? In three years they had set on foot an agitation which cost them their majority in the House and created sectional division in parties; and this continued without their gaining anything they set out for, until the Government passed completely out of their hands in 1860, and then they entered upon a conspiracy to break up and destroy it. What fitness does the record of those eight years show?
They tried for four years a government of their own. Does that record show such a large capacity for statesmanship that we should send out for them to come back and take the old Union in charge? Here are financial questions to be solved by legislation.
What certificate of fitness for this work do they bring? Only this: that they left the Government in 1861 in such straitened circumstances and impaired credit that its hands were at a discount, and it could scarcely borrow money in the markets of the world; and that in their own experiment of a confederacy they succeeded only in making a currency which was so worthless as to be a source of

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

REFRAINED.

My heart records the friend, yet through no
Spoken in side-by-side companionship,
Rejoiced or commiserated from thy lip
Never my heart with pleasant trouble red
Because it was thy special gift to me:
A larger blessing have I won from thee.

I heard thee speak out of divine air
Thou eddies could breathe in, and I rose
And saw the gates of heavenly truth unclose,
Glad with the multitude the feast to share,
Savored for all souls within. No narrow claim
Could wish of mine in that pure vision frame.

Thou didst befriend me, humbled at the sight
Of that great love which penetrates the need
Of every feeblest creature; which, indeed,
The link into the brotherhood of light
Bequeathed and neglected souls to trace,
Their Godlike lineage in Christ's dear face.

In that communion of selfishness
Which is content its own delight to lose,
No through some weaker being to transduce
The breath of life from thee, that high blessing
Which faith answers as a lost, complete,
My soul arose, and went thy soul to meet.

How wide thou seemed earth's small loneliness!
How glad the first of "mine" and "thine!"
The delicate draught of education's wine,
The subtle poison of sweet flattery,
Take me hence thou, friend, if thou wouldst
How hearts in blessing hearts may overflow.

The world has not learned friendship's meaning
Yet,
Little indeed is all that thou to give,
If it is but the love, but love, but love,
Largeness of life beyond thee, and my debt
Externally answered, and my soul remain.
And we, though strangers, have not met in vain.

Show me that aspiration need not die,
Nor faith put out its eyes to live by sight;
Lead me into the freedom of the light,
And I could let thee pass on cheerfully
To some whose need was greater, though thy Face
Had been the sunshine of my dwelling place.

A friend, it is another name for God,
Whose love is, "yes, all love, is all in all."
Proclaim it not, lest lowest shame befall!
And yet, my friend, I would not be a friend
To one whose need was greater, though thy
Face
Had been the sunshine of my dwelling place.

Thou art no stranger, thou whose soul I heard
Speak to my soul across earth's vexing din.
With thee I'm the holiest entered in,
Through thee I understand the world's word,
Which the whole universe with the human Mind
In endless union—"I have called you Friends."
—Lucy Loomis, in Sunday Afternoon for March.

ONLY A FARMER.

QUITE AN INTERESTED AND ANXIOUS group had gathered in Mrs. Wilson's dressing-room one morning in June. It consisted of Mrs. Wilson and her three unmarried daughters, and the subject under such animated and anxious discussion was how and where they should open their usual summer campaign. It had always been an interesting subject, and to the material element, attended with considerable anxiety, but never such a matter of perplexity, almost amounting to despair, as now.

The contents of the various wardrobes had been laid out and examined; silks and muslins, cambrics and lawns, sufficient, it would seem, for a dozen, and yet the two elder Misses Wilson declared, with tears in their eyes, that they had nothing, absolutely nothing to wear.

It is noteworthy with what surprising unanimity the two sisters agreed upon this point, who so seldom agreed on any other.

Mrs. Wilson looked with dismay upon the fiery spread out before her, after listening to the above assertion.

"I'm sure, my dears," she ventured to say, "some of them are hardly worn, and a little alteration—"

"Now, mamma," interrupted Belle, "why will you talk so ridiculously, when you know that there is not a thing here but what is wonderfully out of style? And as to altering anything, it always gives me pain to sew, and I'm not going to Saratoga, all fagged out, if I never get!"

Of course, this settled that. It is a little curious when a small amount of work will "fag" a girl "all out" who can dance until the break of day without the slightest inconvenience.

"There's one thing certain," said Lucy, the second daughter, "we have got to have at least one new dress."

"I don't know where it's coming from then," responded Mrs. Wilson, sinking down wearily into a chair. "It was as much as I could do to get you to consent to your going at all. It was two o'clock last night before he gave in, and then, I verily believe, it was from pure weariness and inability to keep awake any longer."

Mrs. Wilson said with the air of a woman determined to perform her duty at all hazards, and anxious to obtain credit for the same. But it seemed to have quite the contrary effect upon Josie, the youngest daughter, who burst before spoken, but who now burst forth:

"I declare, if it isn't a sin and a shame to worry pa so!"

Mrs. Wilson cast a reproachful look upon the speaker.

"I will say, Josie, that you are the most ungrateful child I ever saw! I'd like to know how much money I'd get out of your pa if I didn't worry it out. But that's all the thanks I get for lying awake nights, scheming and planning how to give you a chance to get settled in life."

"I'd thank you for not doing so. I'm not going to Saratoga or Long Branch. In the first place, I know that pa can't afford it. And then I promised Mary Crofton that I would visit her this summer."

Though Mrs. Wilson affected to be displeased at this announcement, she was secretly relieved. Bill and Lucy were very well suited with this arrangement, too. Josie was very handy at turning up and making over, and if she was determined to bury herself in a country farmhouse, she would not need to do so much of that for herself, and could, therefore, devote more time to them. And so busy did they keep her during the two weeks that followed, that Josie was glad enough to see the big trunks all packed and waiting in the hall.

To save expenses, Mrs. Wilson had arranged to dismiss the servants and shut up the house, with the exception of one room for her husband, who was to make his meals at his sister's.

"Of course she won't charge him anything, and that will be one item saved," remarked Mrs. Wilson, as she regarded complacently the effect of Belle's new dress, which her management had secured.

"As though pa would board there for nothing," was Josie's indignant rejoinder, "when Uncle William has such a hard time to get along."

"Well, if your pa chooses to pay when he needs it, and it isn't expected of him, it's his own loss. For my part, I don't see what's the use of having relations if you don't make use of them."

Mrs. Wilson certainly believed in making her relatives useful, carrying out the belief to its fullest extent, whenever it was practicable, as some of them knew to their cost. Even her love for daughters partook of the selfishness of her intensely selfish nature, her chief anxiety being to get them "off" her hands, in a manner that would be advantageous and reflect as much credit to herself as possible.

But they were gone at last; and Josie was at liberty to make her own simple preparations, which did not take her long to complete. The father and daughter had a nice quiet day together. Josie was going on the morrow, and, as sitting opposite him, pouring out his tea, she saw the hard lines upon his careworn face, and how happy he was in her society, her heart smote her for leaving him.

"I've half a mind not to go, pa; it seems too bad to leave you here all by yourself."

But Mr. Wilson would not hear of it. "I insist on your going; you have been working hard, and need a change. My life would be much the same any way."

"You may expect me in three weeks, pa," smiled Josie from the car window the next morning. "You will want your little housekeeper by that time, I know."

And Mr. Wilson went back to the corroding anxieties which had made him an old man before his time, thanking God for this bit of sunshine, and which left its glow in his heart long after it had vanished.

There were only a few passengers for Baybridge, a small country town in the interior of the State, though there were the usual loungers upon the platform of the station, as Josie stepped out. But they soon scattered, leaving her to stare blankly around for the conveyance that she supposed would be waiting for her.

She walked clear around the station, looking in every direction, in a vehicle was in sight, except a rough box wagon with a board across it, drawn by a pair of spirited black horses, who stamped their feet and tossed their heads as if impatient to be off. A man stood beside the rattle creature, who yet seemed to be under perfect control.

"There, Jenny! Be easy, Kate!" he said, patting the satin-smooth skin and speaking very much as a mother would to a child.

The baggage-master was standing near a pile of trunks and parcels.

"Is this your trunk, Miss?" he said, as Josie approached him.

"Yes, I was expecting friends to meet me, but they are not here. There must be some mistake."

"I know most of the people around here. What might their names be?"

"Crofton."

"Why, bless me, you've got off at the wrong station. They live at North Baybridge, five miles beyond."

"When does the next train leave?"

"To-morrow morning."

Josie looked the dismay that she certainly felt at this announcement.

"It's too bad, I declare," said the good-natured official, pitying Josie's evident distress. Then, as his eye fell upon the owner of the team, who was looking toward them, he added: "If this isn't a streak of luck! Here's John Manning, their neighbor. He can take you along just as well as not. John, here's a young woman that's got off at the wrong station. She wants to go to Crofton's. I tell her she can ride with you."

The young man removed his straw hat, revealing a forehead broad and full, and whose whiteness contrasted strongly with the healthful brown of the cheeks below.

"I shall be very happy, if the young lady has no objection to riding with a farmer, and in a farmer's wagon."

The admiration so clearly visible in the honest blue eyes that met her own, made Josie's cheeks redder.

"If it will not be too much trouble," she said, "I will listen to those who know nothing, the speaker could ask would be any trouble at all. Springing to work, he soon improvised quite a comfortable seat for Josie, by passing a rope from one stake to another, just back of the board in front, throwing a thick, soft blanket over the whole.

Glad to be released, Jenny and Kate bore them swiftly along the winding country road, dotted here and there by farmhouses, nestled down among the trees and shrubbery. As soon as Josie got a little used to it, she enjoyed her elevated and novel position, which gave her a fine view of the beautiful country through which they were passing.

Her companion suited at her enthusiastic exclamations and comments, seeming to take pleasure in the pleasure so frankly and innocently expressed.

"Do you think you would like to live in the country?" he said, stealing an admiring glance at her glad young face.

"Above all things," responded Josie, "that is, if papa could be here, too. I wish he would be, just for a little while, he would enjoy it so. Papa was brought up on a farm, and it would seem like old times to him. I heard him say once that he wished he had never left it."

"I had a strong desire, when a boy, to go to the city, where I could have a chance to get rich, and not have to work so hard. But I am an only son—an only child since last winter." Here the speaker's eyes saddened. "I promised father, just before he died, that I would not leave the farm, and I don't know that I care to do so now."

"I wouldn't if I were in your place," said Josie, with a wise shake of her pretty head. "It's dreadful hard times in the city. Everybody is grumbling about them, which makes it dismal enough. And as to working hard, I'd like to know who works harder than pa does. It's ever so much nicer here."

The honest young fellow, whose heart was in his eyes, inwardly hoped that she would always think so.

"There is where I live," he said, aloud, pointing to a house with a piazza running around two sides, and which looked very pleasant amid the green verdure that surrounded it.

Young Manning drew the reins at the gate, inside of which a pleasant-faced, silver-haired woman was standing.

"Here's the mail, mother," he said, tossing down to her some papers and pamphlets. "Been lonely any? I'm going to take this young lady to Mr. Crofton's. My mother, Miss Wilson."

The young man took leave of Josie with a feeling at his heart such as he had never experienced before.

"How pretty she is!" he thought; "and as good as she is pretty, I am sure."

"What an honest and pleasant fellow! I wonder if I shall ever see him again!" This was what she thought.

Josie did see him again, and quite often. The Manning's and Crofton's were not only neighbors, but very intimate. Mary Crofton had been strangely attached to Mr. Manning's only daughter, who died the preceding winter. She spent a good deal of time at her house, and Josie frequently went with her. Mary was never weary of praising John: "he was such a good son, and so intelligent, steady and industrious."

John, too, got over his shyness with the city girls, and was very kind to the country ways that it seemed as if she had always lived there. He used to walk home with her, Mary commented, lingering by the gate to talk with his mother, both well-pleased at the turn of events.

But they soon scattered, leaving her to stare blankly around for the conveyance that she supposed would be waiting for her.

She walked clear around the station, looking in every direction, in a vehicle was in sight, except a rough box wagon with a board across it, drawn by a pair of spirited black horses, who stamped their feet and tossed their heads as if impatient to be off. A man stood beside the rattle creature, who yet seemed to be under perfect control.

"There, Jenny! Be easy, Kate!" he said, patting the satin-smooth skin and speaking very much as a mother would to a child.

The baggage-master was standing near a pile of trunks and parcels.

"Is this your trunk, Miss?" he said, as Josie approached him.

"Yes, I was expecting friends to meet me, but they are not here. There must be some mistake."

"I know most of the people around here. What might their names be?"

"Crofton."

"Why, bless me, you've got off at the wrong station. They live at North Baybridge, five miles beyond."

"When does the next train leave?"

"To-morrow morning."

Josie looked the dismay that she certainly felt at this announcement.

"It's too bad, I declare," said the good-natured official, pitying Josie's evident distress. Then, as his eye fell upon the owner of the team, who was looking toward them, he added: "If this isn't a streak of luck! Here's John Manning, their neighbor. He can take you along just as well as not. John, here's a young woman that's got off at the wrong station. She wants to go to Crofton's. I tell her she can ride with you."

The young man removed his straw hat, revealing a forehead broad and full, and whose whiteness contrasted strongly with the healthful brown of the cheeks below.

"I shall be very happy, if the young lady has no objection to riding with a farmer, and in a farmer's wagon."

The admiration so clearly visible in the honest blue eyes that met her own, made Josie's cheeks redder.

"If it will not be too much trouble," she said, "I will listen to those who know nothing, the speaker could ask would be any trouble at all. Springing to work, he soon improvised quite a comfortable seat for Josie, by passing a rope from one stake to another, just back of the board in front, throwing a thick, soft blanket over the whole.

Glad to be released, Jenny and Kate bore them swiftly along the winding country road, dotted here and there by farmhouses, nestled down among the trees and shrubbery. As soon as Josie got a little used to it, she enjoyed her elevated and novel position, which gave her a fine view of the beautiful country through which they were passing.

Her companion suited at her enthusiastic exclamations and comments, seeming to take pleasure in the pleasure so frankly and innocently expressed.

"Do you think you would like to live in the country?" he said, stealing an admiring glance at her glad young face.

"Above all things," responded Josie, "that is, if papa could be here, too. I wish he would be, just for a little while, he would enjoy it so. Papa was brought up on a farm, and it would seem like old times to him. I heard him say once that he wished he had never left it."

"I had a strong desire, when a boy, to go to the city, where I could have a chance to get rich, and not have to work so hard. But I am an only son—an only child since last winter." Here the speaker's eyes saddened. "I promised father, just before he died, that I would not leave the farm, and I don't know that I care to do so now."

"I wouldn't if I were in your place," said Josie, with a wise shake of her pretty head. "It's dreadful hard times in the city. Everybody is grumbling about them, which makes it dismal enough. And as to working hard, I'd like to know who works harder than pa does. It's ever so much nicer here."

The honest young fellow, whose heart was in his eyes, inwardly hoped that she would always think so.

"There is where I live," he said, aloud, pointing to a house with a piazza running around two sides, and which looked very pleasant amid the green verdure that surrounded it.

Young Manning drew the reins at the gate, inside of which a pleasant-faced, silver-haired woman was standing.

"Here's the mail, mother," he said, tossing down to her some papers and pamphlets. "Been lonely any? I'm going to take this young lady to Mr. Crofton's. My mother, Miss Wilson."

The young man took leave of Josie with a feeling at his heart such as he had never experienced before.

"How pretty she is!" he thought; "and as good as she is pretty, I am sure."

"What an honest and pleasant fellow! I wonder if I shall ever see him again!" This was what she thought.

Josie did see him again, and quite often. The Manning's and Crofton's were not only neighbors, but very intimate. Mary Crofton had been strangely attached to Mr. Manning's only daughter, who died the preceding winter. She spent a good deal of time at her house, and Josie frequently went with her. Mary was never weary of praising John: "he was such a good son, and so intelligent, steady and industrious."

John, too, got over his shyness with the city girls, and was very kind to the country ways that it seemed as if she had always lived there. He used to walk home with her, Mary commented, lingering by the gate to talk with his mother, both well-pleased at the turn of events.

But they soon scattered, leaving her to stare blankly around for the conveyance that she supposed would be waiting for her.

A New Explosive.

The staff of the Austrian Artillery have been for some time engaged in making experiments at the Arsenal of Zanky on a material which is said to possess far greater explosive power than any other substance hitherto discovered. During a series of investigations relative to dynamite and compressed gun-cotton, M. Nobel found that the latter could be prepared in such a way that it could be completely dissolved in nitro-glycerine. The product is a gelatinous and gummy substance which, at the highest pressures, does not part with any of the nitro-glycerine. That explosive gelatinous substance, cannot be fired by any shock, but only goes off with difficulty and imperfectly when ignited. Further experiments showed, however, that with it a new compound could be formed admirably adapted to all military purposes. This is prepared by simply adding a little camphor to the gelatin.

The proportions are four per cent. of the former to ninety-six per cent. of the latter, which consist of ninety per cent. of nitro-glycerine and ten per cent. of fulmi-cotton. The gelatinous mass is elastic, transparent, of a pale yellow color, and can be cut with a knife. When set on fire in the open air it burns like dynamite or dry compressed gun-cotton. It only takes fire at a very high temperature, and the action of the camphor is very evident in that respect, for the ordinary gelatin by itself explodes at 200 degrees Centigrade (392 degrees Fahrenheit), while the heat required to produce that effect after the addition of the camphor comes to have been reduced by any of the apparatus usually applied to the test.

When solidified by cold it forms a mass resembling sugar candy, and is very sensitive to mechanical action, but as soon as it is thawed it resumes all its original properties. When exploded, however, it produces less smoke than dynamite or gun-cotton, with a clearer and more sonorous report, and has far greater force than either. The principal objection to its adoption was the difficulty of igniting it, but that has been overcome. When cotton flint is used, the action is instantaneous, and a white pulverulent substance is obtained, which has received the name of hydro-cellulose, is easily soluble in nitric acid, when it becomes nitrohydro-cellulose. This compound, mixed in the proportion of forty per cent. with sixty per cent. of nitro-glycerine, forms the most powerful means of ignition ever hitherto discovered. By properly constructed firing-cartridges of that substance can be made, which are as easy to use as ordinary powder, with less danger and far greater expansive force.—Gulligan's Messenger.

A Touching Incident of an Edinburgh Street Arab.

Dean Stanley, in the course of a recent sermon to children in Westminster Abbey, told a touching story of an Edinburgh street Arab. Two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one evening last, when a little boy with a thin face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came, and said: "Please, sir, buy some matches." "No, don't want any," the gentleman said. "But they are only a penny a box, the poor little fellow pleaded." "Yes, but you see we don't want a box," the gentleman said again. "Then I will give you two boxes for a penny," the boy said at last, and they were transferred to him. The gentleman who tells the story says: "I bought a box; but then I found I had no change, so I said, 'I will buy a box to-morrow.' 'O, do buy them to-night, please,' the boy pleaded again. 'I will not and go to the change for a verger, hungry.' So I gave him the shilling, and he started away. I waited for him, but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; still there was something in the boy's face. I trusted, and I did not like to think bad of him. Late in the evening I was told a boy wanted to see me. When he was brought I found it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling; but if possible, still more ragged and poorer and thin. He stood a moment, diving into his rags as if he was seeking something, and said: 'Are you the gentleman that bought the matches for Sandie?' 'Yes.' 'Well, then, here's fourpence of your shilling. Sandie cannot come; he's very ill; a cart ran over him and knocked him down, and he lost his bonnet and his matches and his sevepipe, and both his legs are broken, and the doctor says, 'If you can't get him home, he'll die.' And then putting the fourpence on the table, the poor child broke down into great sobs." The two little things lived alone, their father and mother being dead. Poor Sandie was lying on a bundle of shavings. He said: "I got the change, sir, and was coming back; and the horse knocked me down, and both my legs were broken, and oh, Reuby! little Reuby! I am sure I am dying, and who will take care of me when I am gone? What will you do, Reuby?" The kind-hearted gentleman took the lad's hand and said he would always take care of Reuby. Poor Sandie had just enough strength to look up at him to thank his protector, and then the light went out of his blue eyes forever.

Latent Forces.

A Kansas mule, of the brindle demonstration, was standing in a pasture field, backed up uncomfortably close to a mild-eyed Texas steer. The mule was not feeling in a very good humor. He had lost his railroad ticket, or had a note to lift or somebody had kicked his dog or something. Anyhow he was cross, and feeling just ready to do something mean. The first chance he got, he did it. He switched the Texas's tail gave him the longest for provocation, and before the mule got his heels back to the ground, the Texas thought somebody had shot him with a double-barreled cannon. Then the steer slowly turned his head and opened wide his cross, pensive eyes, and without swearing or catching his breath or saying a word, he just lifted one of his hind legs about eight feet from the ground and tapped the astonished mule with his cloven hoof, right where he lived. And the mule curled up in a knot for a second and just gasped: "O, bleeding heart!" And then he leaned up against a tree to catch his breath, and sat down on the ground and opened his mouth to get air, and finally he laid down and held his legs up in the air and said, in a husky whisper, that if he could only die and be over with it, he would be glad. But he got over it a little, after a while, and as he was limping sadly toward the fence, trying to think just how it happened, and wondering just where he was hit, he met his mother, who noticed his rueful countenance and his painful locomotion.

"Well," she said, "and what's the matter with you?"

"Nothing," the mule said faintly. "oh, nothing. I have just kicked a book agent."

"Heaven save us," said his mother, with decisive accent. "I thought you had more sense!" —Black-Eye.

The Moth in Furs and Clothing.

THE following from an eminent English authority should be read as if our season were earlier. We should begin in April, although in England it is believed that the coming of the warm days of May and the early part of June should be the signal for a determined and vigorous warfare against these destructive and subtle enemies of everything that is valuable in furs and clothing. They appear to have been like the terror of the housewife and the merchant from the earliest times, and the frequent references made to them in Holy Writ prove them to have been as greatly dreaded at that period in Eastern countries as they are now in the West. The name clothes moth is applied, according to Professor Riley, to several different species of the family Tineidae, minute moths, which in the larval state is extremely destructive. Those with which ladies are most pestered are the clothes moth (Tinea vestimentalis), the carpet moth (T. tapetella), the fur moth (T. pellionella), and the hair moth (T. erinella). These moths have slender bodies and deeply fringed wings that expand six-tenths or eight-tenths of an inch, the colors ranging from buff to drab and dark gray. The eggs are laid in May and June (the moth dying immediately afterward), and they hatch out in fifteen days. The young worms proceed at once to work, gnawing the substances around them and covering themselves with hollow tubes, shaped from the fragments and lined with silk from their own bodies. These robes are carried by some of the moths on their backs, as they move along by others fastened to the substance they are feeding upon. They are quite a masterpiece of construction in themselves, for the larvae enlarge them, from time to time, by additions to the open ends, and by particles let into the sides, which are solidly opened for the purpose. They are always of the same color as the material from which they are made, and from them, we are assured on good authority, the larvae make journeys periodically, in order to extend their range further, returning to their old habitations, in which, when they become tired, they secure themselves with silken threads of their own production and remain quiet and asleep. All these moths are night insects, and seek dark places in which to deposit their eggs which are so tiny as to be invisible. From this cause it happens that woollen fabrics and furs, which were believed to be free from them when opened. The worms carry on the work of destruction through the summer, rest in torpor during the winter, and change into chrysalids early in the spring. They transform again in twenty days, and issue out as winged moths, to fly about in the evening until they have paired and are ready to lay eggs. Then follows—to use Professor Riley's words—"an increase of the pest, as the worms, edges of carpets, folds of curtains and hanging garments, and the foundations of a new edifice are swiftly laid."

Having carefully explained the manner and workings of this insect scourge, we will now proceed to gather from the latest authorities the newest and best preservatives and remedies; but, in the first place, we recommend that all the household "glory holes," cupboards, closets, trunks, chests-in fact, all receptacles for clothing and house linen, should be emptied and cleaned out in the spring, and all the contents exposed to light and air, before being replaced they should be shaken, brushed and beaten. In putting away the winter garments which cannot be washed great care should be taken to beat the dust out of them and remove all spots of grease, etc. A little drop of chloroform, rubbed on, will generally remove paint, tar or grease at once, and always remember to use a woollen cloth to rub the spots in woollen garments. Jacket and coat collars and soiled linings must not be forgotten in the cleaning process. Ammonia will be found the best thing, used in the proportion of a teaspoonful to a teaspoonful of boiling water. Let the water cool and apply the mixture with soft woollen cloth, rubbing the cloth always the way of the nap, until a good lather be formed; then rinse it off with clean lukewarm water and rub with a dry woollen cloth. The cleaned portions should be put into shape, and then dried in the air or by the fire.

In putting away clothes and out-of-door garments, fold them carefully and strew camphor among them; then spread out a clean sheet and place the pile of clothes in the center, folding the sheet over securely, and sewing them firmly up in the folds of the sheet, strewing the camphor over and about the bundle also. Furs should never be worn too late in the season, for, in addition to their fading in the sunlight of the spring, the moth makes its appearance early and deposits its eggs; and, after it is put away in supposed security, these insects will hold high festival on the skin until there is not enough to hold the hair. When putting away furs the best plan to adopt is to beat them with a small whip and hang them in the air, repeating the process until you are sure there is neither moth nor egg in them. Then wrap them in old linen (an old pillow case is admirable for the purpose) and put them in a paper bag, taking care that neither crevice nor cranny be left for the moth to enter. This is the plan adopted by furriers, or else they employ a handbox, which is securely pasted up round the cover. A recent authority recommends the following recipe for exterminating moths and their eggs from furs: "Add one teaspoonful of ammonia to about half a pint of pure alcohol. Apply with a small, stiff brush to the places where the moths or eggs are found, wetting the hair and skin completely. Let it dry, then brush the fur until no little flies, and then no further ravages need be feared from the moth in the same places. Cloth linings in Bath chairs and carriages may be secured from the attacks of moths by sponging them with a solution of corrosive sublimate of mercury in alcohol on both sides, and just strong enough not to leave a white mark on a black leather. Moths may be killed by the fumes of tobacco or sulphur, or by putting the articles containing them, if practicable, into an oven heated to 100 deg. Fahrenheit. The preservatives against moths are of various kinds. The strong smelling pungent substances such as pepper, camphor, carbolic acid, etc., merely act by keeping the moth at a distance, and not killing it. The most reliable cure, the scientific writer to whom we are indebted for so much information considers that the pungent substances which hinder the laying of the eggs are the best to use. These are naphthalene, a constituent of coal tar, as an excellent preservative, having no bad effects on the stuffs, nor skins, and volatilizing so slowly that the effects are lasting. Of course those who are in America, might easily be excited here, at less expense than a closet, i.e., a cedar chest, not too large to be portable, and yet large enough to contain the winter clothes, dresses and furs of the family, when put away in the spring. Where a chest of this kind is used, the heavier clothes must be laid under the lighter ones, and the folding and packing must be most carefully performed."

—N. Y. Herald.

Extraordinary Hindu Superstition.

The Royal Humane Society has awarded its silver medal for the following act of bravery: On the 15th of February last, early in the morning, Mr. Kristi Chunder Chuckerbutty, on his way to bathe at a ghat on the Ganges, found a number of people running from the river and calling out: "Bhatt, Bhatt!" (the goblin, the goblin). Looking for the cause of their terror, he saw what at first seemed nothing more than one of those objects common enough on the Ganges—a corpse floating down to the sea. The place was in the center of a whirlpool about twenty-five feet deep, where the apparent corpse sank. As it was sinking Mr. Chuckerbutty thought he saw it move one of its hands, trying to raise the hair which fell loosely over its eyes. He then jumped into the river and swam to what he found to be a drowning woman.

Seizing her left hand, he tried to make his way to the shore, some forty-five feet off, but she grasped his right hand with her left, became insensible, and both were in imminent danger of losing their lives. As Mr. Chuckerbutty's legs became entangled in his clothing, and both sank. He fortunately, however, disengaged himself, and after great exertion, succeeded in reaching the shore in safety with the woman. It had been suffering from illness and was considered incurable, becoming insensible and apparently dead, when her relatives, thinking all hopes were over, bound her hands and legs, (according to the practice among the Hindus) and carried her to the ghat. On the way she partially recovered, and, making known to her ignorant relatives that she was alive, prevented them from burning her; but as they were convinced that the body was animated with a ghost, they threw her into the river and died in horror.—London Times.

A Heroic Peddler.

MARY ANN WILSON is a peasant woman of New Orleans. She has a shabby little stand on St. Charles street, for which, with all its contents, says a New Orleans paper, "a five-dollar note would be an extravagant price."

"Grandma Wilson" has bent over the same little stand nearly forty years. Nobody would ever know to see her or would learn from her own lips that she was withered, poor old woman was the most famous yellow fever miasm in the South. Yet such is the fact. In 1837, forty-two years ago, she faithfully nursed fever-stricken patients in New Orleans. Again, in 1853, she was at her post, caring for the sick that whole sorrowful summer. In 1855 there was a yellow fever epidemic at Norfolk. Grandma Wilson went there and nursed. Another year she went to Savannah, and remained while the plague lasted, caring for the hapless sufferers. Again she went to Memphis, performing the same noble duties. Last summer, on the outbreak of the fever, she went to Grenada, and for forty-eight days and nights stayed there, and "those withered hands were often the only ones to soothe burning brow or close dying eyes. In her tender care were committed their children by their parents." From Grenada she went to Memphis, and stayed there, ministering to the sick and dying like an angel of mercy till the frightful plague ceased. Then, simple as she was, the heroic old woman came back without a word to her shabby little fruit stand in St. Charles street.

While the noble red man leads a wild life he never has anything worse than a cold in the head; put him into a house with a stove and he is prone to die of consumption.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

FOLK SONGS.

A little slumber! a little sleep!
For who would care for another to keep?
And who would care for another to keep?
And who would care for another to keep?

If life could hide as the skies above,
Come winter or bloom May,
To build him a nest for his own true love:
But love that nest may See me, my boy!

Why did I bring thee, sweet,
Into a world of woe and pain?
With sorrow and care for the little white feet—
To see thee grow up and Go as the coming in?

O'er the hills the moon moon,
And from the towers walk below
The song of Long Ago.

The red moon swims o'er strand and town,
A stormy tale begins to flow;
O'er the hills the moon moon,
The song of Long Ago.

—W. H. Young, in Lippincott's Magazine for April.

OLD ELSA.

I was alone in the world, or I thought I was, which amounted to pretty much the same in its mental and moral effects. My mother died when I was young that I had only a shadowy remembrance of a pale face and a long, last clasp to her loving heart. I had been my father's pet and darling, and now he was dead, too, and his will had consigned me, just like a babe of goods, to the care and guardianship of his brother, a doctor, whose home lay among the picturesque mountains of Cumberland.

I was "too impulsive," said the will, and would "throw myself and my money away before I knew the value of either, if I had no one to take care of me!" and so, when my poor father died in the South of France, where we had gone to winter, Uncle Ritson, who came barely in time to lay him in his foreign grave, carried me off at once to his house on the bleak hillside, gave me a kiss as he lifted me out of the stuffy vehicle which had conveyed me to the station, presented me to my aunt and cousins with a "Well, here's Adela!" and told me to consider myself "at home."

It was the beginning of January, intensely cold. The winter change from a warmer climate had sensibly affected me; I was chilled under all my furs, and perhaps more chilled by the restraining influence of my father's will, having pondered the "too impulsive" all through the journey.

Certainly, I was not "too impulsive" on my entrance to my new "home."

Aunt and cousins had met me on the threshold with warm welcomes, pressed to remove my wraps and to make me comfortable. There was a huge fire blazing on the hearth, a tea-table piled with north country luxuries, and all that should have made me feel at home; but something of a morbid melancholy in my own natural fashion, I dropped into a seat, after the first glance around, and covering my face with my hands, burst into tears.

I have small, thin, quick ears. I overheard Aunt Ritson whisper to Bella and Winnie, as she drew them back:

"Hush! It's but natural, poor child! Leave your cousin alone, hushes; she will come to her senses all the sooner."

And I did come to myself, but whether my tears had fallen frostily on their hot hearth, or my travelers had brought a chill in with us, or my own manner did not invite effusion, a certain air of restraint seemed to grow upon us; and when I was shown to the room set apart for me, and left to myself, I flung myself upon my bed and sobbed in passionate grief for my dead father, declaring that I was alone in the world, utterly alone.

And this feeling grew upon me. Looking back, I am conscious that I had not responded with sufficient warmth and gratitude to the relatives who had made room in their household for me, and I had not seen since she was a baby, and had met with open arms and hearts.

They had heard that I was gushing and exultant, a creature of impulse, and finding me reserved and languid, concluded that I, accustomed to elegance and luxury, could not brook the homeliness and retirement of my new life. I was rich, and they were not. They mistook my morbid melancholy for pride, and ceased to press their society or attention on me, lest I should attribute to them mercenary motives.

I see it all now, but then I was blind. I had another grief at my heart besides sorrow for my dead parent, and I fear whenever my thoughts flew to that lonely grave among the Pyrenees, I questioned the policy which had isolated me from the world—the world in which my hero lived and moved—and prisoned my free soul among those unresponsive walls of stone.

In this rhapsody I did not apostrophize alone the four walls of the soiled stone house that, set against the mountain side, with a background of pine, larch and mountain ash, looked so cold and gray, staring with its many lidless eyes from its rocky perch above the straggling lake village, on the steep, unguarded roadway in front, and the narrow strips of garden ground stretching like green arms on either side.

No, I held converse with the mount-ain peaks. They were to me the barriers between love and life and happiness, but it was only on their solitary heights I felt free to give the feeling utterance. The thrifty household ways of my aunt and cousins, which kept them very busy, were strange to me. My dainty fingers had no acquaintance with rolling-pin or paste-board. It was not I who kept so bright the mirror in which I saw my own beauty, eye, and my own unhappiness reflected. I was supposed to be mourning, and, with mistaken delicacy, was left to do—nothing.

Had Uncle Ritson known it, or how I spent my time, he would have shaken me up like a bottle of physic, and I should have been the better for it. But whether on foot, or horseback, or in his ancient gig, he was off in the morning, and frequently was absent all the day. His patients were scattered and his rounds extended.

I, leaving no occupation for hands or energies, feeding myself something apart from the rest, was off and away up the breezy hillsides to the lonely margin of the lake, or into the most secluded glens, my only companion my faithful dog, and there, where there was only the wind to answer me, I poured forth all the pent-up feelings of my heart; and oft my gusts of passion found utterance in song. At times I took a pencil and sketch-book with me in these wanderings; but there was ever one figure in the foreground of the most picturesque scene, and often enough the figure was there alone, the adjuncts all forgotten.

At first Bella or Winnie had borne me company, but I think they saw my longing to be alone; and I had my way, not without many cautions from my aunt.

What were perils to me, chafing against the restraint of my father's will, crying from the depths of my inmost heart for the banished love, who would never find me in these solitudes, and longing for wings to traverse land and sea, until I found my home on his faithful bosom?

Lost in abstractions, all danger was forgotten, and I had paid the penalty for a guardian angel little dreamed of.

My first peril was from the mountain mist, which came down and around me with bewildering suddenness, blotting out the landscape far and near.

Still, I thought I knew my way, and was stepping onward, though with caution, when my dress was clutched from behind, as I fancied by some bush. Turning to disentangle it, I was confronted with what seemed an awful apparition looming through the misty veil, and with a suppressed cry I stood still in affright.

I saw a woman's form, bent with age, a face intersected with lines and wrinkles like a map, from which nose and chin stood out like mountain peaks, and the sunken eyes gleamed like the fiery depths of two volcanic craters.

"Stop, my laddy!" she cried, "the gates of death are open before ye! Tak' my hand and let me lead you, and thank God, my bairn, that Elspa was near you in your peril."

I had heard of Elspa as a woman who dealt in herbs and simples, but I had heard of her as one with an unenviable reputation. She was spoken of as "the wise woman," but the words were uttered as if they meant "witch."

I confess I was half afraid to accept her guidance, but she stamped her foot, and by gesture strong as words gave me to understand that I had been walking toward a precipice, and three steps farther would have borne me to destruction.

What landaark she had I know not, but I think she seemed to feel her way with her feet. At all events, after about an hour's cautious stepping, we stood below the mist, the blue lake gleaming like a mirror still further down, and my uncle's house within sight. Conscious of the service she had rendered, I did not confine my thanks to words, but was liberal with my coin.

As she took "the siller," she scanned my face earnestly, then seized my hand and peered into it closely, while a sort of creepy sensation (excusable in a girl of nineteen) stole over me.

"Once, twice, thrice! Three perils, my bonnie laddy. One is past. The others lie before. Perils of your ain seeking. The gates of death stand in the path of your true love. Open them not with rash or heedless hands before the year be out, or love may mourn for love that couldna bide. The air of mountain and of lake is a na'ude for ye, bairn. Keep na'ir at haune and dinna be misdoon't. There's a' God's blessing a'! Remember! One danger is overpast. Tak' heed ye seek not the others; and dinna scold at old Elspa's warning words."

The old woman trotted off with her basket on her arm, a rusty black bonnet on her head, garments neat but below, and only a small check woolen handkerchief to protect her from the chilly mountain mists.

I had scarcely decided whether to laugh at her mainderings or to yield to the superstitious "feels" she had awakened, when I opened the horse-door to find all within in a state of excitement.

It was long past our dinner hour and my absence had alarmed them. Of course, I explained the cause of my delay, and it was only by Aunt Ritson's agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotch woman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant," and he laughed. "Any one can read character with a physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think my uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing—nor did I.

The excitement had not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and good-natured Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a change not to be missed, if possible."

And I saw her glance furtively in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in my presence. It was not until I had retired to my own pretty room for the night, that I overheard the sisters discussing the problem, mindful of the thin partition between the head of my bed and theirs.

I found the money—or its scarcity—stood in the way, and heard the chances of the matrimonial market calculated

with a balance greatly in favor of London.

Money! How I hated the word! I would have given every shilling I possessed to be assured that Edgar Neville was true to me, and would seek me out when the period of probation prescribed by my father was gone by. But where could he seek for me? Correspondence had been forbidden. He knew not my address and my father had withheld Edgar's from me. Ah, how he repented before he died! How glad he would have been to have left me in those strong, protective arms! I soon bridged the monetary difficulty over in Spila's way, in my uncle's opposition, and I think I showed something of my old self in the spirit with which I entered into the needful preparations for Miss Ritson's launch on the lake.

At first Bella or Winnie had borne me company, but I think they saw my longing to be alone; and I had my way, not without many cautions from my aunt.

What were perils to me, chafing against the restraint of my father's will, crying from the depths of my inmost heart for the banished love, who would never find me in these solitudes, and longing for wings to traverse land and sea, until I found my home on his faithful bosom?

Lost in abstractions, all danger was forgotten, and I had paid the penalty for a guardian angel little dreamed of.

My first peril was from the mountain mist, which came down and around me with bewildering suddenness, blotting out the landscape far and near.

Still, I thought I knew my way, and was stepping onward, though with caution, when my dress was clutched from behind, as I fancied by some bush. Turning to disentangle it, I was confronted with what seemed an awful apparition looming through the misty veil, and with a suppressed cry I stood still in affright.

I saw a woman's form, bent with age, a face intersected with lines and wrinkles like a map, from which nose and chin stood out like mountain peaks, and the sunken eyes gleamed like the fiery depths of two volcanic craters.

"Stop, my laddy!" she cried, "the gates of death are open before ye! Tak' my hand and let me lead you, and thank God, my bairn, that Elspa was near you in your peril."

I had heard of Elspa as a woman who dealt in herbs and simples, but I had heard of her as one with an unenviable reputation. She was spoken of as "the wise woman," but the words were uttered as if they meant "witch."

I confess I was half afraid to accept her guidance, but she stamped her foot, and by gesture strong as words gave me to understand that I had been walking toward a precipice, and three steps farther would have borne me to destruction.

What landaark she had I know not, but I think she seemed to feel her way with her feet. At all events, after about an hour's cautious stepping, we stood below the mist, the blue lake gleaming like a mirror still further down, and my uncle's house within sight. Conscious of the service she had rendered, I did not confine my thanks to words, but was liberal with my coin.

As she took "the siller," she scanned my face earnestly, then seized my hand and peered into it closely, while a sort of creepy sensation (excusable in a girl of nineteen) stole over me.

"Once, twice, thrice! Three perils, my bonnie laddy. One is past. The others lie before. Perils of your ain seeking. The gates of death stand in the path of your true love. Open them not with rash or heedless hands before the year be out, or love may mourn for love that couldna bide. The air of mountain and of lake is a na'ude for ye, bairn. Keep na'ir at haune and dinna be misdoon't. There's a' God's blessing a'! Remember! One danger is overpast. Tak' heed ye seek not the others; and dinna scold at old Elspa's warning words."

The old woman trotted off with her basket on her arm, a rusty black bonnet on her head, garments neat but below, and only a small check woolen handkerchief to protect her from the chilly mountain mists.

I had scarcely decided whether to laugh at her mainderings or to yield to the superstitious "feels" she had awakened, when I opened the horse-door to find all within in a state of excitement.

It was long past our dinner hour and my absence had alarmed them. Of course, I explained the cause of my delay, and it was only by Aunt Ritson's agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotch woman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant," and he laughed. "Any one can read character with a physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think my uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing—nor did I.

The excitement had not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and good-natured Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a change not to be missed, if possible."

And I saw her glance furtively in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in my presence. It was not until I had retired to my own pretty room for the night, that I overheard the sisters discussing the problem, mindful of the thin partition between the head of my bed and theirs.

I found the money—or its scarcity—stood in the way, and heard the chances of the matrimonial market calculated

with a balance greatly in favor of London.

Money! How I hated the word! I would have given every shilling I possessed to be assured that Edgar Neville was true to me, and would seek me out when the period of probation prescribed by my father was gone by. But where could he seek for me? Correspondence had been forbidden. He knew not my address and my father had withheld Edgar's from me. Ah, how he repented before he died! How glad he would have been to have left me in those strong, protective arms! I soon bridged the monetary difficulty over in Spila's way, in my uncle's opposition, and I think I showed something of my old self in the spirit with which I entered into the needful preparations for Miss Ritson's launch on the lake.

At first Bella or Winnie had borne me company, but I think they saw my longing to be alone; and I had my way, not without many cautions from my aunt.

What were perils to me, chafing against the restraint of my father's will, crying from the depths of my inmost heart for the banished love, who would never find me in these solitudes, and longing for wings to traverse land and sea, until I found my home on his faithful bosom?

Lost in abstractions, all danger was forgotten, and I had paid the penalty for a guardian angel little dreamed of.

My first peril was from the mountain mist, which came down and around me with bewildering suddenness, blotting out the landscape far and near.

Still, I thought I knew my way, and was stepping onward, though with caution, when my dress was clutched from behind, as I fancied by some bush. Turning to disentangle it, I was confronted with what seemed an awful apparition looming through the misty veil, and with a suppressed cry I stood still in affright.

I saw a woman's form, bent with age, a face intersected with lines and wrinkles like a map, from which nose and chin stood out like mountain peaks, and the sunken eyes gleamed like the fiery depths of two volcanic craters.

"Stop, my laddy!" she cried, "the gates of death are open before ye! Tak' my hand and let me lead you, and thank God, my bairn, that Elspa was near you in your peril."

I had heard of Elspa as a woman who dealt in herbs and simples, but I had heard of her as one with an unenviable reputation. She was spoken of as "the wise woman," but the words were uttered as if they meant "witch."

I confess I was half afraid to accept her guidance, but she stamped her foot, and by gesture strong as words gave me to understand that I had been walking toward a precipice, and three steps farther would have borne me to destruction.

What landaark she had I know not, but I think she seemed to feel her way with her feet. At all events, after about an hour's cautious stepping, we stood below the mist, the blue lake gleaming like a mirror still further down, and my uncle's house within sight. Conscious of the service she had rendered, I did not confine my thanks to words, but was liberal with my coin.

As she took "the siller," she scanned my face earnestly, then seized my hand and peered into it closely, while a sort of creepy sensation (excusable in a girl of nineteen) stole over me.

"Once, twice, thrice! Three perils, my bonnie laddy. One is past. The others lie before. Perils of your ain seeking. The gates of death stand in the path of your true love. Open them not with rash or heedless hands before the year be out, or love may mourn for love that couldna bide. The air of mountain and of lake is a na'ude for ye, bairn. Keep na'ir at haune and dinna be misdoon't. There's a' God's blessing a'! Remember! One danger is overpast. Tak' heed ye seek not the others; and dinna scold at old Elspa's warning words."

The old woman trotted off with her basket on her arm, a rusty black bonnet on her head, garments neat but below, and only a small check woolen handkerchief to protect her from the chilly mountain mists.

I had scarcely decided whether to laugh at her mainderings or to yield to the superstitious "feels" she had awakened, when I opened the horse-door to find all within in a state of excitement.

It was long past our dinner hour and my absence had alarmed them. Of course, I explained the cause of my delay, and it was only by Aunt Ritson's agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotch woman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant," and he laughed. "Any one can read character with a physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think my uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing—nor did I.

The excitement had not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and good-natured Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a change not to be missed, if possible."

And I saw her glance furtively in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in my presence. It was not until I had retired to my own pretty room for the night, that I overheard the sisters discussing the problem, mindful of the thin partition between the head of my bed and theirs.

I found the money—or its scarcity—stood in the way, and heard the chances of the matrimonial market calculated

with a balance greatly in favor of London.

Money! How I hated the word! I would have given every shilling I possessed to be assured that Edgar Neville was true to me, and would seek me out when the period of probation prescribed by my father was gone by. But where could he seek for me? Correspondence had been forbidden. He knew not my address and my father had withheld Edgar's from me. Ah, how he repented before he died! How glad he would have been to have left me in those strong, protective arms! I soon bridged the monetary difficulty over in Spila's way, in my uncle's opposition, and I think I showed something of my old self in the spirit with which I entered into the needful preparations for Miss Ritson's launch on the lake.

At first Bella or Winnie had borne me company, but I think they saw my longing to be alone; and I had my way, not without many cautions from my aunt.

What were perils to me, chafing against the restraint of my father's will, crying from the depths of my inmost heart for the banished love, who would never find me in these solitudes, and longing for wings to traverse land and sea, until I found my home on his faithful bosom?

Lost in abstractions, all danger was forgotten, and I had paid the penalty for a guardian angel little dreamed of.

My first peril was from the mountain mist, which came down and around me with bewildering suddenness, blotting out the landscape far and near.

Still, I thought I knew my way, and was stepping onward, though with caution, when my dress was clutched from behind, as I fancied by some bush. Turning to disentangle it, I was confronted with what seemed an awful apparition looming through the misty veil, and with a suppressed cry I stood still in affright.

I saw a woman's form, bent with age, a face intersected with lines and wrinkles like a map, from which nose and chin stood out like mountain peaks, and the sunken eyes gleamed like the fiery depths of two volcanic craters.

"Stop, my laddy!" she cried, "the gates of death are open before ye! Tak' my hand and let me lead you, and thank God, my bairn, that Elspa was near you in your peril."

I had heard of Elspa as a woman who dealt in herbs and simples, but I had heard of her as one with an unenviable reputation. She was spoken of as "the wise woman," but the words were uttered as if they meant "witch."

I confess I was half afraid to accept her guidance, but she stamped her foot, and by gesture strong as words gave me to understand that I had been walking toward a precipice, and three steps farther would have borne me to destruction.

What landaark she had I know not, but I think she seemed to feel her way with her feet. At all events, after about an hour's cautious stepping, we stood below the mist, the blue lake gleaming like a mirror still further down, and my uncle's house within sight. Conscious of the service she had rendered, I did not confine my thanks to words, but was liberal with my coin.

As she took "the siller," she scanned my face earnestly, then seized my hand and peered into it closely, while a sort of creepy sensation (excusable in a girl of nineteen) stole over me.

"Once, twice, thrice! Three perils, my bonnie laddy. One is past. The others lie before. Perils of your ain seeking. The gates of death stand in the path of your true love. Open them not with rash or heedless hands before the year be out, or love may mourn for love that couldna bide. The air of mountain and of lake is a na'ude for ye, bairn. Keep na'ir at haune and dinna be misdoon't. There's a' God's blessing a'! Remember! One danger is overpast. Tak' heed ye seek not the others; and dinna scold at old Elspa's warning words."

The old woman trotted off with her basket on her arm, a rusty black bonnet on her head, garments neat but below, and only a small check woolen handkerchief to protect her from the chilly mountain mists.

I had scarcely decided whether to laugh at her mainderings or to yield to the superstitious "feels" she had awakened, when I opened the horse-door to find all within in a state of excitement.

It was long past our dinner hour and my absence had alarmed them. Of course, I explained the cause of my delay, and it was only by Aunt Ritson's agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotch woman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant," and he laughed. "Any one can read character with a physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think my uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing—nor did I.

The excitement had not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and good-natured Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a change not to be missed, if possible."

And I saw her glance furtively in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in my presence. It was not until I had retired to my own pretty room for the night, that I overheard the sisters discussing the problem, mindful of the thin partition between the head of my bed and theirs.

I found the money—or its scarcity—stood in the way, and heard the chances of the matrimonial market calculated

with a balance greatly in favor of London.

Money! How I hated the word! I would have given every shilling I possessed to be assured that Edgar Neville was true to me, and would seek me out when the period of probation prescribed by my father was gone by. But where could he seek for me? Correspondence had been forbidden. He knew not my address and my father had withheld Edgar's from me. Ah, how he repented before he died! How glad he would have been to have left me in those strong, protective arms! I soon bridged the monetary difficulty over in Spila's way, in my uncle's opposition, and I think I showed something of my old self in the spirit with which I entered into the needful preparations for Miss Ritson's launch on the lake.

At first Bella or Winnie had borne me company, but I think they saw my longing to be alone; and I had my way, not without many cautions from my aunt.

What were perils to me, chafing against the restraint of my father's will, crying from the depths of my inmost heart for the banished love, who would never find me in these solitudes, and longing for wings to traverse land and sea, until I found my home on his faithful bosom?

Lost in abstractions, all danger was forgotten, and I had paid the penalty for a guardian angel little dreamed of.

My first peril was from the mountain mist, which came down and around me with bewildering suddenness, blotting out the landscape far and near.

Still, I thought I knew my way, and was stepping onward, though with caution, when my dress was clutched from behind, as I fancied by some bush. Turning to disentangle it, I was confronted with what seemed an awful apparition looming through the misty veil, and with a suppressed cry I stood still in affright.

I saw a woman's form, bent with age, a face intersected with lines and wrinkles like a map, from which nose and chin stood out like mountain peaks, and the sunken eyes gleamed like the fiery depths of two volcanic craters.

"Stop, my laddy!" she cried, "the gates of death are open before ye! Tak' my hand and let me lead you, and thank God, my bairn, that Elspa was near you in your peril."

I had heard of Elspa as a woman who dealt in herbs and simples, but I had heard of her as one with an unenviable reputation. She was spoken of as "the wise woman," but the words were uttered as if they meant "witch."

I confess I was half afraid to accept her guidance, but she stamped her foot, and by gesture strong as words gave me to understand that I had been walking toward a precipice, and three steps farther would have borne me to destruction.

What landaark she had I know not, but I think she seemed to feel her way with her feet. At all events, after about an hour's cautious stepping, we stood below the mist, the blue lake gleaming like a mirror still further down, and my uncle's house within sight. Conscious of the service she had rendered, I did not confine my thanks to words, but was liberal with my coin.

As she took "the siller," she scanned my face earnestly, then seized my hand and peered into it closely, while a sort of creepy sensation (excusable in a girl of nineteen) stole over me.

"Once, twice, thrice! Three perils, my bonnie laddy. One is past. The others lie before. Perils of your ain seeking. The gates of death stand in the path of your true love. Open them not with rash or heedless hands before the year be out, or love may mourn for love that couldna bide. The air of mountain and of lake is a na'ude for ye, bairn. Keep na'ir at haune and dinna be misdoon't. There's a' God's blessing a'! Remember! One danger is overpast. Tak' heed ye seek not the others; and dinna scold at old Elspa's warning words."

The old woman trotted off with her basket on her arm, a rusty black bonnet on her head, garments neat but below, and only a small check woolen handkerchief to protect her from the chilly mountain mists.

I had scarcely decided whether to laugh at her mainderings or to yield to the superstitious "feels" she had awakened, when I opened the horse-door to find all within in a state of excitement.

It was long past our dinner hour and my absence had alarmed them. Of course, I explained the cause of my delay, and it was only by Aunt Ritson's agitation that I fully comprehended the danger I had escaped. I think her motherly concern made me more communicative than usual.

We were still speaking of Elspa when my uncle came in.

"Ah!" said he, as Winnie helped him off with his overcoat. "Ah! my dear, you might thank your stars Elspa was on the mountain-side. I dare say she had followed you. The old Scotch woman is shrewd and far-seeing; she has turned her eighty years' experience to account, has a good practical knowledge of common ailments and curative simples. I should lose my own credit or I might do worse than take her as an assistant," and he laughed. "Any one can read character with a physiognomist in the world, and the silly folk think her prophetic, when she is only clear-eyed."

I think my uncle was using an invisible probe. I know I colored, and he laughed again, but said nothing—nor did I.

The excitement had not all been on my account. Bella had received an invitation to spend some months with a newly-married friend in London, and good-natured Winnie was in high glee. Even aunt acknowledged it was "a change not to be missed, if possible."

And I saw her glance furtively in Uncle Ritson's face, which I fancied was graver than usual. Still, possibilities were not discussed in

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
Invariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 25 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, and necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1879.

The extra session of Congress costs
the country about $12,000 a day.

There are unmistakable signs that the independent voters are all returning to the Republican ranks, and in many instances they are accompanied by the Democrats who have been sickened by ciphers and the solid South.

The new Secretary of the Senate is charged, the very day after his election,
with being something worse than a Fitzhugh. Now let Republican Senators, if they are politically inclined, demand that all the Fitz-hughs who have not been provided for shall be incorporated into the body politic without delay.

The action of the Executive Committee of the Maryland State Temperance Alliance in deciding to make the temperance question an issue in the coming political campaign is the first decisive note in a contest which promises to be both warm and exciting. Local option is by no means a new factor in state politics, and the strong fight it made in the last legislature shows that it has at least a respectable following.

From the New York Herald: "If
with so pitifully a small army as ours, with no surplus soldiers out of the Indian country and the forts, the President should attempt to control the elections of the country by the use of troops, he would act like a child with a cupful of salt and a teaspoon trying to change Lake Superior into sea water. And yet this heated and acrimonious debate turns upon this contemptible chimera—
upon whether the least aggressive of presidents shall be permitted to employ non-existent soldiers to keep peace at the polls."

A Bit of History.

The last act of the Democratic domination in the House eighteen years ago was stirring and dramatic,
but it was patriotic and high-souled.
Then the Democratic party said: "If you elect your man as President of the United States, we will shoot your Union to death!" and the people of this country, not willing to be coerced, but believing they had a right to vote for Abraham Lincoln if they chose, did elect him lawfully as President; and then your leaders in control of the other wing of this Capitol did the heroic thing by withdrawing from their seats; and your representatives withdrew from their seats here and flung down to us the gates of mortal battle. We called it rebellion, but we admitted that it was honorable, that it was courageous, and that it was noble to give us
the full game of battle and fight it out in the open field. That conflict and what followed we all know too well,
and to-day, after eighteen years, the book of your domination is opened where you turned down the leaves in 1860, and you are signaling your return to power by reading the second chapter (not this time a heroic one), that declares that if we do not let you dash a statute out of the book you will (not shoot the Union to death, as in the first chapter), but starve it to death by refusing the necessary appropriation. [Applause
on the Republican side.] You, gentlemen, have it in your power to kill this government. You have it in your power, by withholding these two bills, to smite the nerve centres of our constitution to the stillness of death, and you have declared your purpose to do it if you cannot break down the elements of free consent that, up to this time, have always ruled in the government.

We are ready to pass these bills for the support of the government at any hour when you will offer them in the ordinary way, and if you will offer these other measures as separate measures, we will meet you in the spirit of fair and fraternal debate.
But you shall not compel us, you shall not coerce us—even to save this government—until the question has gone to the sovereign to determine whether it will consent to break down any of its voluntary powers;
and on that ground, gentlemen, we plant ourselves. [Loud applause on the Republican side and in the galleries.] We remind you, in conclusion, that this great seal of yours in regard to keeping the officers of the government out of the Senate has not been always yours. I remember that only six years before the war

your law authorized marshals of the United States to go through all our households and hunt for fugitive slaves. It did not only that, but it empowered marshals to call for a posse comitatus and to call upon all
the bystanders to join in the chase.
And your Democratic Attorney General declared in an opinion in 1854
that a marshal of the United States might call to his aid the whole posse including soldiers and sailors and marines of the United States, to join in the chase and hunt down the fugitive.

Now, fellow members of the House,
if for the purpose of making slavery
eternal you could send your marshals
and could summon posses and use
the armed forces of the United States, by what force or grace can you tell us that in order to procure freedom in elections and peace at the polls you cannot use the same marshal with the armed posse?—Extract from Garfield's Speech.

An Illuminating Debate.

Our Democratic friends misapprehend
both the purpose and the effect of the debate in the Senate upon the change in the officers of that body.
It was not intended to offer any serious opposition to the changes which had been agreed on by the Democratic caucus. It was a foregone conclusion that they would be made,
and no Republican Senator had any hope of arresting them. Our Democratic friends err in supposing that the Republicans in the Senate expected to retain the offices, and they are equally in error in supposing that the effect of the debate serves to show
the country how reluctantly the patronage was yielded. Senator Eaton mistook entirely the drift of the debate when he said the Republicans were acting like "cry-babies" in their opposition to the proposed changes. For as a matter of fact there is not a Republican in the Senate—hardly, indeed, in the whole country
—who has not sagaciously enough to see that this movement, considered merely from a partisan point of view,
is of vastly more benefit to the Republican party than the retention of all the patronage in question. The Democratic majority in the Senate
can do their Republican opponents
no greater favor than by making a partial disclosure of their real motives.

In this matter it was only intended to draw out the Democratic Senators for the purpose of illuminating their own and their party's position upon a subject on which they have had much to say for the past few years,
to-wit: Reform in the Civil Service.
The action of the majority in making the changes was in itself sufficient to throw a flood of light upon the professions with which their platforms and their speeches have so long abounded; the remarks of Messrs. Eaton, Beck and Voorhees were still more luminous. These gentlemen expressed surprise that so natural a proceeding as the turning out of the old set of Senate officials and putting in a new upon purely partisan grounds should occasion
comment. They say very frankly that the offices belong to the Democratic majority, and that because they belong to them they propose to take them. Their avowal of belief in the spoils doctrine seems to be unhesitating and unqualified. "To the victors belong the 'spoils' they say,
and proceed to scoop them in. Now no one claims that the Democrats in the Senate were expected by any great number of people to do anything different from this. All Democrats expected it to be done, though they have been for years assuaging that the party was opposed to it, and denouncing their opponents for it.
And all Republicans knew they would do it as soon as they got the chance, whatever their professions
were.

And yet, though they did precisely what everybody expected them to do, and what all their instincts, their associations, their training and their traditions drove them to irresistibly,
we believe it was wise in the Republican Senators to push them into emphasizing the performance somewhat for the enlightenment of the country. The Democratic party is in a majority in the Senate and House to day upon the strength of false promises and lying professions.
The country is already pretty thoroughly convinced of that fact. But in order that there may be no mistake about it, and that the record
may be made so plain and unmistakable that they will not undertake hereafter to deny it or repeat the deception, it is well that whenever they do repudiate their professions
they should be confronted with the record and compelled to face the fact of their treachery. The fact brought out in this transaction by the utterances of Democratic Senators, and the treatment of the subject by Democratic newspapers, is that all the time these people have been talking about Civil Service Reform and the evils of a partisan use of official patronage, they had their tongues in their cheeks and were trying to deceive the public. No doubt every one of these Senators who voted to grab the offices for their party at the first chance has declaimed loudly against the dangers and the evils of using Government offices as rewards for party service. Upon the strength partly of such professions they have been placed in a position where they can use them for that purpose themselves, and they do it as though it had never occurred to them to do anything else.

It is barely possible that there is somewhere in the country an old-time Republican who, having become for good reasons dissatisfied with the administration of the public service under President Grant, began to vote the Democratic ticket under the delusion that the Democrats were honest in promising a reform in that particular, and still continues
the practice. If there is such an one,
we hope he will search the record of the Democratic party for the past three or four years, or since it began to reap the fruit of such professions.
If he can find a single instance where that party has come within galling distance of any sort of an office and has not pounced upon it—no matter how meritorious the incumbent or how graceless the applicant—then we have not a word to say against his keeping right on. But if he cannot,
we simply suggest that he find some other pretext for his politics than the Democratic position on the Civil Service.—N. Y. Tribune.

Knight of Honor.

The Grand Lodge of Maryland of the Knights of Honor held its first session yesterday. The following were elected officers of the Grand Lodge for the ensuing year: Past Grand Dictator, S. E. S. McKee, of Hagerstown; Grand Dictator, Nelson Poe, Jr., of Baltimore; Grand Assistant Dictator, C. H. Veldt, of Baltimore; Grand Chaplain, D. W.
Crawther, of Hagerstown; Grand
Reporter, M. L. Biers, of Hagerstown;
Grand Treasurer, M. H. Ravenscroft, Frostburg; Grand Guide, J. Young
Boyle, Baltimore; Grand Guardian,
S. D. Carmel, Baltimore; Grand Sen-
tiel, J. W. Lewis; Grand Trustees,
Robert Matheny of Lonsdale, W. J.
Walker of Cumberland, and A. A.
Mebelling of Hagerstown; Representatives to the Supreme Lodge of the World, T. Cook Hodge of Cumberland, Charles D. Johns, of Lona-gostown, and Dr. E. H. Bartlett of Oakland. It was decided to meet in Frederick on the fourth Wednesday in March. After the business session in the evening the members were entertained by the Baltimore delegation at a banquet at Wagner's Green House, on Pratt street. Grand Dictator Levy presided, and speeches were made by Judge Lindsay, Dr.
Bartlett, Dr. McKee, Mr. Biers and Mr. William McWilliams. After the banquet the visiting delegations were taken to Fort's Grand Opera House and witnessed the performance, and upon its conclusion were escorted to Baranum's Hotel.—Baltimore American, 28th.

Randolph Tucker gave his Democratic associates, particularly those from the North, much embarrassment on Friday last week, by moving as an amendment to the Army bill the repeal of the law
which forbids ex-Confederate officers from being appointed to positions in the United States Army. It has long been a favorite scheme of the Confederates to so reduce the army
that when the ex-rebels shall again
have come into control of both houses of Congress they could legislate that the West Pointers of before the war,
who resigned their commissions to enter the Confederate service, could be restored to their former places, leaving the present Union officers to be cast adrift, or to be legislated out
by some absurd system of techni-
cities. Tucker proposed his amendment and preached the usual canting sermon about peace and reconciliation. The sermon fell upon unwilling and restive ears. The Republicans wound none of it, and the Northern Democrats were even more earnestly opposed. Heister Clymer hurriedly left his seat and rushed up to the presiding officer, insisting that the amendment should be ruled out of order, and other Northern Democrats betrayed much concern that so ugly
a question should at this time be precipitated upon the party. Finally without any very serious effort at a division, the amendment was voted down. It was curious in all these propositions affecting the army to notice that on all the rising votes, while his Bourbon colleagues of the Confederacy were trying to cripple the Federal army, General Joe Johnston,
the great commander in that service, voted steadily and unobtrusively with the Republicans in favor of every amendment or proposition designed to benefit or dignify
the Federal army.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1, 1879.

The new rebellion of the Democratic party against the Government has received many set backs within the past two weeks. The Republicans have made several sorties, as it were, from their defences, and damaged their assailants materially. The thrusts of Blaine, Edmunds, Hoar, and Conkling in the Senate, have been followed by some heavy blows
by the Republican leaders in the House. The most notable and effectual of these was the speech of Gen.
Garfield, which was one of the best
and soundest ever heard in the house.
His remarks were aimed at the political legislation concealed in the army bill, but as he said, that was not the most dangerous feature of the present movement; it was the method through which it is sought to be enforced that creates alarm all over the country. The Democratic threat is that if they cannot have their way
they will override the veto power,
trample on the right of a minority,
and stop the wheels of Government. In short, they mean to revolutionize the country because they have a temporary ascendancy in one branch of the Government. How easy it would be for a desperate and unscrupulous party to ruin the country without resort to violence becomes apparent when we contemplate the mischievous possibilities of the present programme. That which we could quickly defeat by arms in war becomes more difficult in diplomacy and peaceful intrigue. To stop the supplies of the Government is to cripple it, and to cripple it is to take away not only its power but the respect and the credit which go far to maintain it. Hence should Congress for two years refuse to vote supplies,
the Government would stop; it would be paralyzed, and the infamous system of violence and fraud which have boosted the Democratic party so far up towards power would be irresistible, and the lost cause which failed in armed rebellion would prevail by the methods now threatened. This is the picture which Northern Democrats at last are forced to contemplate as possible under the domination of their Southern brethren, and many of them will hesitate to carry out the present programme to its legitimate end. The prospect for mischief looks less threatening than it did before the assault began all along the Democratic line by the solid and earnest Republicans.

That the Democrats are frightened
at the shadows of their own skeleton is shown by the fact that the most of them are willing to join the Republicans in skipping Monday regularly and adjourning over from Saturday until Tuesday. This has a good deal of meaning. Monday is the only day of the week when by the rules of the House bills can be introduced without unanimous consent. The Greenback Democrats and the Greenback squad have prepared various financial measures of a wild and fanciful nature that would come in regularly on Monday but which are allowed to waste their sweetness in the pockets of their authors as it is.
The Greenback worthies are wrought up to a great state of excitement by this condition, and curse the hard money Democrats and Republicans alike for holding them at bay. How long the few Democrats will resist
the indelicate tendency of their majority it is hard to tell, but it is clear that they are afraid of a free contest
upon these subjects in its effect upon their party prospects, especially in the East. The Greenback democracy boldly propose to gradually wipe out
the National Banks, to issue a large amount of additional Greenbacks,
and to adopt other measures to disturb present commercial conditions.
Look out for a shower of these propositions, once they get a Monday
meeting of the House.

It is intimated that Speaker Randall has about completed his list of committees, and will report them shortly. A strong pressure has been brought to bear on him to give the North little show in their make up,
as a contrast to his former list and to manned almost wholly by ex-Confederate chiefs. This pressure comes principally from the Tilden interest, which begins to be troublesome lest its eastern Democratic support melt away before the assaults of the republicans.

There is a good deal of unhappiness
in the Democratic-Greenback ranks.
Ex Doorkeeper Polk, of unsavory fame, is exposing cravenness in Carter Harrison that reform ex-Congressman from Chicago, and it looks like an indictment to follow. Then the Ohio idea "is blooming rather early"; in fact its Washington manager has caused the Democratic State Convention to be called on the same day as the Greenback, which means submission and surrender and causes many oaths. Then again the rebel officer seekers by hundreds are impatient because they are not provided for at once. Altogether we are having a grand exhibition of political imbecility and dishonesty which is surely leading to the slaughter of the Democratic party in 1880.
LOGAN.

The Temperance Question.

Rev. William J. Gill addressed a large audience on the subject of temperance Sunday last at the Holy Tabernacle, on Pennsylvania avenue
Baltimore. In the commencement of the address he gave numerous statistics, showing that while only $42,000,000 was contributed annually
for churches in this country, $700,010-000 was spent for liquor, and that while 83,000 pastors administered religion, 500,000 bar-tenders were employed dealing out liquor to 6,000,000 visitors to saloons on Sunday. He estimated that one drunkard dies
every ten minutes, which would make annually an army seventy-four miles long placed four abreast. He said we have lived long in hope that in the societies and in government would lie the remedy, in license
and in prohibition, but he had long thought that a man must become a Christian to be saved from intemperance. He had found disappointment and discouragement in these societies, and he thought the truth had dawned upon the church that it has been making a mistake in not preaching more upon this subject.
Jesus said unto the mother of the child possessed of the evil spirit, "Bring him to me," and he thought this applied to intemperance. He knew that the temperance associations in the land were doing good, especially the Gospel Temperance Association, who recognize Jesus Christ as the Savior, and if these poor drunkards can be brought to think that not only must they sign the pledge, but must adopt Christ also, so much the better.

The exodus of colored people from the South continues without any sign of abatement. Various explanations have been given for it, the Confederate newspapers trying to prove that the ignorant blacks have been swindled into leaving their kind employers and the soothing rifle clubs and the gentle bulldozers,
but the truth of the matter seems to be that the unhappy people are making a desperate but organized movement to escape from the land of intolerance, from a slavery even worse than that under which they groaned before the war. It is said that the Southern representatives in Congress are much disturbed by the movement, the main purposes of which is to get the blacks out of politics by distributing them over the Western States, and at the same time rendering necessary the introduction of foreign labor into the South. The leader of the scheme, a colored Methodist preacher named Embrace states that Senator Windom proposes to introduce a resolution, at an early day,
to have the Senate make the condition of the colored people in the South, a subject of special inquiry,
with a view to obtaining such legislation as may aid those who desire to emigrate. It would not be strange if the negro problem would solve itself, in the near future, with or without legislation; and if the "dominant party" in the South drive off their great army of laborers, by a system of oppression and the denial of their civil rights, they will be largely the losers. They will learn, when it is too late, that justice to the negro is the best policy.—Cumberland News.

Mr. Jefferson Davis has been interviewed and—by a Boston reporter. He declares that so far as he is concerned the results of the war are accepted in entire good faith, and that in his opinion the abolition of slavery was, in spite of the misery
and desolation it involved, a good thing, ultimately, for the South. He thinks there may be, and doubtless are, individual cases of bad dealing at the South, but in the main the feeling of the Southern people toward the negroes is one of kindness and good will.

The jury at Washington Tuesday gave what will be almost unanimously regarded as the proper verdict in the suit of Mrs. Oliver against Simon Cameron for damages for breach of promise of marriage—a finding for the defendant.

TELEGRAPHIC.

POLITICAL RIDERS.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—The House Democrats are said to have decided that they will allow the Republicans all the time they wish for debate upon the Army appropriation bill, and not endeavor to force a final vote through the operations of the previous question. This course is not the result of any magnanimity, sense of justice or consideration of statesmanship on the part of the Democrats. It is compelled rather by the necessity of their position.
When the final vote shall come the Democrats undoubtedly will have strength enough to pass the bill by a small majority; but until that time
the Democratic force is neither numerous enough nor of such a character as would warrant an attempt to enforce the gag law. Since the caucus determination of the Republicans to secure the right to debate

the measure to the extent of their desires, the Democratic managers have been very courteous, and have evidently not desired to invite a filibustering contest. The issue of such contest would be much less certain than a final vote after full deliberation.

Already the scanty Democratic majority is being reduced. Lay, of Missouri, the paralytic, left yesterday for the Arkansas Hot Springs.
He came here to assist in the organization of the House, at great risk of his life, and finds that it is impossible for him to attend to the duties of the House. Bland, of the same state accompanying him, and is in very poor health. It is not known whether these gentlemen were able to obtain pairs. There is only one Republican who is now in feeble health, and who might be willing to pair. Alexander Stephens is able to attend the sessions, but for a short time daily,
and on Saturday Acklen obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of ill-health.

In view of such contingencies, it becomes the Democrats to be very considerate with the powerful Republican minority. That the debate is to be very extended is apparent.
Forty names are already entered upon the list, and it is known that many prominent Democrats whose names have not yet been entered intend to speak. It may be two weeks before this first bill can reach the Senate and a month before it goes to the President. The Democrats seem apprehensive of the effects of the debate upon the Northern vote. One of their leaders said to-day that while, in his opinion, Garfield's speech did not touch the case in point of argument, it was an appeal to the people which the Democrats would find it impossible to answer.

The contrast between the closing chapter of the seceding Democracy in 1861 and the opening chapter of the restored Confederate Democracy
in 1879, and the fact that the Democracy justified the use of the army to run down fugitive slaves in the North
before the war, but find it unconstitutional now to preserve the peace at the polls with the army, or to protect the liberated negro in his rights as a freeman—are features of the speech which the Democrats admit it will be difficult for them to answer, and which will strongly appeal to public opinion in the North. The Republicans realize this fact, and yesterday afternoon, before the adjournment of the House, had subscribed for one hundred thousand copies for circulation. Yet, notwithstanding the determined opposition of the Republicans, a number of prominent Democrats, in interviews published in the local press this morning, insist that this session will be a short one. There can be no other foundation for these statements than a reliance upon declarations which Secretary Everts is reported to have made to those who have called upon him. But Mr.
Everts, in his talk of surrender, represents nobody in the cabinet but himself, and no Republican in Washington outside of the cabinet.

PRAIRIES ABLAZE.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA, March 31.—
The Journal has startling reports of the ravages of destructive prairie fires up the Big Sioux valley, and throughout Southern Dakota. The fires on Saturday were of unusual force and destructive beyond precedent. The poles on the telegraph line on the Sioux City and Pembina railroad were burned so that the line
has been down and reports from that quarter are not full. A merchant of Eden, in Sioux City to-day, tells some harrowing tales of the loss in that quarter. On Saturday from his store door, the town occupying an elevated position, he counted 13 farm houses in flames and he says more than 10 in that vicinity have lost everything, houses, barns, seeds, grain, &c. The stricken people are dazed by the terrible blow that has fallen on them. A large Norwegian church, five miles from Eden was burned. In the same neighborhood a child, it is reported, was fatally burned and its father was terribly burned in his efforts to save its life. Northwest of Eliot
a Norwegian named Michelson, while working to save his property, was caught in the fire and so badly burned that he cannot live. It is reported two other men in the same locality were burned to death. In the vicinity of Portlandville, it is said,
not less than 20 families lost their hay, grain, etc. West of Elk Point
Mr. Richardson lost a large amount of grain. The schoolhouse, with all the books and contents, was also burned. At White Swan, opposite Fort Randall, the telegraph office, with all effects, was burned, as the operator reports from Yankton agency. At the same place the government stables were burned, but the stock saved. Altogether immense damage has been done and the hardship to settlers is particularly severe.
The grass grew very rank last year,
and the protracted dry spell has made it powerful food for a fire.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Did you get fooled?
—New goods at Davis & Townsend's.
—Now begin to purchase your eggs for Easter.
—The Oakland public school closed Wednesday.
—Miss Emma Brooke will open a private school Monday.
—Capt. E. M. Friend was in town on Tuesday.
—Mr. John Dailey, who has been unwell for some weeks, has fully recovered.
—John C. Dunham, Esq., removed his goods to his new store room on Tuesday.
—The spelling school at South Point on Monday evening was well attended.
—Prof. Richardson has had his store repainted and improved. Jas. Enlow did the work.
—The various Sunday Schools of town will reorganize for the summer season soon.
—If you want the best plow, buy the "South Bend Chilled," of Davis & Townsend.
—Mr. Silas Shirer and wife, of Portland, were visiting in town this week.
—H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., returned from his Western trip on Friday evening of last week.
—Dr. J. Lee McComas returned to Oakland on Sunday morning. He was absent about three weeks.
—Fishing for any kind of the finny tribe is now in order, the law having expired.
—The Oakland and Deer Park Hotels will be open for guests June 15th, with Mr. M. W. Lambert as manager.
—We would be glad if our subscribers would send us local news of interest. We would take it as a favor.
—The County Commissioners will meet next Monday for the purpose of hearing appeals on assessments and making transfers.
—Mr. A. J. Harne is prepared to deliver baggage, express matter or any kind of goods to any part of the town, on short notice.
—An exchange says: "You can't advertise enough in a week to a year, any more than you can eat enough in seven days to last 455; and yet some so-called business men seem to think so."
—The population of the eastern end of Allegany county is being increased by a large number of Welsh families from Froelberg settling upon the Cato estate.
—Married—On March 31st, at the residence of the bride, by Rev. W. Y. Cline, Mr. Jonathan W. Baker, of Garrett county, Md., to Miss Laura A. Shaffer, of Preston county, W. Va.
—A large number of pickers, taken from the Juniata, near Bedford, Pa., have been received at Cumberland and placed in the Blue Springs, where they will find their way after spawning into the creek and river.
—A survey is being made for the construction of the George's Creek and Cumberland Railroad which will give to the mines on George's Creek a cheap outlet to tidewater, and enable the coal operators to defy competition.
—The sum of $2,000 was received by the Lodge of Knights of Honor in this city, from the Supreme Treasurer, Saturday, it being the amount of insurance on the life of the late Charles Robb, and the money will be paid over to his heirs at once.
—Comb. Times.
—Whether the weather be fine or disagreeable; whether politics are dormant or otherwise; whether stirring events do or do not occur; whether peace reigns or war has domination; through all the changes of time, new advertisements find their way to this office. Why? Because the people recognize the fact that THE REPUBLICAN is a splendid advertising medium, and that they will get a good return for the money they invest in it. Suppose you try it, and be convinced that what we assert is true.
—M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Benj. Ison.
—Memorial Church.—Preaching in the morning at 11, and in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Lafayette.
—Lutheran Church.—Services appropriate for "Palm Sunday," Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Subject of sermon, "The Last Week of our Lord's Earthly Life."
—Dentistry.
—Dr. J. Daily, Resident Dentist at Westernport, will visit Oakland on Monday, April 7th, and remain one week. Rooms at the New Glade Hotel.

Church Dedication.

The new church erected by the United Brethren in Christ, at the Forks, Grantsville district, Garrett county, will be dedicated on the 14th day of May next. Bishop Jacob J. Glossbrenner will preach the dedicatory sermon.

New Spring and Summer Goods.

Mr. Arch. Loewenstein has just returned from the eastern cities with a large stock of cloths, cassimeres, vestings, trimmings, &c., suitable for spring and summer suits. Mr. L. has given general satisfaction since he has been in our town, and he proposes to maintain his reputation in the future. Give him an order, and we will guarantee satisfaction as to fit and price.

The Literary.

A large audience assembled in the hall of the Literary Society on last Saturday evening.
The exercises were of the usual character, and consisted of an essay by Allen Ison, a selection by Jas. D. Hamill and the debate on the question Resolved, "That Columbus is deserving of more credit than Washington," which was decided in favor of Washington. The speakers were for Columbus, Zealous Tower and Wm. Arnold, and for the opposite side Thos. Bosley and Ed. Sinclair. After some routine business the Society adjourned.

As our reporter is a member of the Society, his zeal in making extended reports has been somewhat dampened lately, and for this reason the report of the meeting has been abbreviated.

Death of Wm. L. Harvey.

DEER PARK, April 1st, 1879.
Our people were assembled to-day to pay the last sad offices to one of our citizens, Mr. Wm. L. Harvey, who died suddenly at his residence in this place, on the 31st ult.

Mr. Harvey was one of our esteemed citizens, whose character for honesty and integrity stood as fair as any in this community. He was about 37 years of age, and leaves a widow and two children, who were entirely dependent upon him for support, and who also have the sympathy of all who knew him.

His remains were taken to the Union church, which was filled to its full capacity by sympathizing friends, where funeral services were held by Rev. Mr. Rexroad, assisted by Revs. Wm. Rogers, Rodchever and Langhin, after which they were deposited with appropriate services, in the public cemetery at this place.

Revival of an Industry.

There was Monday filed for record in the office of Clerk of the Court Luman the certificate of incorporation of the Cumberland cast steel company. The incorporators are Messrs. John Humbird, F. Minke, J. H. Gordon, R. D. Johnson and Dr. S. P. Smith. The incorporation is for forty years.
The stock is divided into one thousand shares of $50 each, all of which have been taken. The officers of the new organization are: President, J. H. Gordon; directors, John Humbird, R. D. Johnson, Dr. S. P. Smith, J. H. Gordon, F. Minke, Wm. Walsh and William Hall.
The company purchased the steel works property for $16,000. They are negotiating with Mr. McL. Thompson, formerly connected with the works here, to take charge of the works with a view to resuming operations. A set of rails will probably be purchased and steel bars manufactured. The lack of rails, and capital to secure them, was given as the principal reason of the failure of the former company.
The industry is one which should be successfully carried on in our city, and as the management are energetic business men, we hope they will be able to make the works a permanent institution. —Comb. News.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of March:
Peter J. Lohr and Rebecca Wilburn.
G. B. Warnick and Golda Barnard.
Abraham Kisher and Mary Ann Stevens.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending April 2:
Jas. Lee and wife to Joseph Graer, Military Lots Nos. 3271 and 3274; also part of Military Lots Nos. 3292, 3270 and 3269; also 1/2 of Lot No. 1136; $1,500.
Walter S. Cornany and others to John G. Brant, 1/2 interest in Lot No. 1901; $50.
Charles Brown to Annie Brown, part of Military Lot 846; $281.50.

Changes this Spring.

The following are among the changes of residence in Oakland this spring:
Mr. Wm. Combs occupies the house lately vacated by Alex. Osbourn, Esq., on Second street.
J. W. Veitch, Esq., to the residence lately purchased on Oak St.
W. H. Hagans, Esq., to the house lately occupied by Mr. Veitch, on Second street.
Mrs. Ward, to the Pritchard house on Pennington street.
Mrs. Good, to the house lately occupied by Mrs. Ward, on Alder st.
Mr. D. Little, to the house recently purchased from G. W. Legge, and lately occupied by Mrs. Good.
Mr. Chas. Nethkin, to the house recently purchased from Thomas Philpot.
Mr. J. S. Combs, to the rooms over Mr. C. C. Michael's store room.
Mr. John Pfeiffer, to a house recently purchased from John O. Michael, on Seventh street.
Rev. J. H. Cogg, to the house lately occupied by W. H. Hagans.
Mr. McWilliams, to a house near the Smithman bridge.
Mr. Ross, to the Colliard house on Second street.
Mr. George Kildow, to the house lately occupied by Mr. McWilliams.
Mr. Geo. D. White, to the Brewer house, on Third street.
Hopwood Kiblow, from Mr. D. Rinehart's, to the King place.
Mrs. Smutase, to the Legge house, on Liberty street.

Jurors for May Term, 1879.

The following is the list of Grand and Petit Jurors, for the May term of the Circuit Court, drawn by Judge Peattie, on Thursday:
R. J. West, John J. Smith, D. E. Dwyer, Alex. Fresh, Richard T. Frazee, Wm. W. Broadwaters, John P. Robinson, Harrison Collins, Jas. W. Mason, Joseph Crim, Thaddeus Clontony, Peter F. Nine, John F. Henswelling, John G. Knauer, John Herman, Amos Broadwater, of A., Nathaniel B. Harvey, Henry Siler, John Swalp, Joseph D. Nethkin, E. J. Frazier, E. D. Kepner, P. Martin, Jacob Maist, P. H. Eshard, Benj. H. Greene, M. R. Hamill, James M. Arnold, Joseph Spiker, No. 3, Rich. Custer, Henry Winterberg, A. C. Dewitt, John H. Friend, John G. Rich, Colita Michaels, Eli McMillan, Robert Green, Basil Anderson, Jos. B. Davis, George S. Lee, Stephen W. Friend, Jeremiah Harvey, D. H. Lorr, Peter Colmer, John G. Steyer, Alfred H. Welch.

AMONG THE PINES.

Ed. REPUBLICAN.—Again the dreary solitude of the somber pines, sighing and weeping beneath the semi-annual affliction of the equinox is brightened by the arrival of THE REPUBLICAN, and again, Oh! most appalling fact! I am inspired to take up my pen, and shall I confess it, all because I find a slender pencil mark inclosing J. M.'s voluntary denouement of his identity, which I beg leave to assure you, arrives just in time to arrest the rapid decline, and restore to perfect health and activity this "sparkling" descendant of our noted but remote ancestors, whose names as well as scion she claims to be.

And so J. M. is gray haired, has a grown up family, is married, and with all these multifarious possessions is harried with neither money nor brains! "Now I 'cease' that a lie," as they say heretofore. Away down in the innermost recesses of my heart of hearts is born a suspicion that J. M. expects me to be disappointed at this denouement, and I cannot help thinking that he proves himself a legitimate son of Adam by taking it for granted that every daughter of Eve bows down more readily to youth and comeliness than to experience and brains. To-day, in defiance of this time honored and well established theory, I clip out and place among my treasures, J. M.'s first notice of my literary effort, regarding it now as something worthy of preservation, and again make my bow, every whit as smilingly, and far more reverently for the knowledge that the one to whom I make my obeisance wears the most awe-inspiring and respect-claiming of all crowns—gray hair—and metaphorically patting myself on the head say, "bless you my child, bless you." While you can elicit from a man of years and experience, who can write brilliantly himself, who has a brain stored with the productions of Shakespeare, Cowper, Tennyson and I don't know how many more of the shining literary lights of the past and present, the assurance that you are "able to delight thousands," that your pen is "easy and throws off sparkling vivacity," that you "can make sunshine among nature's most somber scenes," you may get amount to something.

Immediately following the communication of J. M. I find a notice of another meeting of the Oakland Literary Society, during which any other momentous question was soiled. As this learned and important Society seems to have confidently shrouded the responsibility of settling the knotty questions that have been disturbing the mind of man for years past, perhaps it would not be considered amiss were I to place before this august body, for consideration and disposition, a few "ifs" and "whys" that are buzzing about in my mind at this moment, born I think, of a comparison of two of the settled questions of the past, drawn from the annals of "this same society." Do you think it would? The first, the question of the purifying and elevating influence of woman suffrage on politics, decided in the negative. The second, "Resolved, That woman has more influence on man than money," decided in the affirmative. Now of course I do not for a moment doubt the wisdom of these decisions and I hope I am not behind any of my sisters in appreciation of and gratitude to these learned and benignant gentlemen who have so generously taken it upon themselves to decide for us as to where we are and are not capable of using influence; and no doubt my inability to immediately see and recognize the consistency and wisdom of their decision is attributable to the fact that I am possessed of a feminine and consequently inferior brain. Now could I have a man's head for just long enough to examine into this matter, I should no doubt see "why this is thusly" at once. Still, my brain unfortunately is what it is, and these "ifs" and "whys" have crowded themselves into it and will not be dismissed. You see from my distant and outside view of the wise, elevated and unsullied ranks of our political forces it has seemed to me that each party regards money as the most powerful influential agent employed in its opponent's forces. Now, "if" this be the case, "why" would it not be an advantage to apply the still more powerful influence held by women more directly than it has ever been applied? "If" we are capable of exerting a more powerful influence over the mind of man than that wonderful medium which is said to be the root of all evil—the love of which tempts would be honest men to fraud and embezzlement daily—the object after which all men strive, without which few succeed in being great and with which the most common place becomes important. If we do wield an influence more potent than this, why are we not capable of at least deciding as to our own ability or non ability to purify the politics of our nation, or influence the lords of creation without being made the subject of masculine debate or masculine judgment?

But the "ifs" and "whys" are multiplying in my mind at such a rate that I feel that even the patience of that benignant body, which has so generously made the unimportant question of our uses and capabilities the subject of its serious consideration, would not be equal to their settlement; therefore I push them aside and rest content to know that our needs and requirements will be more readily recognized by the humane society which has taken our cause in hand, than they can be felt by ourselves.

I find my pen just running over onto page 9, and upon looking back see that I have not used a single quotation, while in the beginning I had intended to follow J. M.'s brilliant example to the best of my poor ability, but my library is not at hand, and some how my head never turns out the right thing at the right time. I can think of nothing appropriate now except

"My pen is bad, my ink is pale," and as it's not a lull I regret to say that I cannot in accordance with strict veracity, complete this beautiful little stanza, so must confess myself no more an adept at quotation than criticism, and humbly sign myself

A DAUGHTER OF EVE.

P. S.—Many and hearty thanks to your contributor from Wellsville, O., for her echo of the opinions expressed in my first letter. D. E.

The invaliding of Messrs. Lay, Bland and Acklen, and the inability of Mr. Stephens to be present in the chamber for any length of time, has so much reduced the Democratic majority in the House that the Republicans are disposed to be "sassy" and to insist upon the right of large privileges in the way of full debate, &c. The Greenbackers, too, are inclined, also, to assert themselves with some emphasis. The fight between the three parties will be something like Maryatt's famous triangular duel.

One reason why the Greenbackers in Congress refuse to affiliate with the Democrats is that Colonel Love, an ex-Confederate, who ran for Congress on the National ticket in Mississippi, complains that his friends were as thoroughly bulldozed as the Republicans ever were.

A farmer told us the other day that he would not be without Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup if it cost five dollars a bottle. It must be a wonderful remedy. The price is only 25 cents a bottle.

In the Opposition.

In a despatch from Washington to a Western paper a few days ago a leading Republican in Congress was reported as saying that he was almost delighted to be in the minority. He had a chance to fully exercise his pugnacious propensities, and he looked forward with very much pleasure to meeting the Democratic majority in the conflict of debate. The name of this audacious member was not given in the report, but we imagine that it might have been Garfield, Conger, Frye or any one of the other leading Republicans in the House, or Blaine, Hoar, Conkling, Carpenter, Chandler or Logan, in the Senate. Whoever it was, he hit upon one of the solid facts of the advantage of being in the Congressional minority. The Democrats would not now have control of the Senate and House were it not for the tendency of the public and press to gird at the powers that be. Up to 1872 there appeared to be not the slightest chance that the Republican domination in the national government would soon be shaken. Democratic politicians and newspapers were not clever or powerful enough to break down even the outworks of the Republican fortress. But suddenly there sprang up the Greeley movement, and although it was in itself a ridiculous fiasco, it furnished the impulse upon which the Democrats are working to this day. The Republican party received a dangerous stab from the alleged "Liberal" demonstration of seven years ago, and the festering of the wound has resulted in the Democratic triumph now embodied in the partisan majorities in the two houses of Congress.

The contest to overthrow the Republican supremacy was warm and lively enough. When the Greeley campaign was started, with the Tribune philosopher at the head, and backed up by such men as Carl Schurz, Andrew G. Curtin, John M. Palmer and other Republicans, who made a dead set against Grant, the Democrats obtained their first valuable reinforcements since the war. These men raised them out of a comatose condition, breathed the breath of life into their veins and taught them how to conduct a political warfare. Most of these involuntary instructors of the Democrats have since repented of their aiding and abetting of the cause, but the results are nevertheless not changed. Everybody can remember how eagerly the opposition renewed the fight immediately after the second election of Grant. The Greeley sympathizers furnished the brains to the Democracy, and the latter made exceedingly good use of them. The unfortunate mistakes of Grant's second term were written up with a free hand; the financial panic of 1873 was used as a Democratic make weight, and the next year saw a Democratic majority elected to the House of Representatives for the first time since 1860. That success encouraged the party wonderfully, and it preserved until it came very near electing a president in 1876, and its failure in that respect is compensated for by its present supremacy in the legislative chambers at each end of the Capitol.

And now that the Democrats have enjoyed all the sweets of being in the minority and opposition, it is the turn of the Republicans to take their places. While we would not venture to make such a statement as of our own knowledge, it may be remarked that the Democratic newspapers are presenting dolorous complaints that the Democratic members in Congress are the inferiors of the Republicans in debate and parliamentary tactics. The concession appears to be made by the Democratic press that the Republicans carry the intellectual superiority, and perhaps the crowding down of Senator Bayard in the caucus might explain why the Democrats so perpetually making blunders that they do not perceive until it is too late to remedy them. In this very conflict with regard to engrafting the repeal of the election laws upon the appropriation bills our Democratic friends have miscalculated the contingencies of the struggle which they provoked. Having so slender a majority in the House they cannot help permitting the Republicans a free discussion, and Mr. Garfield's speech on Saturday was an example of the resolution and strength of the minority. The discussion will be memorable in the annals of the nation, but while the Democrats have only a Thurman and Bayard in the Senate to antagonize the great Republican debaters there, they have actually no one in the lower house to face the Republican leaders unless some new members develop capacities for prominence in that forensic field. As things stand the Republicans are the masterly critics of the situation and the Democratic programme, and they are a marvelously more powerful minority than the Democrats were in the days when the positions of parties were reversed. —Baltimore American.

A long and uninteresting debate may be expected in the House on the Army appropriation bill. Forty members are down on Mr. Springer's list for big speeches. If the debate can be prolonged for a few weeks the slim Democratic majority will be exhausted. Messrs. Lay and Bland have gone to Hot Springs; Acklen has indefinite leave of absence on account of ill health and Hon. Alex. H. Stephens can only remain in the chamber an hour or so each day. It is doubtful the policy of the Republicans to talk the Democratic majority into the hospital and thus thwart the contemplated political legislation. The Democrats are so weak in the House that they can't sustain a motion for the previous question. —Baltimore Gazette.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

D. E. H. PARSONS, offers his professional services to the people of Oakland 383m

J. B. BRANT, Surveyor, Auctioneer and Conveyancer, Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias, issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, State of Maryland, and to me directed, at the suit of Frank & Adler, use of Joseph Diley against the goods and chattels, household contents of Jesse W. Clancy, I have taken and taken in execution all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, at law and equity, of the said Jesse W. Clancy in and to the following property, to-wit: In and to all the lands mentioned in the two following deeds, to-wit: A. C. Good and wife, to Joseph Diley, bearing date March 27, 1855, and recorded in Liber H. R., folio 67, one of the Land Records of Allegany county, Md.; the other a deed from John J. Sculler and wife, to Joseph Diley, bearing date the 11th day of September, 1857, and recorded in Liber H. R., No. 2, folio 92, one of the land records of Allegany Co., Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, April 26th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Codrington's Hotel, in the town of Oakland, I will offer for sale the said property so seized and taken in execution to the highest bidder, for cash, to-wit: said title and costs.

THOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, Md., March 26th, 1879.
Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Monday, April 7th, 1879,

for the purpose of hearing appeals on assessments, and making transfers.

Persons who have alienated property during the last year are requested to appear before the board to have the transfers made correctly.

A tax collector for the year 1879 will be appointed at this session.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT, OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 30 ACRES, 20 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD FURN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 20 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. This perfect, limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 220 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 1/2 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Cramery Summit. Some of the best mill seats in the county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 16 rooms; good stable attached. The wheels and truss for a saw Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole tract the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE.

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10610, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a low price. Run through of the buildings, terms.—one third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

VARIETIES.

A foot note—sole.
—Lemon juice cleans a sponge.
—Lent prohibits all balls but cod-fish balls.
—A check of brass lineth a pocket with gold.
—The latest out—The boy who is "kept after school."
—Appearances are sometimes deceitful. So are disappearances.
—To the tramp, home is where the hash is.—New Orleans Picayune.
—The more whisky straight a man takes the more crooked he becomes.
—Do they call it codfish, because it is made up of the salt of the earth?

"I just hate an old batch," said a baker's daughter, anent the advances of her elderly admirer.
—A man can help what's done behind his back, as the tramp said when he was kicked out of doors.
—A Whitehall woman calls her husband good resolutions, because he is always broke.—Whitehall Times.

—Women may become lawyers, but women cannot sit on juries. They could never agree.—Chicago Tribune.
—It is estimated that the new teacher made in Salt Lake City will cost 4,000 persons and standing room for 1,000 more.

—A happy mother of male twins enthusiastically refers to her treasures as her "sweet boy and boy."—Harvard Times.

—America has her peculiarity in this respect, too. It is wonderful how a rich papa improves a girl's looks.—Rochester Express.

—A profound writer says: "We are created especially for one another." Then why blame the Catholics in waiting to get their share?

—Who did the plow share with?—New York Express. Well, it divided its furrows pretty evenly all around the lot.—New Haven Register.

—May Myrtle.—"You can Winnipeg money losing at a Chippewa Indian is the poorest kind of a stone-outer."—Black Observer.

—It was Brougham who said that a lawyer is a very learned gentleman who rescues your estate from your enemies and then keeps it for himself.

—A ballad of two opponents:
"See who is 'ere' asked the Englishman.
"O, I Amer," said Yakob Khan.
—Atlanta Constitution.

—Provident Minister—"I wish to state that I have preserved an alarm-clock that will wake up the congregation as soon as the services are over."—Ezra change.

—There's one thing, boys you must shun. If you would win your money, be sure to be the old man's boy.—Elmira Gazette.

—Always remember the poor. It may save the awkward mistake of trying to borrow a dollar from the person who hasn't it.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

—Emperor William, of Germany, had a fall on a piece of slippery pavement last Friday. It didn't hurt the Emperor much, but it jarred all Germany.—Union Observer.

—Mrs. Partington, in illustration of the proverb: "A soft answer turneth away wrath," said: "It is better to speak paragonically of a person than to be all the time flinging epithets at him."

—Young men sending spring poetry to this office will please include their names and addresses, not for publication, but as an evidence of their inability in case they are ever arrested for murder.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

—There are too many women in the world; 60,000 more women than men in Massachusetts," growled the husband. "That is the survival of the fittest," replied the wife.

—There are 185 tribes of Indians yet left in the United States, and he who imagines that the Indian agent is played out has taken a shot at the wrong marble.—Free Press.

—It's strange that you have grown so tickle of late, my dear," said Mrs. Mac to her husband. "For in earlier years you was as staid as could be—you never came to see me but you staid till twelve or one o'clock."

—Practical Yankee: "Well, yes, sir. I give in to you. Shakespeare was a genius. But he did it kinder seem to go it to a practical use. Never benefited civilization with a washing-machine, nor a patent turnip-peeler, nor anything of that sort. Still, he was a smart man."

—La Surprise is the name of a new hat with three-quarters of a yard of feathers hanging from the right side. It is so called from the surprised manner in which the husband exclaims: "La!" when presented with the bill.—Norfolk Herald.

—The war-song of the Zulus runs:
Yum! Yum! Yum!
Yum! Yum! Yum!
Yum! Yum! Yum!
Yum! Yum! Yum!

When they want to vary the monotony they sing it backwards.—Free Press.

—The New Orleans Picayune is not encouraged. It says: "An honest man must pay a license for the privilege of carrying on his trade. A loafer has the privilege of standing all day on street corners without paying a cent's worth of tribute to the Government."

—The local editor of the Montgomery (Minn.) Standard evidently felt that a poor excuse was better than none when he wrote the following: "The editor has come courting this week and you must make due allowance for the trash in this issue."—Free Press.

—A miserable old huck of Manayunk said as the fire broke through his last chunk, "It is fearfully cold."
"Would be warmer, I'm told, if I had a wife to share this 'ben' hunk!"—Norfolk Herald.

—A woman in Chicago has undertaken on a wager, to keep her mouth shut three thousand quarter hours. She probably has a twin sister who takes her place every half hour, while she goes out and talks somebody blind.

—A poor dandy, whose corn-crib had been captured by the Sheriff to secure the payment of his taxes, brought a huge army pistol and a broken rifle, and, having them upon the desk in the Tax Collector's office, said: "Mars

Morgan, I rather part wid my right arm den dese wepins, but you mus' try to git de tax outen 'em. De children mus' hab bread, an' dat bread an in de corn. Please, sah, take dat artilly an' let up on de corn." This appeal was more than the kind-hearted revenue man could stand, and he proceeded forthwith to "make arrangements."—Quincy (Ila.) Herald.

Some old friend writes that "in gardening, every portion of the body is exercised, and the mind refreshed." The writer's experience in gardening has evidently been confined to sitting in the shade and bossing a hired man.

If he were to dig garden until his body became nearly the shape of a croquet wicket, and it almost snapped his backbone in half to assume an upright position, he would quickly acknowledge that there is such a thing as over-exercising the body too much; and when his old man wasn't looking, he would jump over the back fence, go down town, and refresh his mind by engaging in a game of base ball—and perchance get four fingers knocked out of joint, his nose mashed, and a new bump erected on his head.—Norfolk Herald.

Hydraulic Gold Mines.

John H. Thomas, of Laporte, Cal., one of the largest hydraulic miners of that State, is now at the Park Avenue Hotel, on a visit to the city, after an absence of twenty-three years. Mr. Thomas came to New York from Massachusetts, a lad of seventeen, without a dollar, and found employment with David Moffit & Co., down in the "Swamp," until he came to California, where he made his fortune. Mr. Thomas is now in his fortieth year, of his particular work he seems habitually reticent.

In answer to questions about his mining experience, Mr. Thomas said: "Well, it is not very large. I have been at work in the gold-gravel of Plumas and Sierra Counties for over twenty years, but know little of mining outside except by hearsay. I was after gold, and finding that the head of gold-gravel came from the head of the river, and Little Grizzly, I decided to stay, and every year since I've had a better reason for so doing. The really lasting and rich gold-gravel beds of California are found in what seem to be the channels of large rivers that have time nearly north and south, or at right angles to the present rivers. These channels appear to have been first nearly filled with washings from gold quartz veins, then lava over them, and raised them up. There are three of these channels, known as the White, Gray and Blue Leads. The Blue Lead is the largest and richest, and on this I've worked, and of this only I would rather talk."

The head of a channel holds the coarsest gold, and the most of it, like the head of a sluice, and the head of the Big Blue is probably producing more gold than any other of the same size in the world. There about ten miles square has yielded, according to the lowest estimates, over $200,000,000. C. W. Hindle, a mining engineer, who has lived and worked there twenty-five years, and who reported on it for Commissioner Raymond, says that from the vicinity of Laporte alone over $100,000,000 has been taken out of the gravel. The books of Dr. Brewster, who was sent to inspect the territory, show that he carried out in sixteen years over $60,000,000. Then, too, in this vicinity are the greatest gold quartz mines of California, the Plumas, Eureka, Sierra, Butte, Mammoth and others, that together have produced in the neighborhood of $400,000,000.

Are not the gravel beds about worked out?

"No, gravel-mining is in its infancy with us. There are some miles of unexplored gravel, and of the gravel-beds actually explored, tunneled, drifted and opened. I do not think one-twentieth have been worked. The Union, a drift mine, averaging over $100,000 per acre. The Down East also drifts, got over $300,000 from six acres. This has been about the average of our drift mines, which, working only three or four feet of the gravel nearest the belt-rock, got from $2 to $15 per cubic yard at an average expense, including improvements, of about 25 per cent. of the product when paying $3 to $4 a day for miners. Our hydraulic mines show averages of 12 cents to 60 cents a cubic yard, and there are from 10,000 to 200,000 cubic yards per acre, an average in the main channel of 80,000 to 100,000 cubic yards an acre. An inch of water, about 2,000 cubic feet, with head of 100 to 200 feet, will reach from 3 to 4 cubic yards a day, and costs from 2 cents to 10 cents an inch. Now apply your arithmetic and see how small an acre of this channel is necessary to produce the amounts I have named, and then produce them as profits."

"If this be true, why is there no rush to these gold fields, as there is to Leadville?"

"There have been many of them and terrible ones in times past. Under the old law a man could locate 100 feet wide of this gravel, and thousands of these locations were made in early excitement, but the locators soon found that to work their property with profit required large outlays for miles of ditches if for hydraulic, or thousands of feet of tunnels if for drift mining. Many abandoned their claims, some combined, and a few formed companies and succeeded in getting money enough for proper equipment, and it is only within the last five years that hydraulic mining has been really established. Now it is growing more rapidly than our quartz mining. The Director of the Mint estimates that California's gold product for 1878 was about $20,000,000. I think it was fully that, and that two-thirds if not three-quarters was from gold-gravel. One claim of the Dutch Company got $3.14 a cubic yard from 27,000 cubic yards, and another got $20.87 per yard from 3,000 cubic yards. Craig's Flat and Morris-town got over $5,000,000 from about twenty-two acres, and from about forty-seven acres of the Conly and Gowell ground over $7,000,000 has been taken.

This company divided $264,000 profits in one year from a total expense of $5,500."

"Why are not these gravel mining stocks on the San Francisco boards?" "I suppose mainly because brokers do not like them. When the companies wanted working capital they usually got it by private subscription, in many instances from England, and when once working the returns are so certain there is so little to be said, surmised or promised, because everything is in sight, that there is little chance for manipulation."—N. E. Tribune.

The Unfold Horrors of the New Orleans Cemeteries.

In view of the visits of investigation to be paid some time or other by a Committee of the City Council and another by the Board of Health, to the two Locust Grove cemeteries, on Sixth street, in the rear of the Fourth District, the Times has gathered information concerning those cemeteries which it lays before the public without comment, for there is need of none.

The Locust Grove cemeteries—numbers one and two—occupy two squares of ground between Sixth and Seventh streets, and between Locust and Willow streets, and front on Sixth street. The Sixth street entrance of the nearest of these two cemeteries is just seven squares west of Dryades street. The neighborhood is comparatively thickly settled, especially on the northern and western sides of the cemeteries.

The residents complain of the cemeteries because there constantly arises therefrom an abominable stench which permeates the atmosphere, forces itself into the dwellings near at hand, and, in addition attracts swarms of flies, which insects, after feasting in the graveyards, come into the sleeping and dining-rooms of the houses of the neighborhood.

The stench is caused by the decomposition of dead bodies, which lie but partly buried all over the two cemeteries. The reasons why these bodies are so putridly put under the ground are these: In the first place, these cemeteries are the burial ground of several distinct classes of people; the dead from the parish prisons are buried there, the dead from the boys' houses of refuge, the dead from the City Insane Asylum, from the Small-pox Hospital, and from two or three institutions for the colored people, all the pauper dead in the city, all the dead buried by the two cornermen, and, accordingly, now the time has come for the resurrection of the victims of the late epidemic. It is this constant disinterment which causes the abominable stench—a stench so horrible as arising from a scene so wretched that the very ground itself seems crying to heaven against this outrage upon not only the dead but the living.

No one individual is responsible or to blame for this sickening condition of things. The city has made no provision for burying the dead elsewhere, neither has it taken care to provide sufficient labor to properly "make room" for the newly dead. There is no sexton in charge of these two cemeteries, and the assistant sexton of Lafayette Cemetery No. 2, on Washington street, six squares distant, has to attend also to the two Locust Grove cemeteries. This assistant sexton does his best, to bury all the dead sent to him, but it is easy to be understood that under the circumstances his efforts are rendered futile.

—New Orleans Times.

A Rich Beggar.

A professional beggar has recently died, in Berlin, leaving a fortune of more than a million and a half marks to his heirs. He had many children and grandchildren, and lived a splendid life, but he was a beggar. He was a rich man, but he was a beggar. He was a rich man, but he was a beggar. He was a rich man, but he was a beggar.

"Do you eat thy bread, Nils?" asked little Gretel, coming to his knee.

"You art my blessing," said Nils, stroking her yellow hair; "the pastor is a good man, but he studies much. It is bad for the wits to read much in books."

It was about this time that Nils bought for Hans and Gretel some picture books; wonderful picture books, such as they sell nowhere but at the fair at Konigsberg. There was a long table set up, upon rows of them, not shot up, but set open, so that one could see the gay pictures and even read a little of the stories. Nils stood looking at them when the pastor came by.

"He sees," he said to his companion, "this is the fellow who takes two poor children in payment of a debt and starves himself to feed them."

He drew a silver coin from his pocket and said to Nils, "Why the younglings some picture books."

So Nils bought two books, and fine ones they were I promise you, with such stories of knights and of fairies as make one dream dreams in the daytime.

Hans and Gretel read them sitting under the great tree with their heads close together and their eyes wide open with astonishment.

Our Young Folks.

MY TRAMP.

That's he again! I know his whoop
As he saunters down the lane.
No need to stay till he calls for "grub"
With his face against the pane.
As I sat here in my easy chair
I can read the swagging gait
Of his sinuous feet, but I'll go at once,
My tramp doesn't like to wait.

Little brown breeches and brimless hat!
I could carry me yet for awhile.
And ponder, my young king-demonstrator,
With a mother-pinkie's smile,
The possible future of your young rule.
The imperious doctrine learned
So early, ah! "To me no head!"
As I may that the blessed Savior's arms
Of the store you have never earned.

Could divine, of the little tanned, tired feet,
What sort of a road, by and by.
They would travel space, and at even time
To what sort of home would lie.

"No head! no head!" would he find them there?
Those are all the names he knows
For the great God, who has made the home,
For the fullness, the repose.

Ah, simple cheek and chestnut curls
That are lying upon my breast!
I wonder if this is typical
Of the day's end and the rest!

And I lay my little, worn-out tramp
On his little bed all white,
As I may that the blessed Savior's arms
May gather him in that night.

THE FAIRIES OF THE WENGERN MOUNTAIN.

Whatever you may think, there are still fairies in the Wengern Mountains. Hans and Gretel knew it quite well, and so did Nils the cubbler. You might have said Nils was unfortunate, for he was lame and crooked, and though he was not one of his kin to say "God bless thee," so, as nobody cared for him, like that in one they belonged to him, for the old men at the alms-house, for the stray dogs that slunk about the alleys, but especially for Hans and Gretel, who must have been cold and hungry but for him. No doubt Nils himself was sometimes hungry, since the loaf that would have made one very comfortable was hardly enough for three, but then the children had a claim upon Nils; he had taken them for debt, and so in one they belonged to him. Their father was Peter Larsen, who had been a clock-maker when there were any way to buy clocks at Brundon, but who lay dying one morning between dusk and daylight with no one to sit by him but Nils the cubbler.

"Ah, Nils," said Peter, "I am going without ever paying you the money I owe you."

"It does not matter," said Nils, cheerfully. "I will take the tools for the debt. Some man may like to buy them."

"But the tools are pledged to the miller; he takes them away this evening."

"So! Then I will take the cow, and the children can still have their milk."

"It is the butcher who has the cow; he drove her off on a Friday."

"So! Then I should like the clock. It is a famous thing to have a clock like that in one's house to cry the hour when one lies awake."

"The clock is pledged to the doctor and the bed to Hanne Petersen," said the sick man, growing blue and pinched as he spoke. "Everything is pledged, but the children, and they must starve."

"Why, then," said Nils, smiling his hands together, "I will even take the children. Look you, Peter, I will take them for the debt."

He put his hands on Gretel and Hans, who stood very still and frightened on either side of him, and at that moment the sun rose. It shone into the sick man's face, and filled the room with a strange, wonderful light. No one spoke, neither Nils nor Peter; they only looked at each other. By and by Gretel went to the window and drew the curtain.

"The sun blinds my father," she said.

"He does not see it; he is in greater light," said Nils.

Then he took the children by the hand and led them away, but at the door he turned back and went to the bedside.

"Wherever you have gone," he said to the dead man, "you may know that I have taken the children. I will answer for them at the judgment."

Afterwards the miller took away the tools, and Hanne Petersen came for the bed, and the great clock ticked in the doctor's hall, and nothing was left to the dead man but the box in which he was carried away to burial; but he looked so peaceful I wept, but there is an end of everything, whether joy or sorrow, and they were soon comforted. They had almost forgotten that they were orphans when one day the pastor stopped to say to Nils:

"These children should not eat your bread. They would be cared for at the alms-house."

Nils bowed very respectfully.

"I have taken them for debt," he said. "In these times one takes what he can get."

The pastor shook his head, and rode on laughing.

"Do you eat thy bread, Nils?" asked little Gretel, coming to his knee.

"You art my blessing," said Nils, stroking her yellow hair; "the pastor is a good man, but he studies much. It is bad for the wits to read much in books."

It was about this time that Nils bought for Hans and Gretel some picture books; wonderful picture books, such as they sell nowhere but at the fair at Konigsberg. There was a long table set up, upon rows of them, not shot up, but set open, so that one could see the gay pictures and even read a little of the stories. Nils stood looking at them when the pastor came by.

"He sees," he said to his companion, "this is the fellow who takes two poor children in payment of a debt and starves himself to feed them."

He drew a silver coin from his pocket and said to Nils, "Why the younglings some picture books."

So Nils bought two books, and fine ones they were I promise you, with such stories of knights and of fairies as make one dream dreams in the daytime.

Hans and Gretel read them sitting under the great tree with their heads close together and their eyes wide open with astonishment.

"Dost think they are true?" asked Gretel.

"Not now," said Hans; "there were once fairies many years ago; it must have been rare to live in those days."

But Nils said he was not sure. If one were good and innocent and loved every living creature he might see and hear a great deal that could not well be told. As for the fairies, it might be and it might not be; stranger things were happening every day; men had seen angels, aye, and talked with them so well not with fairies?

"Surely," said Gretel. "Why not?" and she looked every day to see them.

"I know what I will ask them," she said to herself. "It is that they will make Nils woe of his crooked back, and fill his pockets with plenty of shillings, so that he can have white bread every day and not work so early and so late."

Every day Hans and Gretel went to the forest to gather wood, and sometimes when there had been a storm they brought home great loads of branches, so that there was already a pile nearly as high as the cottage.

"See what a thing it is to have children," Nils would say as he looked at it. "I warrant me many a man in Brundon envies me my good luck."

"That is nothing," Hans would say, proudly; "when I am a man thou shalt have a house like the farmers, with wood for the king to burn, and sit all day and stir the fire till the sparks fly out of the chimney."

"That will be famous," Nils would answer. "Make haste, Hans, and grow well."

One day in the forest Gretel could not gather wood because her arm was lame, so she brought her knitting and sat under a tree, and read over again the story of Grimelwald the giant. Hans gathered his bundle and laid it ready, and then he said:

"Stay you here, Gretel, and I will run through the wood to Hanne Petersen, to see if she has the cloth ready for my coat."

Gretel nodded, and Hans ran away. She could see him for a long time down the straight, broad road until he turned aside among the trees, and then Gretel was quite alone. A squirrel ran past way down a great tree and looked at her, and rushed back in great alarm. A woodpecker with a scarlet cap on his head hammered away at a worm-eaten trunk, and somewhere, up among the boughs, a strange bird cried, "O-le-o-le-o-le!"

"Now would be the time for the fairies," thought Gretel, and she folded her hands upon her knitting and sat so quiet, as if with the tools for the debt. The bushes and hopped slowly across the path. How still the world was! She could only hear now and then a dry twig snapping, or a great leaf in velvet and gold go trampling along like a king's horseman. The sunshine came straight through the leaves, and made Gretel's eyes feel as if two soft, warm fingers were pressing down the lids. The woods were in a quiet, all green and gold, and further and further off the strange birds sang, "O-le-o-le-o-le!" as if it called some one, but Gretel was asleep.

By and by Hans came running along the path. He had been gone a long time, and as he came he called, "Gretel! Gretel!"

Gretel sat up and rubbed her eyes. Her thoughts were like birds that had flown away on their own errands, but now they came slowly back and she began to remember. There was the pile of wood, and yonder came Hans. Here was her handkerchief and her knitting, and the book in which she was reading, and her head was like a king's horseman. The picture of Grimelwald? Yellow leaves, do you think, that had fluttered down from the tree? Ah, no! but a handful of round, yellow gold pieces—gold! Ho! ho! money as over had been seen in Brundon. Gretel fairly screamed with delight, yet dared not touch it.

"What is it?" asked Hans, coming up quite out of breath.

"The fairies," said Gretel, "they have brought the gold for Nils."

"It is good money," said Hans, biting the pieces in his teeth; but he knew no more than Gretel who had brought it.

"Let us sit down and wait," said Gretel, "it might be they would come back."

"No," said Hans, "the money in my handkerchief, Gretel, and we will go quickly home to Nils."

So they went, Hans with his great bundle of wood, and Gretel with the money held fast in the handkerchief. At the Brundon road Hans stopped to rest.

"See," he said, "there have been horseshoes in the wood; here is where they came out."

"No one came through the wood," said Gretel; but she, too, saw the tracks of the horses coming out upon the dusty road.

"Feel the gold, Gretel," said Hans; "is it still here?"

"It is still here," said Gretel, pinching the money.

"Then it is not fairy gold, or it would have vanished when we came out of the wood," said Hans, with a great deal of satisfaction.

When they showed the money to Nils he was almost as much astonished as Gretel. He laid it on his palm and looked at it, and rubbed his grizzled chin. But when Hans spoke of the horses, he said:

"O, aye, the horses; well, I might have thought of that. It was the pastor and the young prince who went riding through the wood."

"No one came through the wood," said Gretel.

"It might be," said Hans; "I was at Hanne Petersen's, and ran, to bring her some water, to the spring in the hollow, and Gretel must have been asleep."

"Well, well," said Nils, "we will put the money in the blue jug, and tell nobody of it. I shall myself go to the pastor."

Gretel watched him put away the money. Every piece fell with a loud "clink" to the bottom of the jug.

"That is mine," said Nils, laughing. "It is good money; it will bring a blessing to the house."

Before Gretel went to bed she climbed up to look in the jug and to shake it. "It is still there," she said.

When the children were asleep Nils took the gold pieces and went away to the pastor. The pastor smiled when he saw him coming, and made him sit down and tell the story.

"Do you think it is fairy money?" asked Nils, with a funny twinkle in his eye.

"No doubt," said the pastor. "If the fairies ever bring gold they would be sure to leave it in the lap of a good child who sat asleep under a tree, with her knitting and her book; and that is what the young prince said when we rode through the wood to-day."

"Aye," said Nils, nodding wisely.

"And that you, my prince, who means to be the father of his people, will himself see that nothing is lacking to a man who takes the bread from his own mouth and gives it to fatherless children."

"So," said Nils, stupidly.

"I told him you were obstinate and simple-headed, and would not hear to good advice, but were determined to keep the children from the alms-house."

"Yes," said Nils, "that is it. I must answer for them at the judgment; I said so to their father when he lay dead."

The pastor took his great Bible and laid it on his knees.

"Listen to the Nils."

"Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." And this: "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again."

"That is good," said Nils, and he went away very light of heart, though his back ached and his legs were tired with so much walking.

Gretel went to the blue jug as soon as she was awake in the morning.

"It is still there," she said. "I thought I must have dreamed it." But then she looked very sorrowful. It was because she was ashamed with traditions of her stockings and warm hands, and even picture books, and a purse with gold pieces, and every package held a earl.

From the Fairies of the Wengern Mountains.

I think the pastor knew something about it, but he could never be made to tell.—Emily Huntington Miller, in Christian Union.

op to look in the jug and to shake it. "It is still there," she said.

When the children were asleep Nils took the gold pieces and went away to the pastor. The pastor smiled when he saw him coming, and made him sit down and tell the story.

"Do you think it is fairy money?" asked Nils, with a funny twinkle in his eye.

"No doubt," said the pastor. "If the fairies ever bring gold they would be sure to leave it in the lap of a good child who sat asleep under a tree, with her knitting and her book; and that is what the young prince said when we rode through the wood to-day."

"Aye," said Nils, nodding wisely.

"And that you, my prince, who means to be the father of his people, will himself see that nothing is lacking to a man who takes the bread from his own mouth and gives it to fatherless children."

"So," said Nils, stupidly.

"I told him you were obstinate and simple-headed, and would not hear to good advice, but were determined to keep the children from the alms-house."

"Yes," said Nils, "that is it. I must answer for them at the judgment; I said so to their father when he lay dead."

The pastor took his great Bible and laid it on his knees.

"Listen to

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS. SHERIFF'S LICENSE. NOTICE.

TO MERCHANTS, TRADERS, AND OTHERS.

All persons and bodies corporate or politic in Garrett county, who are, or shall be, engaged in any business, or shall be doing any act or thing, or shall be in the possession of any house or place, for any purpose, for which a license is made necessary by the laws of Maryland, are hereby warned that the license for the year 1897, will be issued on or before the

FIRST DAY OF MAY, 1897, under the penalties prescribed by said law, for the infraction thereof. Those interested are notified of the following requirements of the License Law:

TRADERS' LICENSES.

The amount to be paid by Traders for a license (the amount of stock at the present season of sale to be given under said law) as follows:

If the applicant's stock in trade does not exceed	$100	$12 00
Over 100 and not over	$2,000	15 00
"	2,000	20 00
"	4,000	25 00
"	6,000	30 00
"	8,000	35 00
"	10,000	40 00
"	12,000	45 00
"	14,000	50 00
"	16,000	55 00
"	18,000	60 00
"	20,000	65 00
"	22,000	70 00
"	24,000	75 00
"	26,000	80 00
"	28,000	85 00
"	30,000	90 00
"	32,000	95 00
"	34,000	100 00
"	36,000	105 00
"	38,000	110 00
"	40,000	115 00
"	42,000	120 00
"	44,000	125 00
"	46,000	130 00
"	48,000	135 00
"	50,000	140 00
"	52,000	145 00
"	54,000	150 00
"	56,000	155 00
"	58,000	160 00
"	60,000	165 00
"	62,000	170 00
"	64,000	175 00
"	66,000	180 00
"	68,000	185 00
"	70,000	190 00
"	72,000	195 00
"	74,000	200 00
"	76,000	205 00
"	78,000	210 00
"	80,000	215 00
"	82,000	220 00
"	84,000	225 00
"	86,000	230 00
"	88,000	235 00
"	90,000	240 00
"	92,000	245 00
"	94,000	250 00
"	96,000	255 00
"	98,000	260 00
"	100,000	265 00
"	102,000	270 00
"	104,000	275 00
"	106,000	280 00
"	108,000	285 00
"	110,000	290 00
"	112,000	295 00
"	114,000	300 00
"	116,000	305 00
"	118,000	310 00
"	120,000	315 00
"	122,000	320 00
"	124,000	325 00
"	126,000	330 00
"	128,000	335 00
"	130,000	340 00
"	132,000	345 00
"	134,000	350 00
"	136,000	355 00
"	138,000	360 00
"	140,000	365 00
"	142,000	370 00
"	144,000	375 00
"	146,000	380 00
"	148,000	385 00
"	150,000	390 00
"	152,000	395 00
"	154,000	400 00
"	156,000	405 00
"	158,000	410 00
"	160,000	415 00
"	162,000	420 00
"	164,000	425 00
"	166,000	430 00
"	168,000	435 00
"	170,000	440 00
"	172,000	445 00
"	174,000	450 00
"	176,000	455 00
"	178,000	460 00
"	180,000	465 00
"	182,000	470 00
"	184,000	475 00
"	186,000	480 00
"	188,000	485 00
"	190,000	490 00
"	192,000	495 00
"	194,000	500 00
"	196,000	505 00
"	198,000	510 00
"	200,000	515 00
"	202,000	520 00
"	204,000	525 00
"	206,000	530 00
"	208,000	535 00
"	210,000	540 00
"	212,000	545 00
"	214,000	550 00
"	216,000	555 00
"	218,000	560 00
"	220,000	565 00
"	222,000	570 00
"	224,000	575 00
"	226,000	580 00
"	228,000	585 00
"	230,000	590 00
"	232,000	595 00
"	234,000	600 00
"	236,000	605 00
"	238,000	610 00
"	240,000	615 00
"	242,000	620 00
"	244,000	625 00
"	246,000	630 00
"	248,000	635 00
"	250,000	640 00
"	252,000	645 00
"	254,000	650 00
"	256,000	655 00
"	258,000	660 00
"	260,000	665 00
"	262,000	670 00
"	264,000	675 00
"	266,000	680 00
"	268,000	685 00
"	270,000	690 00
"	272,000	695 00
"	274,000	700 00
"	276,000	705 00
"	278,000	710 00
"	280,000	715 00
"	282,000	720 00
"	284,000	725 00
"	286,000	730 00
"	288,000	735 00
"	290,000	740 00
"	292,000	745 00
"	294,000	750 00
"	296,000	755 00
"	298,000	760 00
"	300,000	765 00
"	302,000	770 00
"	304,000	775 00
"	306,000	780 00
"	308,000	785 00
"	310,000	790 00
"	312,000	795 00
"	314,000	800 00
"	316,000	805 00
"	318,000	810 00
"	320,000	815 00
"	322,000	820 00
"	324,000	825 00
"	326,000	830 00
"	328,000	835 00
"	330,000	840 00
"	332,000	845 00
"	334,000	850 00
"	336,000	855 00
"	338,000	860 00
"	340,000	865 00
"	342,000	870 00
"	344,000	875 00
"	346,000	880 00
"	348,000	885 00
"	350,000	890 00
"	352,000	895 00
"	354,000	900 00
"	356,000	905 00
"	358,000	910 00
"	360,000	915 00
"	362,000	920 00
"	364,000	925 00
"	366,000	930 00
"	368,000	935 00
"	370,000	940 00
"	372,000	945 00
"	374,000	950 00
"	376,000	955 00
"	378,000	960 00
"	380,000	965 00
"	382,000	970 00
"	384,000	975 00
"	386,000	980 00
"	388,000	985 00
"	390,000	990 00
"	392,000	995 00
"	394,000	1,000 00
"	396,000	1,005 00
"	398,000	1,010 00
"	400,000	1,015 00
"	402,000	1,020 00
"	404,000	1,025 00
"	406,000	1,030 00
"	408,000	1,035 00
"	410,000	1,040 00
"	412,000	1,045 00
"	414,000	1,050 00
"	416,000	1,055 00
"	418,000	1,060 00
"	420,000	1,065 00
"	422,000	1,070 00
"	424,000	1,075 00
"	426,000	1,080 00
"	428,000	1,085 00
"	430,000	1,090 00
"	432,000	1,095 00
"	434,000	1,100 00
"	436,000	1,105 00
"	438,000	1,110 00
"	440,000	1,115 00
"	442,000	1,120 00
"	444,000	1,125 00
"	446,000	1,130 00
"	448,000	1,135 00
"	450,000	1,140 00
"	452,000	1,145 00
"	454,000	1,150 00
"	456,000	1,155 00
"	458,000	1,160 00
"	460,000	1,165 00
"	462,000	1,170 00
"	464,000	1,175 00
"	466,000	1,180 00
"	468,000	1,185 00
"	470,000	1,190 00
"	472,000	1,195 00
"	474,000	1,200 00
"	476,000	1,205 00
"	478,000	1,210 00
"	480,000	1,215 00
"	482,000	1,220 00
"	484,000	1,225 00
"	486,000	1,230 00
"	488,000	1,235 00
"	490,000	1,240 00
"	492,000	1,245 00
"	494,000	1,250 00
"	496,000	1,255 00
"	498,000	1,260 00
"	500,000	1,265 00
"	502,000	1,270 00
"	504,000	1,275 00
"	506,000	1,280 00
"	508,000	1,285 00
"	510,000	1,290 00
"	512,000	1,295 00
"	514,000	1,300 00
"	516,000	1,305 00
"	518,000	1,310 00
"	520,000	1,315 00
"	522,000	1,320 00
"	524,000	1,325 00
"	526,000	1,330 00
"	528,000	1,335 00
"	530,000	1,340 00
"	532,000	1,345 00
"	534,000	1,350 00
"	536,000	1,355 00
"	538,000	1,360 00
"	540,000	1,365 00
"	542,000	1,370 00
"	544,000	1,375 00
"	546,000	1,380 00
"	548,000	1,385 00
"	550,000	1,390 00
"	552,000	1,395 00
"	554,000	1,400 00
"	556,000	1,405 00
"	558,000	1,410 00
"	560,000	1,415 00
"	562,000	1,420 00
"	564,000	1,425 00
"	566,000	1,430 00
"	568,000	1,435 00
"	570,000	1,440 00
"	572,000	1,445 00
"	574,000	1,450 00
"	576,000	1,455 00
"	578,000	1,460 00
"	580,000	1,465 00
"	582,000	1,470 00
"	584,000	1,475 00
"	586,000	1,480 00
"	588,000	1,485 00
"	590,000	1,490 00
"	592,000	1,495 00
"	594,000	1,500 00
"	596,000	1,505 00
"	598,000	1,510 00
"	600,000	1,515 00
"	602,000	1,520 00
"	604,000	1,525 00
"	606,000	1,530 00
"	608,000	1,535 00
"	610,000	1,540 00
"	612,000	1,545 00
"	614,000	1,550 00
"	616,000	1,555 00
"	618,000	1,560 00
"	620,000	1,565 00
"	622,000	1,570 00
"	624,000	1,575 00
"	626,000	1,580 00
"	628,000	1,585 00
"	630,000	1,590 00
"	632,000	1,595 00
"	634,000	1,600 00
"	636,000	1,605 00
"	638,000	1,610 00
"	640,000	1,615 00
"	642,000	1,620 00
"	644,000	1,625 00
"	646,000	1,630 00
"	648,000	1,635 00
"	650,000	1,640 00
"	652,000	1,645 00
"	654,000	1,650 00
"	656,000	1,655 00
"	658,000	1,660 00
"	660,000	1,665 00
"	662,000	1,670 00
"	664,000	1,675 00
"	666,000	1,680 00
"	668,000	1,685 00
"	670,000	1,690 00
"	672,000	1,695 00
"	674,000	1,700 00
"	676,000	1,705 00
"	678,000	1,710 00
"	680,000	1,715 00
"	682,000	1,720 00
"	684,000	1,725 00
"	686,000	1,730 00
"	688,000	1,735 00
"	690,000	1,740 00
"	692,000	1,745 00
"	694,000	1,750 00
"	696,000	1,755 00
"	698,000	1,760 00
"	700,000	1,765 00
"	702,000	1,770 00
"	704,000	1,775 00
"	706,000	1,780 00
"	708,000	1,785 00
"	710,000	1,790 00
"	712,000	1,795 00
"	714,000	1,800 00
"	716,000	1,805 00
"	718,000	1,810 00
"	720,000	1,815 00
"	722,000	1,820 00
"	724,000	1,825 00
"	726,000	1,830 00
"	728,000

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1879.

NUMBER 7

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Stationery, etc.,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

I. W. STAINAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

A. GRANT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Stationery, etc.,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson & Hill Streets.

BOARDING HOUSES.

MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.

DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRE,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office on Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.

MILLS.

CRIST AND SINGLE MILLS,
PETER CRIST, Proprietor,
Water Street.

OAKLAND WOOLLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Shoup's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

MAISONS.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence in First street.

LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEON,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Furniture and Linens.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candles, Furniture, Etc., etc. Physician's prescriptions carefully compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leave orders at Bush's store.

V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINGELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GABRIEL CO., MD.

WILL practice in the Courts of Garrett and
Allegany Counties, Md.
Collections promptly attended to. d2-3

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE IN DEWEY'S BUILDING,
(Lower Floor.)

Particular attention given to conveying,
investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. jell-ly

J. W. VEITEL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GABRIEL CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
Ky. and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 24-17

THO. J. PEDDICO, A. B. GOSDER, PEDDICO & GOSDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OAKLAND, GABRIEL CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of
West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 24-17

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY IN THE
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
April 13-17

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR.

OAKLAND, MD.

Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has had in his
usual large stock of

Spring and Summer Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most

Neat and Fashionable Manner.

He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measure for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but

Guarantees a Perfect Fit.

22-23 All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

850 ACRES

Good Land

For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopole
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, NO. 31—INSOLVENTS—L. C.

STAINAKER VS HIS CREDITORS. 1878.
Ordered, this 1st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stainaker give notice in his creditor's notices and creditors, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stainaker to appear in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, to answer such his property as a judgment creditor, and to answer or satisfy his judgment creditor, and to be
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first
Monday of May next, as such notice.

W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett County.

True Copy—Test—
W. H. TOWER, Clerk.

WHEELER'S LIVER PILLS

For Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache,
and all the ailments arising from a disordered Liver. Sold by all Druggists.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 13, 1879.

PROSPERITY RESTORED.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The address of Eliphaz, vindicating God's government over the affairs of men, continues, until it is interrupted by the coming of an ostentatious which rolls across the desert.
Then out of the whirlwind and the thunder
cloud, the voice of the Almighty is heard.
God speaks in his own person, proclaiming
his majesty, and rebuking the narrow spirit
both of Job and his three friends, one for his presumption, the others for their injustice.
At the close of his revelation, he displays
some illustrations of his omniscience and omnipotence in creation. When the Vapors speak, Job confesses his error, and humbles himself before the Lord. His three friends are rebuked for not following his example of repentance, and are commanded to offer a sacrifice for their sin, and obtain "to let y costs of Job in their behalf. At the moment of his prayer for them, the friends of Job's cousin is born, and a new era of health and prosperity begins.

Job 42, 1-10.

Memory Verse, 1-6, 10.

1. Then Job answered the Lord, and said,
2. I know that thou canst do every thing, and that nothing can be withholden from thee.

3. Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; I clung to words which I knew not.

4. I heard, I beseech thee, and I will speak: I will demand of thee, and thou shalt answer me.

5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee.

6. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7. And thou, after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, the Lord said
to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends;
for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

8. Therefore take unto you seven bullocks and seven asses, and go to my servant
Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; and my servant Job shall pray for you:
for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant
Job.

9. So Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went and did as the Lord commanded them: the Lord also accepted Job's sacrifice.

10. And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before.

HOME READINGS.

M. Prosperity restored, Job 42, 1-10.

N. Prayer for prosperity, Job 42, 1-10.

O. Praise of prosperity, Job 42, 1-10.

P. The danger of prosperity, Job 42, 1-10.

Q. The prosperity of the wicked, Job 42, 1-10.

R. The way to prosperity, Job 42, 1-10.

S. True prosperity, Matt. 6, 19-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Behold, we can thank happy which endure, James 5, 11.

LESSON HYMN, S. M.

How tender is thy hand,
O Lord most gracious Lord;
Almighty God, our God,
And left us at thy word.

Now will we bless the Lord,
And in his strength endure;
For ever he will be our God,
For there is none beside.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

Who were Job's friends? Read his story.
shake three plumes: 1. Job prospered;
2. Job in affliction; 3. Job restored; and see what differences are apparent in his circumstances.

1. PENTECOST, v. 1-4, Ps. 51, 1-4.

What had the Lord said to Job?

What acknowledgment of God did Job
make? Ans. Job—see, Job—1.

What confession did he make? Job 42, 5.

How do you explain Job's boldness?
Job 42, 5.

How had he known God before?

How does he now know him? Job 42, 7-10.

What has this to do with his own view
of God? Ans. Job—see, Job—1.

May we come boldly to see plainly?
Full liberty?

1. PRAYER, v. 7-10; Prov. 15, 8.

What proof have we of Job's acceptance?

When did God need? Job 42, 5.

What does this show about the divine character? Job 42, 5.

How were these sinners to come to God?
Through whom? Job 42, 5.

By whom do we come? 1 Tim. 2, 5.

What do we bring? Ps. 66, 15.

How have you come?

3. PROSPERITY, v. 10; Mark 10, 29, 30.

What great change took place in Job's condition?

For what reasons?

At what special time?

When was the author of this change?

By whom do we come? 1 Tim. 2, 5.

In how much was he better off than before?

Does God deal thus with his people now?

Have you proved him by a faith like Job's?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. Of our sinfulness before God?

2. Of the necessity of a mediator?

3. Of God's goodness to them that trust him?

WORKS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Ask God to hold his candle and show you your sinful heart.

2. Then give him the heart, to be made clean by his blood.

3. In all trouble trust him and he will deliver.

4. Say ye to the righteous, that I shall be well with him. Isa. 43, 10.

DOCTRINAL RECAPITULATION: God's rewarding
mercy. 2 Chron. 20, 26, 27.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. When God's wisdom perceives that trouble has wrought its perfect work, his mercy will be the more abundant.

2. The mercy of God is closely connected with his might. v. 2.

3. The mercies of God, as well as the impenitence of God, are to be understood.

4. Statute man must cast himself on the mercy of God as his only hope. v. 4.

5. The enjoyment of God's mercies requires prayer on the part of man. v. 5.

6. The mercies of God are most abundant to those who forget themselves in the needs of others. v. 10.

The Negro Migration.

The exodus of Louisiana and Mississippi negroes has assumed proportions which are causing great alarm
and actual distress in those states.

The New Orleans Times frankly admits that the movement is fraught with disaster to the industrial interests of the state, and urges that an organized effort be made to counteract
it. It significantly says: "As a last recourse, however, something must be done to persuade the negroes to move into the sugar region, where they will find a more congenial
and profitable life."

The implication here is that bulldozing and dispossessing treatment have been resorted to, and that the negroes
are being driven from their homes.

That the negroes are the best field workers in existence, and that this state will go to the dogs without them. As showing the effect the movement is having on the prosperity of the state, it says:

"Not a week ago came an extensive planter to this city to arrange for advances on his coming crop. He made satisfactory arrangements and was on the point of returning home when there arrived a telegram telling him
his hands had left. In consequence,
his arrangements had to be cancelled,
and he is a ruined man. Every day
the same scene is enacted in this city.
The cotton planter wishes advances;
the commission merchants ask what are his prospects. What, indeed, are his prospects under the present condition of things?"

Similar complaints come from Mississippi. Bankers refuse to lend money on real estate security, merchants are compelled to refuse advances to planters on the security of the crops, credit has been destroyed and distress and ruin threaten all interests.

Nor are there many gleams of brightness in the prospect for the migrating negroes. They are destitute and miserably clad, and going from the low, wet lands and tropical heats of Mississippi and Louisiana to the cold, bleak prairies of Kansas, they must suffer greatly. They are ignorant in the extreme. The St.
Louis correspondent of the New York Tribune mentions that an offer was made to employ several hundred in building an Iowa railroad, but the negroes got the idea into their heads that Iowa was down South, and they wanted to go nowhere but to Kansas,
which they regarded as the special friend of the colored race. With the well-known benevolence of negroes
to their own people, the colored people of St. Louis have cared for the emigrants to the best of their ability,
and Eastern societies are already sending some money and making arrangements to organize a plan of systematic aid. A national convention of colored men, which is to meet at Nashville, is expected to take action on the matter, and it is proposed that another convention shall be held at Philadelphia to form a national aid committee for the purpose of aiding the emigration of colored men from the South to the West.

That such emigration will be beneficial to those who participate in it we can not think possible. Destitute negro families are not fitted for contending with the rigors of a Kansas
winter, and the demand for farm hands in that state is not so great as to assure the colored laborers with employment sufficiently remunerative for the support of themselves and families. Doubtless the emigrants will experience a good deal of distress and suffering. The beneficial influence of the movement will be felt in the amelioration of the condition of the colored people in the Mississippi valley. The planters have been convinced of the necessity of protecting and dealing fairly with their negro laborers. Heretofore the negro tenant has been charged a heavy rent in cotton—said to be equivalent to $10 per acre, for land merely worth over $25. He must pay his landlord for ginning and buy his supplies from him at exorbitant rates. Attempts to secure lower rentals by combined action have been defeated by threats and terrorism.
Speaker Monroe, of the Louisiana
House of Representatives, testified that it was regarded as incendiary
for a Republican orator to stir up the indignation of the negroes by telling them that the cash price of the cotton
they were paying the planters 18 cents a pound for, was 8 or 10 cents a pound. The planters will now have to pursue a different policy. The right of the negroes to make the best terms they can will have to be recognized, and what was before presumption that called for repression will now be tolerated as among the privileges of freedom. The ability of the negroes to change their location will also turn public sentiment against bull-doizing.

An illustration of this effect is afforded by a recent occurrence in Wilkinson county, Miss. One of the rifle clubs, just by way of a little fun, got their masks on one night and rode about the county, firing guns to give the negroes a good scare, but committing no acts of violence. The frightened colored people next day abandoned the plantations and gathered together at the county seat.
The planters, to whom every day
was valuable, were very indignant at the interruption to field work and had some of the leaders of the midnight raid arrested. News of their incarceration reached the White League clubs of West Feliciana parish, on the opposite side of the Mississippi, in Louisiana, and a company marched to the jail and compelled their release. The Mississippi planters were greatly incensed
at this action, and finding the local authorities unwilling or unable to enforce the law, they are organizing for self protection and arming their laborers, one of the leading negroes
on each plantation being appointed a captain of this home guard.
Such incidents as these show that when bull-dozing comes in direct collision with the interests of the planters they can act energetically for its suppression, and now that the negro exodus has shown the states of the lower Mississippi valley how absolutely essential the negroes are to their prosperity, they will be held in much higher appreciation by those communities.—Baltimore American.

Signs of the Times.

According to the testimony of nearly every exchange paper, the industrial and mercantile activity
already noted in our city press is ob-servable throughout the country.

The Chicago Times says: "The same good reports that Chicago's leading wholesale merchants have been giving all the month are still made. Trade, they almost unanimously affirm, is more than equal to what they had generally anticipated,
and the distribution of merchandise is constantly increasing. From all points of the compass, good mail orders are daily arriving, while the number of interior merchants in attendance at the jobbing houses is steadily increasing. They bring good accounts of trade and back up their statements by liberal purchases in a manner that clinches their statements as fully authentic. Money in the country, they say, is plentier than for many seasons past, and one of the most convincing indications of the better times is the increasing tendency of the agricultural population to spend their money at the stores for clothing, household goods and farming implements. The farmers have paid off a very large portion of their indebtedness, and now that old accounts are about squared up, they are improving their farms, extending their grain acreage, and are buying timber and other materials to be used in building barns, fences, etc.
Hence, Chicago lumber dealers, as well as dealer in brick, lime, plaster, hardware, farming implements, paints
and oils, are already doing a good business, and the very best reports
are made by jobbers of dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, hats and caps, etc. Drugs are active, and oils sell freely, while sales of baggage
and leather are fair for the season.
Fish remain active, and prices remain unusually firm, owing to the reduced supplies in this city, and at Boston and other Eastern markets.
Teas are rather active, and Japan
teas are in particularly good request,
sales being constantly increasing.
Japan appears to be superseding China as a tea producing country for the Northwest, and tea dealers are somewhat surprised at the large orders lately received."

The Santa Barbara Press says that
"the return of good times is indicated by the preparation of the business men of Santa Barbara for the summer trade. The Ancon on her last trip brought 75 tons of freight, and the Orizaba yesterday brought 40 tons. This freight was nearly all for old standard houses, the managers of which are not likely to be deceived
in the signs of the times."

The Massachusetts papers print
numerous items of factories,

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1879.

Hon. Milton G. Urner has our thanks for full files of the Congress-sional Record to date.

The Cincinnati Gazette asks War
Democrats how they like the political situation, "Is it what they fought for?"

The Republican triumph in Cincinnati on Monday is more than an offset for the accidental Democratic plurality in Chicago last week.

The Pittsburgh Commercial-Gazette's
joy over the general Republican success along the whole line Monday, finds expression in a picture of "That Same Old Coon," at the head of its telegraphic news columns.

The result of the Spring elections
Monday is very encouraging to Republicans. In Cincinnati and throughout the State of Ohio the Republicans made large gains, as well as in the States of Michigan,
Iowa, and Connecticut.

Two hundred and fifty prominent South Carolina Democrats are to be tried before Judge Bond at Charleston for violation of election laws. It is proposed, in selecting jurors to apply the test oath. The cases are causing great alarm in Southern political circles.

Concerning the great debate in the House, the New York Times says:
"The Republicans feel that they are in the presence of an old enemy under a new flag, and that having saved
the Union, the country will stand by them in their fight for the government. The anxiety of Southern Senators to explain shows that they comprehend the drift of events."

New York Times: "The South
cannot fail to be rehabilitated in time,
and put in the enjoyment of great prosperity. But it must be in other hands, and under the prevalence of a different spirit. The heritage of the dark times yet remains. There must come up new generations, more and more free from the old taint, and there must come in from other quarters, as the spirit of oppression and intolerance gives way, new blood and new purposes. Then, and not till then, can the sectional lines disappear from our map, and the South be reduced to a point of the compass in one common and homogeneous nationality."

The report on the Fitz John Porter case reversing the decision of the former court-martial is at last made public. It claims everything for General Porter, and reflects severely upon the ability and competency of Gen. Pope to fill the position he held in August, 1862. If the findings of this court are true, or based upon truth—and every avenue of information possible was at its disposal—General Porter's dismissal from the service was unwarrantable, unjust and cruel, and every one should be glad that at last tardy justice has been meted out to him, and that the cloud of dishonor which has hung over the life of a brave soldier is lifted. There is little doubt but that the President will act upon the recommendations of the court.

The subscriptions offered to the four-per-cent. bonds on Friday last amounted to $120,000,000, one of the most remarkable financial events of recent times. It is true that some $60,000,000 were declined by the Secretary of Treasury, on the ground that more was offered than was necessary to call in the remaining outstanding five-twelves. But the offer by the New York banks was none
the less genuine and showed how high is the standing of the four per-cent. This leaves only the bonds of 1881 unsold for, and these are not yet due. With this exception the whole bonded debt of the United States has now been reduced from a six-per-cent. to a lower rate of interest. The amount called in since resumption is $283,000,000, making an annual saving interest of nearly $7,000,000. This is one of the successes of resumption which the most rabid inflationist cannot gainsay.— Balto. Gazette.

General Garfield's Speech.

The country will thank General
Garfield for his clear and bold speech. He has expressed with admirable force the sentiments and the determination of that great loyal constitutional party which saved the Nation from open assault in war, and will save it now from revolutionary violence which is offered in the disguise of peace. He said just enough about the merits of the statutes in controversy to show that there is no sincerity in the protests which are put forward by the Democratic party
as reasons for the demanded repeal.
The election laws were originally introduced into Congress by a Democratic Senator, and they were passed by Democratic votes; and the principle of Federal intervention upon which they rest has always been sustained by the Democratic party when it has seen anything to gain by the application of such laws. These points were well pointed and driven home by a few telling blows. There was no meeting them. The Democrats fell back in confusion.

But the great issue in this struggle
is not the fate of the election laws,
but the integrity of the Constitution.
The Democratic faction has deliberately undertaken to exercise powers
which the Constitution denies to it,
and has threatened to destroy the Government if we do not stand aside and let it have its will. Here, as General Garfield well says, the two parties take their respective stands, and here the momentous trial must be decided. Nothing could be better than the manner in which he shows how the Government of the United States "might be utterly annihilated without the firing of a gun." The people might refuse to elect Representatives. The State might refuse to elect Senators. In either case the Government would be absolutely destroyed, and there would be no process of compulsion. Or a bare majority of one House might bind itself in caucus to adjourn at the moment of meeting each day, and might continue that course until the Government died of inanition. It may seem remarkable that the framers of the Constitution "should have left the whole side of the fabric of Government open to such deadly assaults." But they relied upon the sovereignty of the Nation,
which they believed would never fail
in love of country and sense of obligation to public duty. "Now, for the first time in our history, for the first time in at least two centuries
in the history of English-speaking people, has it been proposed that these voluntary powers shall be used for the destruction of the Government." Our theory of law is free consent. "Nothing in this republic
can be a law that has not the free consent of the House, the free consent of the Senate, and the free consent of the Executive. Or, if the Executive refuses his free consent, then it must have the free consent of two-thirds of each body."

Free consent is the foundation rock of all our institutions." This is the principle which the revolutionists are determined to set aside. Two weeks ago they declared that the Government should stop unless the Senate yielded to the demand of the House.
Now they declare that the Government shall stop unless the Executive yield and surrender his constitutional functions. "I am not arguing at present," continues General Garfield, "as to the merits of your three amendments at all; I am speaking of your methods; and I say that they are against the Constitution of our country. I say that they are revolutionary to the core, and that they tend to the destruction of the first element of American liberty, which is free consent of all the powers that unite to make the law."

The plain truth is that the Democrats have not votes enough to pass
this repeal in a constitutional manner, and lacking votes they resort to violence, as they have done many a time before. In such a crisis we cannot stop to bandy words. Our duty is clear. We must resist all such subversive attempts to the bitter end.
"Lawfully, in our right, we pick up the gage of battle which you have thrown down, and will appeal to our common sovereign to say whether you shall break down the principle of free consent in legislation at the price of starving the Government to death."—N. Y. Tribune.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune writing from Saratov, Russia, denies that the plague is so extensive or so fatal as it has been reported. He characterizes the whole thing as "a great and needless scare."
At the same time he is unable to deny that the disease does exist in epidemic form, and that the Russian Government has been forced to adopt the severest repressive measures.

Over 500,000 bottles of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup are sold every season,
and thousands of persons saved from an untimely grave. The price is 25 cents.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1879.

The effect of the Democratic rules
has gone forth through patriotic confederate soldiers and adventurers, Chalmers, Tucker, Morgan, Blackburn, and it is that all the legislation and all the principles established by the war, must be swept away by the tidal wave of states rights and sedition
now dominant at the Capital.
"We mean that the Army shall die
on June 30th," says Mr. Tucker, "unless the President signs our bill making it powerless for all domestic purposes," and the Democratic side of the House applaud the sentiment to the echo. But they mean even more than the death of the Army and the abridgment of Federal power;
they mean the domination of States
rights and the election of the Confederacy above the Union. If we may fairly interpret the language of Chalmers and Blackburn, there is no power above the State, say these men, and on several occasions they have boldly announced that they went into rebellion with "their people," and are not loth to declare that they would do the same again under similar circumstances. In short the elevenfold of the rebel sin has proceeded from this House debate until staid and conservative lookers on at Capital are free to say that it looks more like sedition in some form now than it did 1864-65. Fortunately, however, the experience of the war
was a dose which the rebels don't desire to repeat, and overt acts of violence may not be apprehended.
The danger lies in their usurpation of power which does not properly belong to them until they demoralize
our institutions and provoke heroic remedies from the other side. At least that is what they are hoping for.
They want war and discussion as much as ever, but they do not want to begin it. But they mistake their power for mischief. The American people are taking note of their acts and preparing a remedy they little dream of. The elections throughout the North this Spring show that the electors intend to hurl the usurpers from power completely in 1880, and the deeper the Confederate conspirators dig in the present political mine the bigger will be the bonanza which our loyal men of this country will seize.
By their own extreme acts and expressions will the defeat of the disloyals be accomplished.

Verily "tall oaks from little acorns grow." The proposition made by Senator Windom, of Minnesota, last winter to settle the Southern question by providing migration for the discontented negroes, and making homes for them elsewhere has spread until it has become a vital principle in the problem of the future. Migration has been adopted voluntarily
as the remedy for their evils by thousands of negroes along the lower Mississippi, and thousands of them elsewhere are awaiting only more favorable occasions for adopting the same means of escape. Without premeditation, without method, without outside aid, and merely adopting spontaneously Senator Windom's suggestion, the negroes are flocking
to new homes in the West, and leaving their old masters with nobody to till the soil and nobody to work their cotton fields. But there will soon be more method in this movement. A National Migration Society has been organized, with a central committee
here of leading white and colored people, and a larger committee representing all sections, to direct and protect the emigrants. Senator Windom has been made chief in this work, and accepts the trust willingly. Indeed, he was forced to do so, willing or not. The plaudits are universal in his behalf as a statesman who foresaw the wisest solution of the race difficulties. A prominent newspaper man and politician writes
to his friends here, "Elevate Senator Windom as a candidate for the Presidency and you'll find the popular heart sure." This is but a sample of the sentiment which is rising. There is no mistake that this negro exodus is one of the most exciting events in our history, and the Democrats of the South begin to appreciate it as one of the visitations of an "evenging Providence" which is likely to have grand political and social results.

LOGAN.

A contemporary wisely says:
"What our country needs to-day
more than the manufacturer, the merchant, the lawyer, the minister, is the farmer." It seems, however,
next to impossible to get people to realize this fact, or to act on it when they do. In spite of the hard times, young men continue to hang around
large cities, where there is no possible hope of employment, waiting for something to turn up, and utterly neglecting the opportunities that are presented in the country. The truth is, people nowadays are too much afraid of hard work, and decidedly afraid of that sort of living which has to be earned by the sweat of the brow. They had much rather live by the sweat of somebody else's brow,
if they can.

The citizens of the Southern States
who have been strenuously arguing against the probability of a recurrence of the yellow fever this summer in the cities and towns so recently desolated by its ravages should receive an event recorded Saturday
as a warning. The United States steamer Plymouth last autumn had the fever on board during a cruise in the West Indies. The winter was spent in Boston, and in the rigorous climate it was supposed that every vestige of the disease had been frozen out. She was also fumigated, and every precaution taken to secure the safety of the officers and crew. On the 15th of March the Plymouth started from Boston to resume her duties on the West India station, and has now had to return to Vineyard Sound with two cases of fever on board. The warm weather encountered when about three hundred miles southeast of Bermuda had revived the germs of disease that still lingered, notwithstanding the exposure to the low temperature of a Boston winter. With the experience of this case, how can the people of the South retain their confidence in the old theory that the disease can never recur two summers in succession, and neglect as they have, the precautions that ought to have been deemed imperative for stamping out the infection? There is another folly exposed by this occurrence—that of Professor Gangue, who has got the sanction of the Senate to a bill donating $200,000
to experiment on his process for freezing out the germs of the yellow fever by injecting the hold of an infected ship with a stream of cold air
from a refrigerating vessel alongside.
To effect a cure with such a weak imitation of "made hares," where the wintry wind of Boston has failed,
can hardly be hoped for.

And all the legislation for governing the railroads of this country,
the necessity of making some provision for the protection of life to the employees of the roads has been completely disregarded. Scarcely an accident occurs that the brief dispatch announcing it does not record the death or maiming for life of a brakeman, and the crushing to death of some one engaged in coupling or uncoupling cars is of weekly and daily occurrence. It is said, and no doubt truly, that the mortality among brakemen of freight trains exceeds that of an army in war time. Our inventors have achieved great perfection in the coupling arrangements for passenger trains, but brakemen
on freight trains are constantly exposed to great risks. Their danger is increased by the great velocity in the cars and construction of the cars
for different roads. The most of them, fortunately, have bumpers which prevent the cars from crushing together, leaving space for the brakemen to couple them without risking his life, but others have no such guard, or if they have it is lower or higher than the adjoining one, and if the train is backed by an imprudent engineer, or jarred together by any accident, there is but little chance of escape for poor humanity that is caught while filling the post of danger. Uniformity of construction, especially as to bumpers, should be imposed upon all car builders, and an automatic arrangement, for coupling and uncoupling, with a system of breaking by steam or air, made imperative. The brakeman when the signal is given to apply the brakes is forced to run along the tops of the cars, perhaps in midnight darkness, exposed to the wind and storm, and in winter over a coating of ice that renders every step a risky one. The leaping from one car to another in such circumstances is enough to appel any one not hardened to it by a long succession of fortunate escapes.

The untamed Bonbon of the Oklahoma, Mississippi, Southern States, is encouraged by the approval and encouragement given his thanksgiving that "we have captured the capital," and furnishes other stuff to fire
the Southern heart. Here is a sample:

As Mr. Garland said, "Mr. Davis would seem to draw the pension." He asks no odds at the hands of the pirates and jackals of Yankeeedom.
No, sir! Strong in the strength of his past career, he looks down from invincible heights with indelible contempt upon the dastardly curs that are baying at his immortal name.

Speaking of Thurman's chances for the Presidency, the States gently remarks:

Thurman has never indorsed the amendments. This is the biggest and brightest jewel in his Senatorial crown. Let the Federal brigadiers take back seats in the work of restoration. The Republic has no further use for the Lincoln hirelings. By the way, Yankees, don't think you feel queer to think that we've defeated you follows after all, and captured the capital?

In another editorial in the same issue on the amendments to the United States constitution, the States
says:

This is the song that the Northern Democrats are singing, and you will hear the chorus from the grand old Southern Jeffersonians by and by.
The amendments must go.

And yet we are daily told that it is the Republicans who are "trying to revive sectional hate!"

Mr. Eaton, who used to denounce apostasy most vigorously, was suddenly appointed Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee
before he made his son the clerk.

When the Greenbackers in the House voted for the Army Appropriation bill, with the political riders attached, they failed to redeem their promises. They seem to be as much opposed to the redemption of guarantees in politics as they are to the government keeping its plighted word with its creditors.

Memphis Appeal: "The South
owes nothing to the Northern Democracy but contempt. The Southern people want their own political freedom, unaided by the Northern Democrats, who, until the South returned to Congress, had neither power to help themselves nor respectability to lend others as a moral force. The alliance between the South and the Northern Democrats in Congress has been an unmixed curse to the South."

The Democratic idea of States Rights seems to be that the government undoubtedly had the power to send its army and its navy into any State for the purpose of arresting a runaway slave and returning him to bondage, but that it is an outrage and an insult to a State to put a United States soldier anywhere near a place of election to protect citizens in the exercise of the right of suffrage.

The municipal elections in Ohio
yesterday, so far as heard from, are not particularly encouraging for the Democracy. The Democrats carry the city of Akron, which is a gain.
For the first time in years the Republicans carry the city of Columbus.
The capital is solidly Democratic but owing to a weak nomination for Mayor and some bad management
upon the part of the gentlemen who sacrifice everything to the greed for office-holding the day was lost to the Democracy.—Balto. Gazette.

General Garfield, in his daily interview on the Ohio canal, declares that the campaign will be a hot one,
and in some respects the most uncompromising one ever known in the State.

He has perfect confidence that the Republicans can win by a handsome majority, whether there is a coalition between the Democrats and Nationals or not. He doubts if a coalition will be of any help to the Democrats.
He expects to see Uncle Dick nominated, chiefly because of his winning ways as a hand-shaker. As for the Presidential in 1880, he is none the less sanguine. He is sure the party will nominate a good man, that the campaign will be one of remarkable energy, and that the party is bound to win because it stands on an almost immaculate record, and has a platform in every way commensurate with its history and its purpose.

The funding operations of the national government are the greatest transactions of the kind known to history. The methods adopted for bringing the four per cents within the means of all classes of people, so that they can be used as a means for the investment of small savings, entails an immense amount of clerical labor and an elaborate system of accounts which is concisely described in a Washington letter. In France
it is a matter of pride with citizens to have their names inscribed in the grand list of the public debt, and this disposition is a powerful conservative element that protects French finances from demagogic trifling. The same results will follow the widespread diffusion of government bonds among our people. To Secretary Sherman is due the credit of submitting a practicable scheme for this in his last message to the Congress, and the necessary legislation having been obtained, he is carrying it out with characteristic energy.

The present political campaign in this country promises to be most lively and interesting. If any man wants to become famous, let him step into THE REPUBLICAN office, and hand the manager $3.00, and order
his name announced for an office.
Don't cover your light under a bushel, gentlemen. The time is past and gone when the office seeks the man.
We are away beyond that. If you want honors to come thick and fast upon you, announce yourself in THE REPUBLICAN as a candidate for office. Every man in the county will then be looking you up to treat
you. There is so much rumble and bustle and hurly-burly in the world
now that you can never become famous unless you step to the front, and announce your name for an office in a live, progressive and widelycirculated newspaper, and strip off your coat, roll up your sleeves and go to work. The old Roman politicians loafed around the marketplaces to speak to the people, shook

them by the hand and asked them for their votes. This was Julius Cesar's plan. It worked admirably about two thousand years ago, but it won't answer now. If there had been a newspaper in Rome Julius Cesar would have been the first in the sanctorum with five dollars. It is not the money we want, not at all,
but we do want our friends of all political parties to become famous.
Don't be backward, gentlemen; precious moments are gliding by with wonderful swiftness.—Adapted from the Baltimore Morning Herald.

New discoveries—or what claim to be discoveries—of the healing virtues of plants are continually making. One of the latest is that celery is a cure for rheumatism; indeed, it is asserted that the disease is impossible if the vegetable be cooked and freely eaten. The fact that it is almost always put on the table raw, prevents its therapeutic powers from becoming known. The celery should be cut into bits, boiled in water until soft, and the water drunk by the patient. Put new milk, with a little flour and nutmeg, into a saucepan
with the boiled celery, serve it warm
with pieces of toast, eat it with potatoes, and the painful ailment will soon yield. Such is the declaration of a physician who has again and again tried the experiment, and with uniform success. He adds that cold or damp never produces, but simply develops the disease, of which add blood is the primary and sustaining cause, and that while the blood is alkaline, there can be neither rheumatism nor gout. English statistics show that in one year (1876), 4,600 persons died of rheumatism,
and every case, it is claimed, might have been cured or prevented by the adoption of the remedy mentioned.
At least two-thirds of the cases named heart disease, are ascribed to rheumatism and its agonizing ally, gout. Small pox, so much dreaded, is not half so destructive as rheumatism, which, it is maintained by many physicians, can be prevented
by obeying nature's laws in diet.
But if you have incurred it, diet celery is pronounced unhesitatingly to be a specific.

The editor of the Merquand Citizen,
who is a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and with Dutty & Co., favored the reorganization of the Committee, says, "let us unite harmoniously, and work together with all our might and strength for the success of our party at the approaching fall election, and Maryland can be redeemed. The enemy is rotten to the core. Their mismanagement and extravagance
in State affairs are stench in the nostrils of the people, who are willing to consign them to private stations, if the Republicans are but true
to themselves."

THE HOUSE GOES ON THE RECORD.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—The Democrats passed the army appropriation bill in the House to-day, with the political amendments attached, substantially in the form as reported from the committee of the whole.
The two weeks' debate did not result in the change of a single vote. The only occasion for surprise is the attitude of the Greenbackers. With few exceptions they voted, solidly with the Democrats, and this, too, in the face of the declaration of their own caucus and the repeated public and private assertions of their leaders.
The debate, if it has done nothing else, has served to demonstrate that the pompos, bombastic little clique
of men in the House which styles itself the National Greenback party has not strength of purpose or decision of character enough to constitute even a cabal. By their action to-day they fully earned the scathing characterization which General Hawley gave them yesterday. The thirteen Greenbackers voted as follows:
Bradley Barlow, of Vermont, with the Republicans, and was an original Abolition Republican, and evidently can be relied upon to vote with his old party upon any question affecting the war issues. Forsythe, of Illinois, also voted with the Republicans, and so did Judge Kelley. The rest voted with the Democrats. De La Matyr, who has made such pretensions assumptions of independence, frightened apparently by the publication of recent letters showing his bargain with the Democrats during the campaign, voted with the Democrats. Ford, of Mississippi, with the Republicans upon the preliminary motions, but was driven to the Democratic ranks on the final vote. The same is true of Jones of Texas, Low of Alabama, Yeom of Pennsylvania, and Weaver and Gillette of Iowa. Any Republicans in Iowa who may have voted for these two gentlemen will have the satisfaction of knowing that they stood up and voted with the Democracy. The bill was passed by the large majority of 148 yeas to 122 nays.
There were six pairs announced.

LOCAL NEWS.

—How do you like your new home?
—Mr. M. W. Lambert was in town Monday.
—Mr. N. B. Wayman is visiting in Virginia.
—"Boss" Shepherd, of Washington, was in town this week.
—Rev. B. Ison and daughter Ella are visiting at Everett, Pa.
—Butter is scarce in Oakland. Price 15 cents per pound.
—Messrs. Shatzer & Ault moved into their new shop last Saturday.
—Hon. B. F. M. Hurley, of Cumberland, was in town last week.
—Thos. J. Peddieard is in Cumberland attending court.
—Hellig and Co. have placed a line sign at their saddlery shop.
—Mrs. Lloyd Stalnaker is at Martinsburg, W. Va., visiting friends and relatives.
—Mr. Louis Bush is improving his house on 4th street, occupied by Mr. Wolfe.
—Lost—A male canary. A liberal reward will be paid for its return to Dr. J. Lee McComas.
—Mr. John Slabough will preach at South Point at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon.
—The railroad company has put up a station board at the west end of the platform.
—A large number of people from the county were in town during the week.
—Miss Ella Yates returned to her home in Ritchie county, W. Va., last week.
—Mrs. Dr. McComas left Oakland Friday of last week, for an extended visit to Baltimore.
—The sound of the hammer is heard throughout our town, bearing evidence that more improvements are going on.
—The frogs opened out their concert on Wednesday night last, which is said to be a "sign" that spring has fairly opened.
—Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Scott have returned from the east and are now opening their spring stock of millinery and fancy goods.
—Five hundred bushels of oats can be disposed of in Oakland, at from 23 to 25 cents per bushel, if brought in immediately.
—Three thousand and fifty-four loaded coal cars were handled over the Cumberland and Pennsylvania railroad during the last week.
—Mr. W. L. Boughner, of Morgantown, was in town this week, on business, it is supposed, in some way connected with the railroad.
—Died—At the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Charles Russell, near Oakland, Monday last, Geo. Steyer, in the 88th year of his age.
—The Cumberland Hydraulic Cement Company has secured the contract for furnishing the cement used on the repairs to the Patent Office at Washington.
—Died—At her residence in Oakland, Friday night of last week, Mrs. Elizabeth B. White, in the 67th year of her age. Deceased had been a member of the Dunkard church for over 40 years.
—Mr. Thomas Martin, on his recent trip to Baltimore, purchased one of the finest carriages ever brought to Oakland. He also purchased a handsome buggy. He has now the best livery "rigs" in the county.
—The jury drawn in Montgomery county for the March term of the Circuit Court included forty-seven Democrats and a single Republican. In Dorchester county the ratio is about one Republican to twenty-five Democrats.

Church Services—Sunday.

Episcopal Church.—Divine services Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Dr. Bacon.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 8th inst. Present, Hon. Jos. De Witt, Chief Judge, and Hon. A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. L. Rawlings, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings:

Letters of Administration were granted to Thos. B. Wiley on the estate of Holmes Wiley, dec'd, who filed a bond in the penalty of $1,200. David Hochstetler was appointed guardian to Samuel Mosser, Albert Mosser and others, and filed his bond in the penalty of $400.

James Wass, administrator, dec'd, settled his first account in personal property.

Michael Nathan, guardian to Delphina Home and others, settled his third account.

Court then adjourned until Tuesday, 22d inst.

Meeting of Town Council.

Council met in regular session at the council chamber, Monday evening. Present, Burgess Offutt, and Commissioners Davis, Legge, Merrill and Basley.

Hon. P. Hamill appeared before the board and claimed a drawback on the expense of laying sidewalks, which was duly considered.

The following bills were approved:

A. C. Good, use of E. Offutt, $1.25
M. Mosser, 1.00
H. P. Tucker, 1.00
J. M. Cline, 1.00
J. A. Haydel, 1.00
Thos. J. Peddieard, professional services, 2.00
J. W. White, 1.00

A. L. Osborn made a statement of receipts from sales, of $11.48, and his note was taken for the amount.

Mr. Merrill moved that the corporation pay its own costs in the case of the corporation vs. John Miller, Jr., which was defeated.

A motion was carried that the members of the council relinquish their attendance fees in the above case.

The following persons were appointed election officers to serve at the regular annual election, to be held on the first Monday of May, 1879, for the purpose of electing a Burgess and Commissioners to serve for the ensuing year:

Peter Shier, Jas. S. Johnson and Edmund Jamison, judges of election, and Lloyd Stalnaker and Alton Osborn, clerks.

On motion it was decided to put down a crossing from Davis & Town street's store to the alley between the Legge and Offutt buildings, Merrill voting in the negative.

On motion it was ordered that the Bishop crossing on Second street be raised.

It was ordered that the clerk post notice of the corporation election.

On motion it was ordered that a crossing be made between James S. Johnson's and Mrs. Miller's.

J. W. White, collector, paid over to the Treasurer $89.15, being amt. collected since last regular meeting.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending April 9:

R. B. White and wife to John Augustine, tract of land called "Old-Follows Lot," $500.

John M. Miller, trustee, to Kneel Frazer, real estate of the late Elisha Frazer, $400.

Wm. C. Pennington, trustee, to Elizabeth Moley, part of "Cascade" Military Lot No. 1093; $250.

Jane Clendinning to Alice A. D. Clendinning, Military Lots Nos. 1356, 253, 287, 405 and 178; also Lot No. 1 in the division of Military Lot No. 1101, and Lot of Military Lot No. 11; $5, &c.

James K. Percy and wife, to David W. Sloan, tract of land called "Caulderston," $150.

Henry Beckman to George E. White, part of Military Lot No. 1523; $150.

Geo. W. Legge and wife, to Elizabeth Little, Lots Nos. 23 and 34 in Brant's Addition to the town of Oakland; $1,000.

Wilson Procter to Mariah S. Boldeu, Lot No. 45 in Wilson's First Addition to the town of Oakland; $100.

Information Wanted.

It is probably generally remembered that some years ago—in 1873—Congress passed a law providing for the erection of durable headstones over the graves of soldiers of the regular and volunteer forces of the United States whose remains are interred in the National Military cemeteries. This law has been carried out, and the graves of the Nation's dead in these cemeteries are now permanently marked. At the instance of the War Department, Congress has recently authorized the erection of similar headstones over the graves of the Union soldiers who are buried in private and village cemeteries. This will be done as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. In the meantime the Quartermaster General, at Washington, will at once proceed to collect the necessary information as to where these headstones are required.

All persons having any knowledge of the burial places of soldiers in private cemeteries whose graves are not marked, are requested to communicate the fact to the Quartermaster General, and give regiment, company, and date of death of deceased, if known. Similar information is desired from parties in charge of such cemeteries.

Of course it is not intended to furnish headstones for graves over which monuments have already been erected by relatives or friends of the deceased.

Assistant Engineer. Mr. Francis Welch, of the Baltimore Fire Department, so severely sprained his back at a recent fire that he was unable to get up after sitting down. A few applications of Keller's Roman Liniment cured him.

Commissioners Meeting.

The County Commissioners met on Monday, April 7th. Present, E. C. Tillson, President, and Jeremiah Guard and John Riley.

Order given to A. Garlitz for $12.50 on levy of 1879, for building bridge near Mrs. Cornum's.

Road account of W. H. Hoyer, for 1878, filed and approved.

Balance of the day taken up in hearing appeals and making transfers.

Tuesday—Thos. Browning was instructed to build a bridge over Muddy Creek at a cost of $20.

Samuel Teets was instructed to build a bridge over Teets' Run, at a cost of $12.

Examiners' report of road from James Meehan's to West Virginia line, was filed.

Order to Supervisor to remove obstructions from road leading from Swanton to Glen Dale church.

Messrs. Peddieard & Gonder, Attorneys for E. P. Korr, filed objections to Examiners' report of private road of Solomon Turney. Objections sustained.

A. Miller, Collector, filed list of delinquents and insolvencies for 1877.

Wednesday and Thursday principally taken up in making transfers. The tax collectors for last year will be re-appointed.

WELLSVILLE, O., April 5th, 1879.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—We are still having real winter weather. The ground is frozen and partially covered with snow, while the wind blows piercingly cold, chilling one to the very marrow. This time last spring the weather was delightful, and the roads drying up nicely. At present they are simply beyond description.

Three boys were drowned in the river near Wellsville, yesterday afternoon. Being out of town I have not yet learned full particulars, but the bodies had not been found at last accounts.

Quite a number of sudden deaths have occurred in and near this place within the past few weeks. Several of them caused by accidents, others, presumably, from heart disease. The last year seems to have been especially fatal to aged persons.

Dr. De Hass has delivered a number of lectures in Wellsville and vicinity.

The district schools have closed; most of them gave a literary entertainment as a farewell meeting.

A laughable incident occurred in this vicinity, a few weeks ago. A young gentleman residing not quite a thousand miles from Wellsville, started out one dark night to visit his lady love. Part of his way lay through a deep valley; certainly not an attractive place on such a night.

He pushed bravely on until within half a mile of his destination when, chancing to look on the hillside he beheld a blaze of light from no apparent cause. Complete terror took possession of him, and without waiting to investigate, he fled with all speed to the nearest house, where he burst in, upsetting a spinning wheel, and of course causing some little commotion among the inmates by his sudden entrance. One of the men was heroic enough to accompany our timid lover to the house of his sweetheart. The light was supposed to be in a sugar camp, as some of the neighbors were engaged in sugar making. The young lady is said to feel rather sensitive on this subject and not much wonder. She has good reason to fear he might prove an indifferent soldier in the battle of life.

KATE.

YELLOW FEVER.—The New Orleans Times alludes to the sore among the common people in that city of another visitation of yellow fever this year, and argues that there is no precedent for such an occurrence in the history of New Orleans. It states that eleven years had been required to prepare the ground for the epidemic of last year, and for the previous—now twelve years ago—it had taken nine years. Since the earliest era of the yellow fever, say 1811, there is not a single instance in which the epidemic has visited the city for two summers in succession. This belief may perhaps account for the neglect of the city authorities to institute the necessary sanitary precautions that would prevent the disease from obtaining a foothold, but it is an over-confidence that might cost the lives of thousands. The Times charges that the scare originates from the desire of other cities to despoil New Orleans of her rightful trade, and her own citizens should be the last to pay any heed to such alarms, knowing as they do, the practical methods which Yellow Jack has always observed in his dealings with them.

The Providence Press, a Democratic organ, thinks that the South has sent too many bold brigadiers to Washington.

TELEGRAPHIC.

REPUBLICAN VICTORIES IN MICHIGAN, OHIO AND CONNECTICUT.

DETROIT, April 7.—The election in this city and throughout the state was quiet and orderly. John Logan Chipman was elected Judge of the Superior Court of this city by a plurality of 1,111, and a majority of 46 over both Republican and National candidates. Returns from the interior come in slowly. Sixty-two towns heard from give Canisbell, Republican, for Justice of the Supreme Court 1,717; Grosvenor, Republican, for regent, 1,171, and Shearer, Republican, for regent, 1,101 majority.

COLUMBUS, O., April 7.—Sufficient returns are in to demonstrate that the Republicans have swept the city and elected Mr. G. G. Collins mayor by 1,700 majority, and the balance of the party that the Republicans have elected their candidate for mayor. They have also elected sufficient members to make the City Council Republican by five majority. Akron elected the entire Democratic city ticket with the exception of street commissioner. At Painesville the Democrats elected two out of three councilmen. At Warren the Republican city ticket was elected. At Fremont the Democrats elect the mayor. Geneva, Ravenna and Elyria went Republican. Advances from the smaller towns on the reserve show Republican victories.

CINCINNATI, April 7.—11:30 P. M.—A heavy vote was polled. The Democrats, who during the day and early part of the evening, now consider the result doubtful.

The Republicans claim the election of Jacob over Harris by 1,000 majority. The vote polled is unusually heavy, equalling that cast at the last Presidential election. The Republicans also claim the election of the entire city ticket, with, perhaps, the exception of Police Judge.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 7.—In the municipal election to-day the Republicans elect the city auditor and marshal by an average plurality of over 300, and the Democrats the city clerk and treasurer by an average plurality of 170. The Republicans retain control of the Common Council by a majority of two on joint ballot, securing the election of city attorney, prosecuting attorney and city surveyor.

CAHNS, ME., April 7.—Wm. H. Boardman, Republican, was elected mayor to-day by 150 majority over the Democrat and Greenback candidates. The Republicans elected six aldermen and the Democrats one.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA., April 7.—In the municipal election to-day the Republicans elected the Marshal and Treasurer and the Democrats the Mayor, Recorder and Assessor and three of four aldermen.

KEOKUK, IOWA, April 7.—The entire Republican ticket was elected with the exception of one Greenback alderman. Two other Greenbackers were elected in wards where the Republicans made no nominations. The vote was unusually large.

CLEVELAND, April 7.—The Republicans elected their whole ticket, with the probable exception of police judge, by 1,500 majority.

LATER.

CINCINNATI, April 8.—The Republicans have elected the whole city ticket, except police judge, by from three to eleven hundred majority. Also an overwhelming majority of the council and board of education. National politics were the issue. The Republicans also carried Columbus, Cleveland and Dayton. It was a Republican day in Ohio.

General Baynton received the following dispatch, dated at 1:50 a. m. to-day: "Republicans have carried Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo and a large number of smaller towns in Ohio. Republican gains are heavy everywhere. Foraken, late United States chief supervisor, ran ahead of his ticket in Cincinnati."

CINCINNATI, April 8.—At 1:45 o'clock this morning, the returns showed that Jacob (Rep.) was elected mayor of this city beyond a doubt. His majority will be from 1,000 to 1,500.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The unexpectedly large majority by which the Democrats carried the Army bill through the House has resulted in encouraging the extremists of the party to adhere strictly to the line of policy already mapped out, and to-night there is not a Democratic Senator or Representative to be found whose utterances indicate the slightest probability that there will be a deviation from the radical programme of the leaders. On the contrary, these gentlemen who were previously inclined toward a conservative and moderate course, and who were loath to sanction an issue with the Executive which might end in blocking the wheels of government and in producing other mischievous consequences are now as determined as the authors of the proposed legislation could wish. The Democrats, therefore, gave themselves no further concern about the "week-kneed" element of their party, and boldly proclaimed that they are united to a man, and will fight their opponents to the bitter end.

The latest intelligence from the White House is to the effect that the President continues steadfast in his purpose to veto the Army bill, as passed by the House, and his intimate friends say that all fears of a surrender on the part of the executive are utterly groundless. Ex-senator Matthews, of Ohio, who is now in the city, and a frequent visitor at the White House, stated last evening with no little emphasis that the President would veto both the army and the legislative bills, just as often as they were presented to him; that is, providing they contained the proposed objectionable legislation.

The prospects of a compromise are therefore becoming more dismal every day, and unless either Congress or the President yield, the result of the conflict must prove ruinous to the business interests of the country. Already are members of Congress, especially those representing commercial constituencies, receiving numerous letters counselling moderation and an early adjournment. When the majority of our legislators themselves do not appear to realize the grave and disastrous results of a continued dead-lock between the executive and legislative branches of the government, it is not strange that the country at large is in the same predicament. What a spectacle it will be to see all the departments of the government, including the post offices, closed on July 1. And yet this is what may occur, if the Legislative Appropriation bill is not passed.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—Urgent appeals from South Carolina Democrats and friends of the two hundred and fifty persons awaiting trial before Judge Bond in the United States Court at Charleston, to hurry up and repeal the jurors' test oath section of the Revised Statutes, prompted the introduction of a bill in the Senate to-day repealing the legislation in question. The measure was placed in charge of Senator Bayard, in expectation, probably, that with such a respectable sponsor, no opposition would be offered. But the Republicans were not to be caught napping. They fully understood the motive that prompted the proceeding, and Senator Edmunds interposed the fatal objection which sent the bill to the Judiciary Committee. The Legislative bill contains a repeal of these identical sections, but the Democrats, anticipating a presidential veto, evidently wished to take time by the forelock. In this case it suits pressing party emergency in South Carolina to have that test oath legislation through as an independent measure.

The Okolona Southern States is not to be put down. The Democrats will not succeed in stifling it by the cry that its editor is an Ohio carpet-bagger. Its chief editor, who was a brave Confederate soldier through the war, wrote a letter to Mr. Frye to-day in response to the accusations of Representative Muldrow last week that the Okolona States does not represent respectable elements of the Mississippi Democracy, in which he showed that it did represent Muldrow as it supported him, and that editor is not an Ohio carpet-bagger. This editor is evidently a man who can take care of himself after the most approved fashion, and Muldrow, upon learning the nature of the letter that had been submitted to the House by Mr. Frye, rose later in the day and said that he intended no personal reflection upon the editor of the Okolona States, but simply wished to say that he was an extremist in politics. Mr. Muldrow did not reiterate the charge that the editor of the Okolona States is an Ohio carpet-bagger.

THE COLORED PEOPLE'S EXODUS.

NEW ORLEANS, April 5.—A call has been issued, signed by many prominent clergymen, teachers, and social directors of the colored people of this State, for a convention to meet in New Orleans on April 17, to consider the condition of their race in Louisiana. They say: "We regard with grave apprehensions the wrongs and outrages from which so many of our people suffer to-day, and the alarm which has influenced them to make a general exodus from North Louisiana and the turbulent parishes in the State."

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Louisiana politicians, arriving here in the last day or two, say that the exodus of negroes from portions of that State continues to be very large. This exodus is mainly from the cotton region. Senator Kellogg, who is largely interested in sugar-planting, received to-day a letter from his brother to the effect that there is no dearth of labor in the sugar parishes, as very few negroes are leaving. This is ascribed to the fact that there is not near so much uncertainty in regard to the sugar crop as the cotton crop, and the wages are much better. Senator Kellogg thinks that the bill introduced by Senator Windom last winter to colonize the negroes in one of the Territories is the main cause of the present exodus from certain sections of the South, and that the negroes have imbibed the idea that Kansas is the promised land where they are to get their forty acres and a mule. If the exodus continues it will soon settle all difficulties as to race supremacy in Louisiana and Mississippi in favor of the whites. Some of the republican politicians, in talking over this subject to-day, advanced the opinion that probably movements would be made to get the negroes to settle in such close States as Ohio and Indiana. The republican majority is so large in Kansas that they would be of no political advantage there, but if twenty to thirty thousand males were colonized in Indiana and Ohio, it was contended, the result would be to make both those States reliably republican.

With regard to the negro exodus from Louisiana the New Orleans Times states among the causes a general fright caused by the rumor that after election they were to be enslaved; that the firing of gunpowder by the released Natchitoches prisoners and their sympathizers, under indictment for election crimes, alarmed the colored people so that they fled to the woods, believing that war had broken out, and these went to the nearest landing and took passage up the river; that the better informed of them think that the coming constitutional convention will disfranchise the most of them by an educational or property qualification, as in Georgia; also, that there is a general belief among them that some of their race were badly treated and murdered during the last campaign.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.—My books and papers are at the collection of H. Wheeler Combs, Attorney at Law. In my absence he is authorized to receive for any money that may be due by account or otherwise.
ap. 12-98.
N. B. WAYMAN.

DR. E. H. PARSONS, offers his professional services to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
3 S 3m

J. B. BRANT, Surveyor, Auctioneer and Conveyancer, Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT, OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best white farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 30 ACRES, 70 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD PAINT and siding. There is a good young orchard of 70 trees. The whole farm is under good fences. This farm will be offered for a superior time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 250 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 5 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Station and 7 miles from Cranberry Summit. Is one of the best mill sites in the county and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stabling attached. The wheels and iron for a Saw Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a discount for the whole than the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE,

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10x10, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a CHEAPEST HOME an opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price less than the cost of the buildings. Terms,—one-third down, balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

VARIETIES.

—There are about 6,000,000 Free Masons in the world.

—Records of crime furnish the sin news of many papers.

—New Haven has sent 400,000,000 cartridges to Turkey.

—The Rome Scintilla thinks a healthy Indian is a well read man.

—You may take down your own stovepipe if it suits you.

—Nothing so lubricates the muscles as sweet oil.—Boston Transcript.

—If you are a hog, go to Leadville. Bacon is worth fifteen cents per pound there.

—March is a deceptive month; but April will lilac everything.—N. Y. Herald.

—You're a nasty, stuck up thing," as the new said to the paste pot.—Old City Derrick.

—The Boston Transcript has discovered that a hen with clipped wings has a defective flew.

—When American meets American then comes the discussion on politics.—Boston Courier.

—Washington politicians are talking so much that they haven't time to drink.—N. Y. Herald.

—A man who is "in the hands of his friends" has a good chance of starving to death.—Free Press.

—If you are in love, just constitute yourself a "Teller Committee" of one, and settle the business.

—Can it be said that a man who is very much interested is dejected, because he is more'n full?

—The most useful pedestrian is the man who walks the road nights with the baby.—N. Y. Herald.

—Alone exhibition. A poor female of thirty years or thereabouts who has never received an offer of marriage.

—Haverstraw will soon be all right again. Just as soon as hot weather comes the reply will be: "I don't care if I do."—Free Press.

—A young man in Brooklyn boasts that he has kissed his girl 450 times in six hours and three laps, and thinks he has won the match.

—Every once in a while some bloated bondholding editor slings off an article headed: "Pay as you go." Well, that's been our invariable rule for years. We seldom go.—Herald.

—A dead whale was brought into Port Royal, S. C., last Friday, that was captured by a whaling schooner from a school. It is expected to yield 800 barrels of oil and 1,000 pounds of bone.

—Why don't you get even with him?" was asked of a youth whose schoolmate was in the habit of hectoring him, and the wise young man replied: "I never cross the fence for fear he might not my eyes."

—Nearly 2,000,000 eggs, mostly young, will be driven from Texas North before the hot weather of August begins. The number of cattle in a "drive" is generally 3,000, though it is sometimes much larger.

—A railroad conductor of large experience laughs at the idea that Americans are physically deteriorating. In his experience children under twelve years at half-price are bigger and more numerous than ever before.

—The other day, when a block of granite weighing four hundred pounds fell from a five-story block just behind two New York ladies, one of them wearily drawled out: "Why, I thawt a gentleman had slipped down!"

—A bright little miss in Napa, Cal., noted for her quaint sayings, said to her mother the other day: "Mamma, when you went to heaven to get me, did you pick out the prettiest baby on God's floor?" Of course mamma said yes.

—Colonel Price, eighty years old and blind, is the most active temperance reformer in Indiana. He became so excited recently while making a speech that an attack of heart disease prostrated and nearly killed him.

—The English Government is sending out a host of inexperienced army surgeons to South Africa, just as they sent them out during the rebellion. Many an honest fellow who walks on crutches to-day had a leg laced off by some learner when it might have been saved.

—The lumbermen who camp in the woods of Maine, dig in the ground and bake beans as the boys used to in the army. One day a camp was burned and the owner telegraphed home: "Camp burned flat, bean hole and all."

—A man in Springfield, Mass., who wants a divorce is in a sad state of mind because he can't recall the date of his marriage, and the certificate has been lost. Of course, the wife will not tell him, and it is necessary for him to give the date in his petition.

—A family is like unto an equipage. First, the father, the draught horse, next, the boys, the wheels, for they are always running around; then the girls, they are surrounded by fellows. The baby occupies the lapboard, and the mother—well, what's a wagon without a tongue, anyhow?—Exchange.

—The "Forty Thieves."—A Yankee who had never paid more than twenty-five cents to see an exhibition, went to a New York theater one night to see "Forty Thieves." The ticket seller charged him seventy-five cents for a ticket. Passing the pasteboard card, he quietly remarked: "Keep it, mister; I don't want to see the other thirty-nine," and out he marched.

—A device for cheating at cards was discovered by the San Francisco police in a room that had been used by poker players. It was a small brass frame for holding extra cards, so made as to be fastened in the sleeve and slid down into the right hand by pulling a string with the left hand. Then the needed card could be extracted without detection and afterward pulled up into the sleeve again.

—"There's no place like home," exclaimed a married man with a sigh of relief, as he threw down his hat, pulled off his coat and boots, slipped his feet in his slippers, and flung himself down on the sofa. As soon as he was comfortably settled, his loving wife ordered him to go out and get a pail of water, bring in a scuttle of coal, lock up the hen-house, feed the pigs, and split some wood for morning. Then he angrily gathered himself together, spitefully kicked off his slippers, savagely drew on his boots, hastily climbed into his ulster, jammed his hat over his eyes, and as he went out of the back door, he muttered, "There is no place like home."—Hackensack Republican.

The Son of Adam and Eve.

CAPTAIN BOB, who died last Saturday afternoon, was buried in the Catholic cemetery last Sunday afternoon at one o'clock. He was buried from St. Mary's Church, Rev. Father Manogue officiating. Captain Bob was confined to his bed about ten weeks. The cause of death was lung disease. Six weeks before his death he lost all hopes of recovery, and sent for his old friend, Father Manogue, to prepare him for the next world. Under strange circumstances, fifteen years ago, Father Manogue baptized Adam and Eve, parents of the great Pinte chief. In 1860 Adam called often at the old Catholic Church in this city, and was hospitably received by the pastor, both on account of his advanced age and his kind and genial disposition. The church doors being continually open, whenever the door entered the church and remained until access to the basement was free. Probably wearing from waiting in the church, the Pinte patriarch made the best use possible of his time, and remained in the church for the first time in six days, and the fourteen stations of the cross were very attractive to advanced Christians, and possessed more than a charm for the Septuagintarian Pinte. He passed the day, and returned day after day in making the rounds of the fourteen. It is needless to say that the stations are the history of the last trials and troubles, the insults, the mockery and derision, as well as the final agony and crucifixion of our Divine Lord. The paintings being life-like, fresh, vigorous, and well-colored, had more than a passing attraction for the vivid fancy of the untutored and simple old Pinte chief.

Hence he passed many an hour and many a day pondering over the tragic scenes. While making the stations one in his own Pinte way, the pastor passed through the church and Adam approached, desiring an explanation of the sorrowful scenes. A full explanation given, the old man for some moments remained pensive. After a few minutes he expressed his desire to become a Christian. Having understood that some time was required for the transmutation he expressed his desire to commence. A month elapsed and he was baptized—he and his old wife Eve. Adam and Eve, who were, therefore, baptized by the Rev. Father Manogue in the Church of St. Mary's in the Mountains, in 1863.

After his baptism, Adam brought along his children, even to the fourth generation, and they were also baptized. Next all the Pintes roaming the hills from here to Cono, as well as many along Walker River, Pyramid Lake, the Humboldt, and the sink of the Carson are Christians. They have never had a chance of being properly instructed. They are humbly and simply good. If any immorality be traceable to their midst the solution is found in their contact with the civilized and "noisy white man." A sorrowful man, but as true as it is said. Old Adam is buried in the old Catholic cemetery beyond the hills; Captain Jim, his son, was buried last St. Patrick's Day from St. Mary's, and the well-known Pinte chief, Captain Bob, who was honored by hundreds of weeping Pintes at the last funeral rites in St. Mary's Church on Sunday, February 16, and is now resting in the same grave with his brother, old Adam; his relations loved him. Hence the reason of their attachment to St. Mary's Church.

Captain Bob and his folks were always in earnest in their religious belief, and, as far as their knowledge went, they had the fullest faith. An evidence of Captain Bob's faith is that on one occasion he and his wife walked in a distance of sixty miles to the nearest Catholic church, where the month-old child baptized.

At Captain Bob's funeral last Sunday Captain Charley, Humboldt Sam and bukskin Bob had charge of the secular business, and, with three other equally distinguished Pinte Captains, acted as pallbearers in the journey to the cemetery.

The Pintes, who turned out in strong force, were greatly pleased with the funeral and all the ceremonies incident to it. Their own religion differs very little from that of most Christian peoples, except that the masses know nothing of a Savior. They believe in God and a heaven; also in a devil and a hell. "Pahsoh" is their name for God, and they call their devil "Aviadiagi." In their heaven all the good are reunited after death, and live forever without hunger or thirst and in perfect happiness. In their hell the wicked dwell in a great desert, fenced in with steep and rocky mountains. The sand of this desert burns the feet, and thirst parches the throats of those who inhabit this region. Here the wicked wander forever. They are continually deluged by mirages; but alkali water, which adds to their torture, is the only relief they find, and when they attempt to pass the mountain barriers, they are driven back by devils armed with flaming brands.

Old Adam, the first convert, was never so happy as when in and about the Catholic Church. During the last years of his life he haunted the church and studied the mysteries there taught in his dreamy way day after day. He seemed to think it but a step from heaven—the nearest approach on earth to the heaven above.—Nevada Enterprise.

—The capital invested in all the railroads of the globe exceeds $15,500,000,000. These roads, according to the statistics of Prof. Neumann-Spallart, require 62,000 locomotives, 112,000 passenger cars and 1,500,000 goods trucks. Annually 1,500,000,000 tons of merchandise and 1,500,000,000 passengers are conveyed by these means of transit.

—Spring fever and white vasa will soon be ripe.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

The Last Day of the International Walking Match.

THE attendance last evening was the largest of the match. Along the sides of the building the crowd was so dense that all outline of boxes and seats was extinguished. The side pews below, skirting the outer edge of the track, were fairly bursting with people. In the inner ellipse there was such a dense throng that moving about was a matter of the greatest difficulty. Every projection of the false rock-work of the grotto and every niche and crevice of the vast building in which a person could be packed was occupied. Even the remaining wing of the temporary gallery was filled. The track only was clear. That was lined by a double row of stalwart policemen, stationed about six feet apart, and nobody was allowed to pass them. Another force of reserves was packed in the long expanse under the seats near the Middle avenue. There were 330 men in all in uniform inside the building, to say nothing of the swarm of detectives, under command of Inspector Dilks and Captain Williams. Never before was an assemblage so madly and persistently enthusiastic.

The cheers rolled in successive swells around and around the vast amphitheater, wave following wave as one man after another appeared in sight. Yells, hurrahs, screams, and shouts of encouragement rose above the din on every side. The name of each man was called out, and three regular cheers and a tiger were given for him over and over again. Ennis was the favorite, but Harriman got his share, and Rowell was not forgotten. The two latter kept close together, the generous little Englishman exclaiming the miserable-looking but plucky Down-County desperado effort to encompass 450 miles. The kindly deed was noticed on all sides, and drew forth continual shouts of admiration. Ennis plodded along alone at a good pace, but his legs were stiff from the first time in six days, and his stride was a little ungainly. A handsome basket of flowers was presented to him at 8:15, and the spectators, who eagerly snatched upon every opportunity to applaud, yelled themselves hoarse. Ennis was now on his 468th mile. He ran the last lap amid frantic cheering, yelling and whistling, and kept on for a few steps further, until he got alongside of Rowell and Harriman, the latter of whom was just beginning his 450th mile. Rowell stepped ahead of Harriman to cut out his pace for him, and Ennis fell in behind to assist him if necessary. The crowd instantly recognized the two rival athletes, and the rafters rang with such a hearty, spontaneous, and continued outburst of applause as has seldom awakened the echoes on that occasion. In this style the procession of the doors of the Pintes, while others aver that it is the pollen of pine trees, wafted on the wind from the pine forests of the Southern country. Those of the former opinion are the most numerous, and are, in fact, the fact that this sulphur is sent as a warning for us to turn from our wicked ways, and hereafter walk more circumspectly. They say that the sulphur was found in the green of the marigolds, especially keepers of saloons. They scout the idea that it is pollen, and ask where so much of that article could come from. These people with blanching faces, asked each other if this was an omen that the world was coming to end in the near future.

The savants of this region have been paying particular attention to this matter since it fell, and many opinions are offered as to what it really is. Dr. H. E. Irvine, Professor of Chemistry in Lafayette College, Bethlehem, writes as follows in reference to the shower of sulphur: "It is not surprising that the yellow substance observed on the surface of the doors of the Pintes, and the fact that this sulphur is sent as a warning for us to turn from our wicked ways, and hereafter walk more circumspectly. They say that the sulphur was found in the green of the marigolds, especially keepers of saloons. They scout the idea that it is pollen, and ask where so much of that article could come from. These people with blanching faces, asked each other if this was an omen that the world was coming to end in the near future."

As Harriman came up the home stretch on the last lap of his great task, at 8:44:08, bearing a floral pillow, in size resembling the American shield, the crowd grew perfectly frantic. Every body sprang to their feet and shrieked, yelled and shouted, and the entire prospect was one of unbroken jubilation. Harriman, who was in the lead, was followed by the reporters, who had hitherto kept silent attending to business, forgot their note-books for an instant and cheered with the rest. The relief of the moment, after watching the struggle of these poor broken-down pedestrian for three long days and nights, combined with the natural sympathy on account of his nationality and the intense admiration aroused by his pluck, were irresistible. Rowell, who followed after, was greeted with a separate volley of cheers, and so also was Ennis, who carried a third floral pillow. But all the previous excitement was as nothing when last, unexpectedly appeared, a few minutes later, his face aglow and his eyes glittering with excitement and gratification, forging along at an astonishingly rapid gait. Across his body hung a tri-colored silk scarf, decorated with fluttering ribbons. A second time he came around, this time bearing over his shoulder a large American flag. Rowell and Ennis trudged gayly behind him, like well drilled recruits. The rafters fairly shook with applause, the surplus enthusiasm finding vent in a furious outburst of hats and canes and shaking of handkerchiefs. A third time Harriman appeared, bowing and shaking hands every side as he passed, and once more the roar swelled to a deafening pitch. At 8:45:40 he retired from the track for good, having completed 450 miles and three laps in 139h. 46m. 40s., or deducting rests, 95h. 51m. 19s., an average of a little less than four miles an hour actual walking time.

Ennis and Rowell, left to themselves, put on a burst of speed which carried them around two laps, and completed Rowell's five hundredth mile. The little fellow came up to the judge's stand, one of the latter snatched up the immense loaf of toast bread, decorated with ribbons, spoken of yesterday, and thrust it into his armpit. The crowd was nearly as big as himself, bore it off laughingly. It would be useless to attempt to describe the noise and excitement which these last events created, ending in a circling roar of laughter as the champion and his unwieldy prize appeared in sight. Had one of the Americans been the victor the enthusiasm could scarce have been more intense. In fact, the yelling, cheering, and waving of handkerchiefs had not ceased for an appreciable moment for two hours and over. Nor were they ended now. Rowell reappeared from his cottage in a few moments clad in an ulster and carrying a large American flag. Then the assemblage went mad in earnest. There could be no mistaking the recognition accorded to his pluck and endurance, to the fairness which he won the belt, and to his generous and gentlemanly conduct during the match. He ended his walk at 8:56:35, in 139h. 56m., and 35s., from the start, or, deducting stops, in 103h. 52m., and 12s.—an average of a little less than five miles an hour. The band played "God Save the Queen" as Rowell re-entered his cottage for the last time.

Ennis kept plodding along, and the applause concentrated on him. Another beautiful bunch of flowers was given him, and he immediately increased his gait. So it went, the cheering with continuous cheers until he had finished his 474th mile. Then he started into a fast run, the band, which had been silent for a long time, striking up a lively tune. It was evident instantly that the pace was hot, and thousands of watches were drawn forth to note it. The first lap was made in 50 seconds, the second in 54 seconds, the third in 52 seconds, the fourth in 52 seconds, the fifth inside of 40 seconds, the sixth in 43 seconds, the seventh in 52 seconds, and the eighth in a fraction over 52 seconds, making the mile in 6:55, by long odds the fastest of the entire match, and very good under any circumstances. It was now 10:00:55, or 41h. and 57s. from the start. Deducting stoppage, Ennis had been on the track 104 hours 39 minutes 34 seconds, an average of a little over four miles an hour. Ennis made another tour of the track, shaking hands with everybody, and prolonging the crazy enthusiasm for some moments longer. Soon after he retired to his cottage and began to pour out, and in a wonderfully short space of time the immense building was almost empty. Crowds, however, hung about the streets on the outside, discussing the match until nearly midnight.—N. Y. Times.

Pennsylvania's Phenomenon.

THE fall of a yellow substance on the eve of St. Patrick's Day, which was the first supposed to be sulphur, is still the subject of much speculation. The shower extended over an area of about two hundred miles, including the counties of Berks, Lehigh, Carbon, Schuylkill and Luzerne, and that it is genuine sulphur, the fact that quantities of it can yet be seen sticking to the stones and bricks along the principal streets. Many theories are advanced as to what the substance really is. Many persons still claim that it is genuine sulphur, while others aver that it is the pollen of pine trees, wafted on the wind from the pine forests of the Southern country. Those of the former opinion are the most numerous, and are, in fact, the fact that this sulphur is sent as a warning for us to turn from our wicked ways, and hereafter walk more circumspectly. They say that the sulphur was found in the green of the marigolds, especially keepers of saloons. They scout the idea that it is pollen, and ask where so much of that article could come from. These people with blanching faces, asked each other if this was an omen that the world was coming to end in the near future.

The savants of this region have been paying particular attention to this matter since it fell, and many opinions are offered as to what it really is. Dr. H. E. Irvine, Professor of Chemistry in Lafayette College, Bethlehem, writes as follows in reference to the shower of sulphur: "It is not surprising that the yellow substance observed on the surface of the doors of the Pintes, and the fact that this sulphur is sent as a warning for us to turn from our wicked ways, and hereafter walk more circumspectly. They say that the sulphur was found in the green of the marigolds, especially keepers of saloons. They scout the idea that it is pollen, and ask where so much of that article could come from. These people with blanching faces, asked each other if this was an omen that the world was coming to end in the near future."

As Harriman came up the home stretch on the last lap of his great task, at 8:44:08, bearing a floral pillow, in size resembling the American shield, the crowd grew perfectly frantic. Every body sprang to their feet and shrieked, yelled and shouted, and the entire prospect was one of unbroken jubilation. Harriman, who was in the lead, was followed by the reporters, who had hitherto kept silent attending to business, forgot their note-books for an instant and cheered with the rest. The relief of the moment, after watching the struggle of these poor broken-down pedestrian for three long days and nights, combined with the natural sympathy on account of his nationality and the intense admiration aroused by his pluck, were irresistible. Rowell, who followed after, was greeted with a separate volley of cheers, and so also was Ennis, who carried a third floral pillow. But all the previous excitement was as nothing when last, unexpectedly appeared, a few minutes later, his face aglow and his eyes glittering with excitement and gratification, forging along at an astonishingly rapid gait. Across his body hung a tri-colored silk scarf, decorated with fluttering ribbons. A second time he came around, this time bearing over his shoulder a large American flag. Rowell and Ennis trudged gayly behind him, like well drilled recruits. The rafters fairly shook with applause, the surplus enthusiasm finding vent in a furious outburst of hats and canes and shaking of handkerchiefs. A third time Harriman appeared, bowing and shaking hands every side as he passed, and once more the roar swelled to a deafening pitch. At 8:45:40 he retired from the track for good, having completed 450 miles and three laps in 139h. 46m. 40s., or deducting rests, 95h. 51m. 19s., an average of a little less than four miles an hour actual walking time.

Ennis and Rowell, left to themselves, put on a burst of speed which carried them around two laps, and completed Rowell's five hundredth mile. The little fellow came up to the judge's stand, one of the latter snatched up the immense loaf of toast bread, decorated with ribbons, spoken of yesterday, and thrust it into his armpit. The crowd was nearly as big as himself, bore it off laughingly. It would be useless to attempt to describe the noise and excitement which these last events created, ending in a circling roar of laughter as the champion and his unwieldy prize appeared in sight. Had one of the Americans been the victor the enthusiasm could scarce have been more intense. In fact, the yelling, cheering, and waving of handkerchiefs had not ceased for an appreciable moment

Drying the Elephants Out of Business.

"It seems to me," remarked a gentleman the other day, "that about everything we have now, except what we eat, is made out of celluloid."

An investigation of the subject almost tends to persuade one that this statement is scarcely exaggerated. Although celluloid was invented nine or ten years ago (by two brothers named Hyatt,) its perfected manufacture has been regularly in progress for about five years, and is considered to be still in its infancy, yet immense quantities of the substance are produced, it is converted into a wonderful variety of forms, and new modes of applying it are discovered almost daily.

Celluloid is a composition of fine tissue paper and camphor, treated with chemicals by a patented process. A rather common impression that it contains gun cotton is a mistake which arises from confounding it with collodion. Celluloid, it is said, is entirely non-explosive, and burns only when in direct contact with flame. When crude it looks like a transparent gum, and its color is a light brown. It can be made as hard as ivory, but is always elastic, and can be readily modeled into every conceivable form. With equal ease it can be colored in any tint desired, the dye running through the entire substance, and being, therefore, inflexible.

As a close imitation of ivory, celluloid has made inroads in the business of the ivory manufacturers. Its makers assert that in durability it is much superior to ivory, as it is much harder and does not wear out, and is not discolored by age or use. Great quantities of it are used for piano and organ keys, to the manufacture of which one company is devoted. So extensive is its use that the ivory manufacturers have reduced their price for keys below that of celluloid in the hope of checking the competition. "It is only a question of who can hold out the longest," said a celluloid manufacturer, "and we can make our own elephants, and the ivory men have got to catch theirs."

Billiard balls are made of celluloid at half the price of ivory, and are said to be equally elastic, while more durable. Large amounts are used for combs of every variety, for the backs of brushes and hand-mirrors, and for all kinds of toilet articles for which ivory is employed. Even a fine toothed comb made of celluloid is twenty-five per cent cheaper than ivory, while in large pieces, such as the backs of hand-glasses, the difference in price is enormous. Among many other articles in which celluloid takes the place of ivory or India rubber are soap, cane and cane handles, every kind of harness trimmings, foot rules, chessmen and pieces, and a host of other articles.

As a substitute for porcelain, celluloid is used for heads of dolls, which can be hammered against a hard floor without danger of fracture. Beautiful jewelry is made of it in imitation of the most elaborately carved coral and pearls. Most of coral tints are bright or dark red, however, as the makers strangely to say, have found that excellent copies of the costly pink coral are not in popular demand.

One of the largest manufacturing companies is employed exclusively in the making of optical goods, using celluloid in place of tortoise shell, jet, etc., for the frames of spectacles, eye-glasses and opera-glasses. The material is extensively used for shoe tips, having the appearance of patent leather. By shoe-makers it is also used for insoles.

Large quantities of thimbles are made of it, and it is said to be the best material known for emery wheels and knife sharpeners. As a ground for paintings, celluloid has all the advantages of ivory, and photographs can be taken on it which are alleged to be superior to ivory ones.

Within the last year and a half another branch of celluloid manufacture has been developed which promises to reach enormous proportions. This is the use of celluloid as a substitute for paper in the making of shirt cuffs, collars, etc. It has the appearance of well-starched linen, is sufficiently tight and flexible, does not wrinkle, is not affected by perspiration, and can be worn for months without injury. It becomes soiled much less readily than linen, and when dirty is quickly cleaned by the application of a little soap and water with a sponge or rag. For travelers, who are in hot weather, the celluloid linen is especially convenient. It has lately been much improved by the introduction of much linen between two thicknesses of celluloid. Shirt-fronts have been made of it, as well as cuffs and collars, and it is believed that these will prove equally desirable.

When asked if this branch of the business was not likely to cause serious injury to the trade in paper collars, a celluloid manufacturer replied: "No, not nearly so much as you think. Celluloid collars and cuffs are cheaper in the long run than paper, they last so much longer, but their first cost is equal to that of linen. The collars are sold at retail for twenty-five cents apiece, and the cuffs for fifty cents a pair. When I was in Boston some time ago, I happened to be in a barber's shop, and I showed to the barber a celluloid comb, which he examined and praised very highly. He inquired the price of such combs, and when informed that it was forty cents exclaimed: 'Why, we can buy rubber combs for fifteen cents.' But, said I, 'this comb, as you see, is elastic, the teeth will not break, and it will not wear a dozen cheap combs made of rubber.' 'That makes no difference,' said the man, 'I tell you a barber has fifteen cents to buy a comb a long sight oftener than he has forty cents.' Now that's the way it will work with these collars and cuffs. There are a great many men who have the money to pay for paper collars a good deal oftener than they have it to pay for celluloid. Still, this celluloid linen business is going to be immense. It has only just fairly begun. From 6,000 to 12,000 dozen collars and cuffs are made weekly already, and orders are coming in from all over the country."

Celluloid has been experimented with as a material for neckties, and, although the trials have not yet been very satisfactory, it is thought that they will eventually be successful. For but-hands and handkerchiefs it is a trifle more expensive than materials commonly used, but is said to be better, as it does not become rusty or greasy. It has so been used lately for watch-cases.

There is a large export trade in celluloid articles to Cuba and South America, and this is constantly increasing. They are not sent to Europe as the right to manufacture and sell them there has been sold to a foreign company, which has a factory in France.—New York Evening Post.

The Woman Who Was Afraid But Didn't Mind It After All.

A MAN was once walking along one road and a woman along another. The two roads finally united, and man and woman, reaching the junction at the same time, walked on together. The man was carrying a large iron kettle on his back; in one hand he held by the legs a live chicken, in the other a cane, and he was leading a goat. Just as they were coming to a deep, dark ravine the woman said to the man: "I am afraid to go through that ravine with you; it is a lonely place, and you might overpower me and kiss me by force." "If you are afraid of that," said the man, "you shouldn't have walked with me at all; how can I possibly overpower you and kiss you by force, when I have this great iron kettle on my back, a cane in one hand, and a live chicken in the other, and am leading a goat? I might as well be tied hand and foot." "Yes," replied the woman, "but if you should stick your cane into the ground and tie your goat to it, and turn the kettle bottom side up and put the chicken into it, then you might wickedly kiss me in spite of my resistance." "Success to thy ingenuity, O woman!" said the man, "I should have thought of such an expedient." And when they came to the ravine he stuck his cane in the ground and tied the goat to it, gave the chicken to the woman saying: "Hold it while I cut some grass for the goat," and then, lowering the kettle from his shoulder, imprisoned the chicken under it, and wickedly kissed the woman, as she was afraid he would.

A Forward Season.

AN old negro named Sam Clark, who counts a Griswold street lawyer among his friends, called at his law-shop yesterday with a very anxious look on his face, and said:

"Boss, Ize clean twisted up dis time, an' I want to ax a few questions."

"Well, go ahead, Sam."

"Well, all de white folks tells me dat de sezun am at leas' a month ahead. I firs 'em talkin' 'bout it on de kyars an' all ober."

"This is a very forward spring. I think we are at least a month ahead."

"Well, if dat's de case, will de Fo' th 'o' July come de de fo' th 'o' June, or when, an' hain't April fule day gone an' passed by two weeks?"

The lawyer tried to explain, but Sam was more mixed than before. He scratched his head and went slowly out, but in half an hour he returned with a face longer than ever.

"Got that through your head yet?" asked the lawyer.

"Fo' de Lawd, will Izo bin strack agin?" whispered the African. "If we am a month ahead now, dis ya'r will either have thirteen months or only 'loveln' Splain dat, now!"

But the lawyer couldn't, and Sam went out saying:

"Dese white folks am a werry curious set, dey is. Dey go an' git de sezun an' outer gear, an' den a nigger can't tell whether to plant taters or dudge 'ticles!"—Free Press.

—The dreadful fact that there are minute bugs in brown sugar and wriggling eels in the best vinegar calls for action. Humanity, as well as the bugs and eels, calls loudly for protection.—Boston Transcript.

The Russians are peculiar. When coffins are covered with cloth, the color indicates the character of the deceased. If the body is a young person, crimson is used; if a widow, brown; if a father, yellow; but black is never used.

The first time a fellow kisses the girl of his choice the sensation is not unlike the chill that courses through the veins of the wight whose head has just been seized by the iron clamps of the photographer.—Boston Transcript.

It is a fact that when people come to what is commonly called high words they generally use low language.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

The best are the cheapest. This is more especially so in the matter of wives.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

MY SHIP AT SEA.

How many ships I've sent to sea—
Down with the waves and full of gloom,
How many ships I've sent to sea—
Down with the waves and full of gloom,
How many ships I've sent to sea—
Down with the waves and full of gloom,
How many ships I've sent to sea—
Down with the waves and full of gloom,

How oft, with sails all golden-bright,
With sunlight, they have passed from sight,
While from the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
While from the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
While from the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,

And then I thought of what I've lost;
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,
Of my life, of my life, of my life,

These shattered wrecks the cruel sea
Casts on the shore to torture me,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,

But still, forgetting all my pain,
My back I launch upon the main,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,
And with the waves I saw them rise,

Between sunset and bedtime.
Philipp Voorhies was coming to visit us. We had not seen him for several years, and during that time he had been wandering up and down the earth,
going round it, and goodness knows where else, after the restless habit of this unsettled generation, which it seems to me, can never be quiet under any circumstances, and only travels to the places for the pleasure of rushing away as fast as possible.

Phil was a distant relation of ours,
and my god-son, and had always considered our house his home during his boyish days. We were very fond of the handsome high-spirited fellow,
both as boy and man. I used to think
my sister spoiled him beyond measure,
a charge which she flung back upon me
with indignation; and, though I strongly denied such weakness, I am afraid
my conscience was not entirely at ease.

My name is John Winters, and my sister was christened Judith. We are merely commonplace old bachelor country folks, and, at least, I am commonplace. We were very fond of
the handsome high-spirited fellow,
both as boy and man. I used to think
my sister spoiled him beyond measure,
a charge which she flung back upon me
with indignation; and, though I strongly denied such weakness, I am afraid
my conscience was not entirely at ease.

We are rich and live in a great rambling country house, that came to us from our grandfather. It is an old antiquated dwelling, but suits us all the better for that reason, and though we are not fond of leaving at home, we like society,
and usually manage to have pleasant
people staying with us.

Philipp was now in America, and was coming to visit us as soon as he had finished some business which he found awaiting him in New York. He wrote the very next day, and he lauded, and we were to expect him on Saturday—fourteen days from the date of his letter.

Two days before he was to arrive,
Judith received a letter from Jeanie Morris, announcing that she would be with us the next day. We always claimed at least two yearly visits from our young favorite, but the year before she had been in Europe, so more than a twelvemonth had elapsed without our seeing her.

"Nothing could have fallen out more delightfully," said I, when Judith read Jeanie's letter. "Upon my word, this arriving on nearly the same day looks like fate, doesn't it?"
"There you go," said my sister,
"spinning a romance, as usual. Now,
for mercy's sake, don't you let either Jeanie or Phil perceive how foolish you can be; it would be enough to make them hate each other for ever and ever."

Judith was so very severe upon my folly, that I felt convinced her mind
had leaped at once to the same conclusion. But I was in too high good humor to resort to her, and only said:
"But admit that it would be very nice if the two should take a fancy to each other." I persisted.

But Judith would admit nothing.
"I have lived a quarter of a century too long to meddle with young people's fancies," quoth she, "and I advise you to be content with reading volumes of printed trash, instead of trying to invent a romance on my sister's account."
The next day Jeanie arrived, looking lovelier than ever. The eighteen months which had passed since our last visit had developed her form, that had been, perhaps, a little too angular before. Now, though she was slim and tall, like a young Diana, her shoulders
and arms were exquisitely rounded;
every movement was graceful itself. Her face, always beautiful, was now even more so, having gained in expression and in delicate features, without losing its perfect color.

The next morning at breakfast, Judith said:
"I wish, Jeanie, dear, that you would go out and gather a quart of flowers for me. There are violets to be found at the foot of the lawn, and the hawthorn
by the carriage drive is just coming into bloom. We must brighten up these old rooms a little, now that you are here."

She did not tell Jeanie that she expected another guest, for whom, even more than for Jeanie, she wished the rooms "brightened up." She intended Phil to be a surprise.
"With pleasure," replied Jeanie,
"and I will go at once, as I don't want any more breakfast."

She went out, and a few minutes later, as I looked across the lawn, I saw her reaching up to pull down a spray of hawthorn, she made such a charming picture that I stopped at the window to gaze, and even called Judith to see also.

As she stretched up, her tall, stately figure looked like that of a young Greek goddess; her sleeve, falling back, revealed the delicate, yet rounded wrist, and the swell of the snowy arm, and her hair, which she had left flowing over her shoulders, shone in the sunlight like smothered gold.
"I still wear it so in the mornings," she had said, with a gay laugh, "when there are no strangers, as I used to
when a child."

But all these charms were nothing compared to her face, which seemed with that spiritual loveliness to which I have already alluded. "It is a look,"
I had said to Judith, the night before,
"that only comes after suffering and struggle and triumph; but where can the dear girl have ever suffered?" Suddenly the sound of wheels was heard, and a carriage came whirling up the drive. As it passed Jeanie, she looked around, and I thought, even at that distance, that I saw her blush as she met the eyes of its occupant, a handsome young fellow, no other than Phil himself. "She don't like being caught with her hair down," I said to Judith. Then I saw her dart behind the trees and vanish among the shrubbery, nor did she present herself for nearly an hour after, having by a side path, gained the back door and slipped up to her chamber, where she showed her toilet before showing herself again.

Meanwhile, Judith and I went mad
over Phil, and though he was now a traveled, elegant young man who ought to have been too blasé to feel pleased at anything, he was as demonstrative in his delight as if he had been a school-boy.
"But how did you get here?" I asked.
"We did not expect you till to-morrow,
and by train."

"Come up the river in a friend's yacht, and drove across the landing," he said. "Uncle Jack, you look superbly! As for Aunt Judy, she is younger and more wonderful than
ever."

"And you are evidently as impudent
as ever. What were you doing?" cried Judith, embracing him again.
"But where is Jeanie?" called I at last, after an hour or so had passed.
"As I spoke, as if in answer, in walked Miss Morris, and in eager haste I introduced the pair, in my own awkward fashion."

"This is that scapegrace, Phil Voorhies," I said. "You have heard him talk about him more than enough. I dare say we have made Miss Morris hate you in advance, Phil—"
"What more I said I do not know; I kept on talking, though unconscious that I had produced a very unexpected result. I was evidently doing a work of supererogation in introducing the two young people. They recognized each other, and this unexpected meeting was a surprise which caused both strong emotion, though I saw at once that it was not of an agreeable character."

Phil turned pale under all the sunburnt life by his sea voyage, and Jeanie
—well, Jeanie looked as I remembered seeing her once when she was little, and an older girl with a bad temper had boxed her ears; she looked positively faint, with a mingling of emotion in which it was difficult to tell whether a sort of frightened surprise
or proud indignation was uppermost.

I glanced at Judith. For once in her life Judith stood helpless, as near reduced to a state of coma as I was myself.
Of course this scene was over in a flash.
Jeanie was the first to speak. She held out her hand.
"How do you do, Mr. Voorhies?"
she said. "I met your friend in Europe."
"Uncle Jack," she added, turning to me
in explanation.

Judith, with the readiness of her sex, made a diversion. It was near the dinner hour, for we dined early in the country and there was only just time to get ready. She hurried Jeanie away, accordingly, and ordered Phil to his chamber.

"It is your old room, of course, and you know the road," she said; "so I'll not have Jack go with you, and keep you talking for half an hour, while the soup gets cold."

Well, I can only guess at the feelings of the rest of the party, but that dinner was by no means the pleasant repast to which I had so eagerly looked forward
all the morning.

We talked enough. Indeed everybody talked incessantly, as if afraid of a catastrophe of some kind in case
there should ensue an instant's silence.
We talked gaily, too, and I talked a great deal, but all the while I was deeply uncomfortable, and kept saying mal à propos things in spite of myself; and Judith nipped me severely;
and it seemed to my dazed intellect allusions which she uttered remarks and things which tried hard to behave to each other as if they were only casual acquaintances, meeting after a long separation.

Did you say you met Phil in Paris,
Jeanie? I asked at last with my usual knack at blundering.
"I think so—I don't remember," she replied, carelessly, and went on with her tale, while Judith froze my blood
with one glance scorn, and I sank back in my chair, determined to control my tongue though the effort should cause me to burst a blood vessel.

But would you believe it? In less than five minutes I heard myself interrupting Voorhies when he had taken his turn at galloping into conversation.
He was telling something about Rome
—the new excavations in the Esqueline, I think—and I burst in with:
"Was Jack there?"

Then I felt myself turn scarlet.
Again I reclined helplessly in my chair,
again Judith withered my soul with a glance of contempt; but this time she spoke:
"I beg and pray," said she, "that one of you will try and remember just when, where, and how many times
you happened ever to encounter each other, for old Jack will allow no rational talk until you do. Not having known that you were acquainted, he insists on being dazzled and stunned, as if there were something extraordinary in the fact—a Rabelian mystery, at least."

Then all three laughed, and I linished the climax by stammering:
"O, no—mystery—why should I think so—I am sure—very glad—to find you old friends—"

Then Philipp's voice made itself heard, excessively courteous, but with an effort at polite indifference, whose failure was palpable, even to my confused senses.

"I cannot flatter myself by supposing that I have a right to use the pleasure of your company, Uncle Jack; but at all events, I can tell you where I first had the honor of meeting Miss Morris. It was at Rome."

I did not look up. I was afraid of committing some atrocity, even if I ventured so far as that. But I felt that Philipp looked toward Jeanie Morris as he spoke; that he paused, too,
with the determination of making her speak. She did, after an instant:

"Yes, Aunt Judith—three bouces.
O, yes; I know now what you said—so it was Rome. I had the impression I saw you in Paris—one meets so many people in so many places, when one makes a rapid tour like mine."

"And afterward, at Biarritz," returned he in a slow, distinct voice, that had an old, hard ring under its elaborate politeness.

"Biarritz?" of course—what a memory you have! If Jeanie had not been a trifling less indifferent, one would have said it was mocking and insolent.
I could not endure her an instant longer without getting a glimpse of their faces. I ventured to glance up from under my eyebrows, which, fortunately, were long and shaggy. I looked first at Jeanie. She was playing with a bunch of grapes. A picture of indifference she made that would have been perfect in its way, had her attitude been less studied, or her pretty fingers less contracted in their nervous
closing over the purple fruit.

Then I glanced at Phil. He was frowning like a thunder cloud, and his mouth was set hard and stern under the drooping lines of his heavy mustache.
At Judith I positively did not dare to look. Directly she spoke:
"Now, if Jack has quite satisfied his curiosity, perhaps you will go on with your description, Judith. You may say three bouces! Well, Phil, they found, or they did not find—what? Between doubts as to my bouces, and Jack's absolute behavior, I can't tell where you
were."

"Cigarette time, Aunt Judy!" cried Philipp. "We must leave the statue half-exhausted."
"Come away, Jeanie," cried Judith, pushing back her chair and making a dash for the door. "Let us leave these wretches to their incantations; I can't stand smoke after dinner."

She took Jeanie's arm, and the pair left the room. The instant the door closed, Phil turned quite savagely upon
me.

"Why didn't you let me know that girl was to be here?" he demanded.
"How could I think of it?" pleaded I in desperation. "I did not know that you had ever set eyes on each other."
"Good gracious, Phil, what does it all mean?"

"Mean?" cried he. "It means that I'll not spend a night under the same roof with her! I can't help how it looks. I don't care what anyone thinks about it."

"Going away? Why, you'll break Judith's heart!"
"Don't talk to me about hearts!"
roared Philipp. "The whole of such thing was left out of their anatomy. However, that's neither here nor there—I can't stay; I would not endure another hour of such purgatory as that dinner was, for any price."

"Matters did not seem to go on smoothly somehow," said I.
"Smoothly!" echoed Philipp, in a voice that sounded like the blow of a hammer. "Then he knows that in a higher, more tragic way, that would have done credit to the Mephistopheles himself."

"Do tell me what it is all about?" I cried, feeling more bewildered than
ever.
"There's never any use in explanation," returned Philipp, loftily. "I am very sorry to appear rude; I can only say to your goodness to excuse it. I look!"

"But—only think how absurd it will look!" I interrupted him at that point.
"I am determined to induce him to resist!"

"It will be better than staying here."
No, Uncle Jack, I must go! Tell Aunt Judith I received a telegram—anything."

"But you had better see her,"
said I.
"No—I can't see her," returned Philipp, and I understood that, though he knew from experience he could make me do anything but see her, he was afraid to encounter Judith. "She will be angry, I know; right enough, too. But I must go; I must!" He rose as he spoke and left the room, and I did not venture to detain him.

I sat dazed, mechanically smoking cigar after cigar, wondering what it all meant. Maybe I dropped into a doze.
Anyway, in spite of my favorite smoke,
I felt as if I had a nightmare; I roused myself enough at last to think that I must join the others, when I heard Judith's step in the hall.

"Jack! Where are you, Jack?" she cried.
"Here I am," I groaned, rising to meet her.

But ever mortal hear the like of this? She cried, waiting an open letter over her head, and looking better
adapted to serve as a model for Media, or some other unpleasant historical or poetical personage, than the feminine color in the household of a timid old bachelor.

"Never, never! I am fifty years old, but if I was five hundred I could not expect such a thing to happen twice."

"What is it?" I asked. "Is Philipp?"
"I've not seen him—one of the men met him in the road."

"Then he has gone, after all!"
"Gone?" echoed Judith. I can find no comparison that could do justice to her tone.

"I suppose he tells you all about it in his letter," I suggested, hoping at least to be relieved from explanation,
since I really had none to offer.

"Say! I think you are crazy. You are all as mad as hatters. I'll turn this house into an asylum, and shut you all up in it, if there's no other way."

"But the letter—"
"Didn't I tell you its from Jeanie?"
cried Judith, fairly dancing at me in her anger and disappointment. "Jeanie
has gone away!"

"Jeanie gone too?" I muttered, and sat helpless.
"Gone too," demanded Judith. "Do you mean that Philipp has left the house?"

I nodded. I was past speech for the moment.
"Tell me this instant what it all means," shrieked Judith. "I'll not wait a second!"

I really think she was so utterly beside herself that, if the table had not been between us, she would have shook me without the least knowing what she was at. I found voice to say:
"Philipp went into a great state—
said he would not stay a night in the house with that girl. I tried to get him to see you before he started; I thought he was with you."

Judith sat down in a chair and glared at me.
"What does Jeanie say?" I ventured to ask.

My question agitated my sister so much that I really thought she would fly into a passion. Then with her usual brusque changeableness, she suddenly began to read the note aloud.

"DEAR AUNT JUDITH—You must forgive me—somehow I will explain—
I cannot say now. I am leaving the house—I shall take the train to New York—mamma is there. Try not to be very angry with me, and invent some reason to give to Uncle Jack—I can think of none in my confusion—but I must go. It breaks my heart to believe so ill forward you—do please try to pardon it, and believe me always your loving Jeanie."

"Heaven and earth," cried I.
"Gone!"
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

"Gone to town," I said. "Why,
good gracious, Philipp has gone there
too!"

There was a brief silence between us,
the room grew rapidly darker, for twi-
light was coming on, so that I could not
well see Judith's face. Suddenly she
started me by bursting into a fit of
laughter. There she sat and laughed
like a maniac, and the more I begged
her to stop, the more she laughed.

"O, don't you understand?" she
managed at length to articulate.
"Gone!" Ordered the carriage, and
drove away while I was busy about the
garden, who is ill."

LOCAL NEWS.

—Mr. Thos. J. Nimmo was in town this week.

—Daley's new hotel will be ready for visitors by the 1st of June.

—Mr. D. H. Loar shipped a car load of shooks from Oakland Saturday.

—Mr. J. W. Veitch is erecting a neat fence around his property on Oak street.

—Mr. D. H. Loar shipped two cars of shooks from this station since our last issue.

—Over $10,000 has been added to the assessable basis of Oakland within the past year by improvements.

—A substantial board side-walk has been put down on the north-east front of the Bailey Park.

—The hour of meeting of the M. E. Sunday School has been changed from 2 P. M., to 9 o'clock A. M.

—D. E. Offutt, Esq., has had platform and side walks erected at both the east and west fronts of his store building.

—Married—In Oakland, Md., on Thursday, April 10th, 1879, by Rev. John M. Davis, Mr. A. C. Wotring and Miss Christina Eckhard, all of Garrett county, Md.

—Married—At the Hoover House, Oakland, Md., Wednesday, April 10th, 1879, by Rev. John M. Davis, Mr. John Higgins and Miss Emma Hart both of Preston county, W. Va.

—A far-seeing editor says: "Young men sending spring poetry to this office will please inclose name and address—not for publication, but as an evidence of their insanity in case they are ever arrested for murder."

—According to a correspondent of the Piedmont Herald, the trustees of the public school at Duckworth Settlement, Allegany county, have a tough time keeping school. Evil-disposed persons smash the windows, doors and stoves. Six stoves have been broken and the trustees have ordered a seventh, and, says the correspondent, "are determined to continue the school to the end of the term at all hazards."

Church Services—Sunday, Lutheran Church.—Preaching at 7 o'clock P. M. by Rev. O. C. Miller.

Cows for Sale.
Mr. Nelson Ervin will sell, cheap for cash four good milk cows and one good two-year old steer.

Quarterly Meeting and Church Dedication.

The third quarterly meeting of the Sabbath and Johnstown circuit of the M. E. Church will be held at Friendsville May 3d and 4th.

The new church recently erected at Friendsville, will be dedicated at the same time. Dr. Bolton will be in attendance.

Change of Mail Route.
By an order issued from the Post Office Department Mail Route No. 10,198, formerly from Deer Park to Addison, Pa., is changed, the route now beginning at Oakland, instead of Deer Park. The mail leaves Oakland on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. This order takes effect on the first day of May.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending April 16:

Wm. C. Pennington and wife and John P. Hubbard and wife, to Cornelius W. Friend, part of "Sweet Pink," 50 acres; $150.

Wm. C. Pennington and wife and John P. Hubbard and wife, to Cornelius W. Friend, Military Lot No. 2855; $100.

Train Wrecked.
About 6 o'clock on Thursday evening of last week, as freight engine No. 432, going west, was pulling up to the water station at this place, the hind truck of one of the cars broke, throwing five cars from the track, and damaging them badly. A riggers' car was summoned from Piedmont, and the south track was soon cleared for the passage of trains. The night freights east and west were delayed for a time. No one was injured.

Commissioners Meeting.
The County Commissioners were in session all of last Monday and Tuesday of the present week.

The bond of Christian Beitzel, road supervisor, was approved. Isaac Larue was appointed Constable for District No. 9. Bond filed and approved.

The Board passed an order declaring that portion of the National Road within the limits of Garrett county a free road, and instructed their Clerk to notify toll gate keepers not to exact or receive any more tolls on said road.

Messrs. Chard, Browning and Margroff were re-appointed tax collectors for 1879, with a commission of 5 per cent.

Notwithstanding the number who had their assessments reduced the basis for the ensuing year will be considerably larger than last year.

Board adjourned to meet Monday, May 7th.

Grantsville Rejoicing.

A gentleman in this city, on telegraphing the news to Grantsville that the county commissioners had passed an order declaring the National road free in Allegany county, was informed in return that the citizens of that town were so elated that it was immediately, on receipt of the news, decided to celebrate the event by an illumination of all the houses, and bonfires throughout the town last night.—Cumberland Times, Tuesday.

No Tolls on the National Road.

An order was passed by the Allegany County Commissioners, at their meeting on Monday last, says the News, notifying Edward Donohoe, late superintendent of the National road, that in pursuance of acts of the Maryland legislature and United States Congress, the County Commissioners had assumed control of the National road, dating their possession from January 31, 1879, and requesting Donohoe to account for the tolls collected since that time.

He was also notified to cease the collection of tolls on the road on and after the 15th of April. By this action it will be seen that the board have decided to conduct as much of the National road as lies in Allegany county on a free basis. They propose to divide the road in that county into two or three divisions and place county supervisors in charge.

We hope our Commissioners will take action, at their next meeting, looking to the repair of this thoroughfare within our borders.

Literary.

The Garrett Literary Society met in Legge's Hall on Saturday night last at 8 o'clock, President Loar in the chair. The hall was filled with members and spectators. The programme was rendered as follows: Reading of the Society paper by W. P. Townsend; selection, Wm. Arnold. A debate was on the programme, but as both speakers on the negative were absent, it was dropped and the debate given, by default, in favor of the affirmative. Considerable sensation was caused by the reading of an article in the paper entitled "Saturday evening in Oakland," which it is not our province to discuss here.

The meetings are largely attended, the room being full nightly, and the interest seems to be increasing. This is right, for the Society is deserving of success, is a benefit to our young people, and we are pleased to see it prosper, and hope it may continue to do so in the future.

Sunday School Officers.

Sunday last elections for Sunday School officers were held in the M. E. Lutheran and Presbyterian churches, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

M. E. S. S.
Superintendent—J. M. Davis.
Asst. Supt.—S. L. Townsend.
Secretary—A. G. Sturgiss.
Asst. Sec.—Thos. A. Bosley.

Presbyterian S. S.
Superintendent—A. L. Osbourne.
Asst. Supt.—Jas. M. Arnold.
Secretary—Ed M. Spedden.
Asst. Sec.—Alton D. Osbourne.
Librarian—De C. Bolden.

Asst. Lib.—A. Loewenstein.
Collector—Ed. Sineell.
Treasurer—Sophia Loewenstein.

Superintendent—W. H. Tower.
Asst. Supt.—John A. Grant.
Librarian—Edward Spedden.
Asst. Librarian—Geo. Little.
Secretary—Wm. A. Daily.
Treasurer—G. S. Hamill.

Finding of the Body of Lish.

Thursday of last week Mr. B. F. Kidd, while passing through a strip of wood land, about one mile from the residence of Mr. George Steyer, (the former home of Lish,) he came upon the dead body of George Lish, lying upon the ground. Notice was immediately sent to A. L. Osbourne, Esq., of Oakland, who, accompanied by Dr. E. H. Parsons, proceeded to the place designated, where a large number of persons from the neighborhood had assembled. The following jury was empaneled: Enoch Hendrickson, foreman; William B. White, John G. Riley, J. Sowers, Thos. K. Harvey, F. A. Shout, Elijah Moon, W. E. Harvey, Henry Thompson, B. F. Kidd and Henry Morchland. After a post mortem examination by Dr. Parsons, and hearing the testimony of several witnesses, the jury found that the deceased "had left his home on the 4th day of December last, for the evident purpose of hunting; that while in this pursuit it so happened that, accidentally, and by misfortune he, the said George Lish, shot himself with a gun, in his own hands, of which shooting he instantly died."

The body was found lying beside a large rock, on which the deceased had evidently been standing, and the supposition is that in bringing his gun down the stock slipped off the side of the rock, and the hammer striking, the gun was fired, the ball entering the right side near the nipple, and came out on the left side of the face. Although the body had been exposed for more than four months it was but little decayed. The remains were interred on the Steyer farm.

TELEGRAPHIC.

MR. BLAINE OPENS THE BALL.

(Special to The American.)

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The Senate galleries were filled to repletion to-day long before 1 o'clock, when the hour fixed for the debate on the Army bill arrived. On the floor were a large number of representatives. Secretary Sherman, his brother, the General, and many prominent officials were also present and evinced deep interest in the proceedings. It was noticed that the attendance in the diplomatic gallery was unusually large. The original programme was that senator Wallace should open the discussion to-day, but a change was decided upon, in order to allow Senator Blaine to offer his amendment, making it a penal offence for any person to appear armed with a deadly weapon of any description, either concealed or displayed, within a mile of any polling place where an election for a member of Congress is being held. Just before Senator Blaine took the floor, Senator Withers, of Virginia, who has charge of the bill, said in a deprecatory tone that he would deprecate a political discussion upon the bill, but wished that a vote might be reached upon it as soon as possible.

This remark rather astonished the Republican senators, and elicited from Mr. Blaine the inquiry whether the Democrats intended to abstain from the discussion of the measure altogether. To this Senator Withers returned an evasive reply, but retreated from his first statement by declaring that there was no disposition to prevent a full discussion of the measure. Mr. Blaine then formally offered his amendment and opened the hall on the Republican side with one of the most brilliant and effective speeches he has ever delivered since he became a member of the Senate. It was only of an hour's duration, but there were very few idle words spoken. He came prepared to storm the Democratic position, and he did not desist from what seemingly was a congenial task until he had completely demolished it. Mr. Blaine is always at his best in political discussion, but to-day it is conceded on all sides that he surpassed himself, and he certainly made the best speech yet delivered on the subject. He began by charging the Democrats with raising a dishonest issue and placing their country in a false position before the world. They were endeavoring to make it appear that there was danger of our elections being interfered with by the army.

To show how ridiculous and baseless this assertion was, Mr. Blaine read a statement showing that all the troops east of the Mississippi river, embracing an area of territory which contained forty-one millions of people, was only 2,777 men, or sixty soldiers to every million of people. He then proceeded to read from the list the number of troops in each Southern state, while the speaker accompanied by observations that teemed with cutting satire. In Delaware, whose two senators manifested so much alarm lest the military might overthrow republican institutions, there was not a single soldier. In West Virginia, the junior senator from which state (Hereford) had flown off into a passion over the iron heel of military despotism, there was not a soldier. In Maryland there were 192 artillerymen employed to man Fort M'Henry, at the entrance of Baltimore harbor. In Virginia 282 men attended a school of practice at Fortress Monroe, and there was not another federal soldier in the state. In North Carolina there were 30 soldiers guarding the fort at the mouth of Cape Fear river; 130 men guarding the forts at Charleston harbor were all the troops now in South Carolina; 29 soldiers were stationed in Georgia; in Florida there were 182; in Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri and Mississippi there was not a federal soldier. There were but 57 in Arkansas, 32 in Alabama, 229 in Louisiana, and in Texas, apart from those that guarded the Rio Grande, there was not a soldier. One thousand one hundred and fifty-five soldiers, Mr. Blaine sarcastically observed, were all that oppressed and destroyed the liberties of fifteen millions of the Southern people. He further analyzed this list and made the picture still more ludicrous by showing that there was not one soldier to a county, only one soldier to every seven hundred square miles of territory and one soldier to every thirteen polling places. These figures of Mr. Blaine elicited the greatest merriment all over the chamber at the expense of the Democrats.

The climax of this part of the speech was reached when Mr. Blaine, in his most earnest manner, and addressing himself to the Democratic side, said that there were not two Democratic senators who could now go into the cloak room without enjoying a smile. The appropriateness of this double entendre appeared to be duly appreciated. How Europe would laugh, when told that a territory larger than England, France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and the German Empire combined, could be ruled by a military force that was not as large as the Democratic policy force in Baltimore, and not half as large as the Democratic police force of New York. Mr. Blaine then proceeded to inquire into the motive for this legislation. This issue on troops, he again boldly declared, was false, and charged that the real purpose of the Democrats was to get rid of the civil power of the federal government over the election of representatives to Congress. The Army bill was intimately connected with another bill, the Legislative, now being considered in the House, and both measures were the offspring of a Democratic caucus. This brought Senators Withers and Davis to their feet, who controverted this assertion, and tried to make it appear that the bill had come through the usual channels of legislation. Mr. Blaine being closely pressed by these gentlemen for his authority for the statement, quoted Senator Beck's declaration early in the session, and supplemented this by revealing some of the secrets of the Appropriation Committee, where it seems that the Democratic members approved of some of the amendments that were offered by the Republicans, but were not willing to have them incorporated in the bill, saying that they had no objection to have them passed as separate measures. This little digression was greatly enjoyed by the audience.

Mr. Blaine, still taunting the Democrats for their duplicity and their want of sincerity, asked if any Democratic Senator ever saw a soldier at the polls. Mr. Hereford was prompt to respond, and stated that he had seen them in his own town. "What did they arrest anybody for?" asked Mr. Blaine. "For the purpose of intimidation," Mr. Hereford replied, feebly. "O, yes," said Mr. Blaine, "that is the old cry," and Hereford sat down amid laughter from the Republicans. Senator Williams, of Kentucky, made his debut in the Senate by saying that he had seen soldiers in his State around the polls on election day in April, 1864. Mr. Blaine quickly retorted by saying that as the war did not terminate until April, 1866, it was not surprising that there were some troops in Kentucky during the war. Senator Logan here reinforced Senator Blaine by stating that he was in Louisville, 1865, with a command of 65,000 men; that the troops were marched out of the city during the election, and that he never saw any more powerful election in his life. Mr. Blaine then proceeded to discuss the relationship between the army and the legislative bill, for the purpose of proving that the object of the Democrats was to prevent the federal government from having any voice whatever in congressional elections. The design was that no civil officers were to be present, except two men of straw, who were kindly permitted to stand by, and who would not be kicked out or eluded if they behaved themselves.

He next touched upon the attempt to coerce the executive to approve of the repeal of the statutes in question and said: "We are then told that if we don't pass these bills as they come from the Democratic caucus we are not to have any of the appropriations that go with them." This, he declared, was something unprecedented in the history of this country. He referred to the vetoes of Jackson and Tyler, which shook the country to its centre. Whoever heard that the charter of the National Banks of the United States were put upon appropriation bills and the supplies threatened to be withheld unless the President signed as Congress desired? But as the Democrats don't intend to stop until they have wiped out every war measure, Mr. Blaine said that they had begun appropriately by commencing on a law that bears the signature of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Alexander Stephens, the Vice President of the late Confederacy, boasted not long ago that for seventy-two years preceding the outbreak of the rebellion, the South, by combining with the Democrats of the North, had ruled the country, and that now, by a return to Congress, they might do so again. The speaker never thought that he would have lived to see this prophecy so soon fulfilled, but he had. Ex-Confederates were now in power, and these bills were the result. He characterized it as the audacity of revolution for any set of senators to say that we will stop these laws or we will stop the great departments of the Government. But it was a revolution which would not evolve, and which would end in an ignominious retreat. Referring to the course the President would pursue upon these bills, Senator Blaine said he knew less about it than any Senator; but it seemed to him that the very dead would raise from their graves if he should consent to be intimidated and outraged in his constitutional powers by threats like these. Mr. Blaine, upon resuming his seat, was warmly congratulated by nearly every senator and representative on the floor. The speech is the absorbing topic of discussion to-night, and is highly praised.

Senator Withers uttered a feeble response, and retorted the old Democratic arguments, but, compared with Mr. Blaine's burning eloquence, his words were like so many empty sounds. Senator Wallace made the closing speech of the day. It contained no new argument, but was on the whole a defence of the course of his party.

FLEEING FROM DEATH.

WHEELING, W. VA., April 14.—This evening Sheriff Ford, of Preston county, and Deputy Mitchell, of Ohio county, arrived in this city with Elihu Gregg, a man 57 years of age, from Waynesburg, who was convicted and sentenced to be hanged for burning the Preston county court house; also a dwelling in the year 1868. He was indicted by the grand jury of Preston county July 12, 1869, and on the 19th of the same month the petit jury returned a verdict of "Guilty," and the day of his execution was set for September 8, 1869, but a writ of error and supersedeas was obtained and a new trial was granted by the Supreme Court and at the new trial Gregg was again convicted and sentenced to death, but before the execution could take place he escaped by burrowing his way out of jail, since which time (1869) he has eluded the officers, until last fall, when he was arrested in Greene county, Pa., by Sheriff Dinsmore. Gregg's attorney has made every effort to save him on legal technicalities, but to no purpose, as the Pennsylvania authorities had to give him up. The old man has been carrying strychnine in a bottle, hid in his pants, since 1874, and when told that he was to go back to West Virginia this morning he took a large dose of it at a moment when not watched. He was taken with spasms and irideline was administered, which saved him. He is now in the Ohio county jail and will be handed to Governor Matthews in a few days asking to have his death sentence commuted to life imprisonment, which will be favorably considered.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 14.—As the Czar was taking his usual morning walk early to-day near the palace four shots from a revolver were fired at him. The Czar was unhurt. The man who fired the shots was arrested by the crowd which the firing attracted. The city is now being decorated in token of thankfulness for the Czar's escape.

A Better Way.

The planters along the lower Mississippi appear to have adopted a plan for stopping the negro exodus that is characteristic if not effective. They hang or shoot a few intending emigrants as a warning to others, and patrol the river banks with shot guns to prevent the fleeing blacks from getting on board passing steamboats. These bulldozing measures only serve to intensify the negroes' desire to escape, and they manage to evade the patrols and board the boats at unexpected points. Committees appointed by the planters notify the captains not to take away the colored people, but the captains are eager to swell the profits of their trips, and few of them pay any attention to such orders when out of the range of the Committees' shot guns. Thus far all attempts to check the movement have only increased it. Suppose the planters should now disband their patrols and committees, put away their weapons, and try a new policy. A little justice, humanity and common sense would, we venture to say, prove a perfect remedy for the evil. Let the planters of any locality invite their laborers to a friendly conference, and then let them talk somewhat in this way: "You have had a hard time to make a living, and you have often been denied your political rights. We admit that we have not always treated you fairly, but we mean to do better in future. We want you to stay and work our lands. We can't get along without you. Now we propose to give every head of a family five acres of land for a homestead. We will put a low price on it, and you can pay for it in five years, or if that is not long enough you can have ten. You can cultivate your own little patches Saturdays, raise your corn and a little cotton, and thus make a little money beside your main crop on the plantation. You shall not be bulldozed any more. No vote shall be taken and you shall go to the polls and see that your votes are received and honestly counted." A little talk of this kind, backed by an evident friendliness of feeling and a genuine disposition to defend the rights and secure the welfare of the colored people, would, we are confident, allay the emigration fever at once, and cause the discontented negroes to return to their cabins and begin work on the new crop with a cheerfulness and energy that would surprise their employers. The planters have been treating the negro as though he were a mule; let them try the experiment of treating him like a man. He asks very little—a home that he can call his own, a chance to gain by hard work sufficient coarse food and clothing for himself and his family, and the rights of citizenship guaranteed him by the Constitution and laws. Who will say that his demands are unreasonable? He has produced nearly all the wealth of twelve great States of the Union. Yet he is constrained to fly to a strange land to seek the common necessities of life, and to obtain the privileges that are his right, and that are prized by him as the tangible assurances of freedom and manhood.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS. OAKLAND, MD., April 17th, 1879. Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Wednesday, May 7th, 1879,

for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

BRIDGE NOTICE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners at their next meeting after thirty days from the first publication of this notice, for the erection of a bridge across the Youghiogheny River at Sang Run in District No. 6, Garrett county, Maryland.

D. H. FRIEND, R. E. HENNING, L. H. JOHNSON.

4195

NOTICE.—My books and papers are at the office of H. Wheeler Combs, Attorney at Law. In my absence he is authorized to accept for any money that may be due by account or otherwise.

N. B. WAYMAN, ap. 12-1w.

D. E. H. PARSONS, offers his professional services to the people of Oakland and vicinity.

8 3 m

J. B. BRANT, Surveyor, Auctioneer and Conveyancer.

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

H. WHEELER COMBS, REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

Will negotiate sales of real estate of every description.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

H. WHEELER COMBS.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains a good quantity of cultivated land, and is susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 8 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stabling. There is a good young orchard of 70 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for a short time at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property:

This property, containing 20 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 9 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Cranberry Summit. Some of the best mill seats in the county, and is surrounded by the best timber land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 10 rooms; good stabling attached. The wheels and traps for a Saw Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole, than the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE,

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 10x100, improved by an

Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, is situated immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Bailey's new hotel and commands one of the best views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-completed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home an opportunity is here offered to secure a lot at a price less than the cost of the buildings. Terms.—One-third down; balance in three equal annual payments.

Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS, Real Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

Buried Treasure.
A disposition to secrete valuables, particularly gold and silver, was early manifested in countries where it is practiced, and in the sequel will account for their disappearance and scarcity. It is also clearly a fact that there has been interrupted secretions for thousands of years. The same instinctive propensity to hide from the knowledge of others that which is most desirable still characterizes many sections of the world. The late Queen of Madagascar was inclosed in a coffin made of silver dollars riveted together, valued at $30,000, requiring the united strength of fifteen stalwart men to carry it.

Queens do not die every day in Madagascar, and when one does throw off the coil of mortality during the despotism of a pagan sovereign, not only treasures, but the headless bodies of scores of obedient subjects are buried on the solemn occasion to accompany their liege superior on the voyage to eternity.

There are political conditions of modern governments which so alarm some persons that they conceal their valuables to avoid a real or imaginary danger of losing them. Security is best attained by burial. Fear of severe taxation, and a distrust of bank vaults as places of safety, lead also to concealment in the ground. During the civil war immense sums were buried in the Southern States to save what could not be conveniently carried beyond the possible grasp of soldiers, with an expectation of a resurrection of the strong box when the conflict was over.

No doubt large sums have been recovered from underground concealment, but it is quite probable that a million or two of dollars, plate and important documents, in consequence of the death of owners who were alone in possession of a knowledge of the exact place of burial, will never come to the surface again, unless by accidental discovery. This explains one of the ways in which the circulating medium totally disappears to the derangement of commercial operations, to cripple the prosperity of families and communities in after times.

With the money-loving character of Arabs, who wanderers over the hot sands of the interior or residents of towns, those who have had intercourse with them are familiar, and it is equally curious they rarely or never part with coin in trade or otherwise if possible to keep it. There are very aged caravan merchants, who are employed in transporting goods to and from Turkey, Persia, Egypt, Syria, and distant points in Africa, who must have had in the course of fifty and sixty years very large amounts of gold—for gold they have a decided preference; but instead of bettering their condition with it by dressing in finer garments or providing more liberally for their families, no change is ever noticeable in their domestic relations. They receive, but never pay out. At their death, often not a shilling can be found. At some favorable moment, for eluding the watchful eyes of those about them the money is buried with an expectation of taking it up again, no doubt; but those burials become numerous, and the spot or bearings are quickly forgotten in the vastness of the desert to gather more for the same destiny.

A similar propensity for secreting treasure in the earth is common among Hindus. For forty centuries they have been adding to the underground hoards. The Chinese, too, in many sections of that vast empire consider a deep hole preferable to an iron chest. They have a saying that "Security is below the plowshare."

What has become of the gold and silver actually possessed by the Persians, the Jewish Kings, the Greeks, Romans, and other nations of antiquity, centuries before the Christian era?

In the triumphal march of Alexander the Great, who trod empires under his feet, the collections of precious metals and gems, if reliance is placed in historical chronicles, present an overwhelming concentration of wealth, as precious then as in the present day of grace, and equally efficient as a symbol of power.

What has become of that gold? Much has been lost.

Then the sea has swallowed up in its capacious maw a moiety of the world's treasures. The old Spanish galleons laden with gold and silver bars on their way from cruelly crushed Mexico and Peru to the royal mint at Madrid, often went to the bottom, carrying down whole crews of pious robbers, where they will probably never be recovered, and who can inform us what a miration of sharks and octopii till an other geological revolution elevates the bed of the ocean above the water level.

Where are the wedges of gold pillaged from Montezuma and the royal successors, and who can inform us what has become of the transported golden sun wreathed from the temple of the Incas? Millions on millions were borne away by the greedy invaders, to dazzle the eyes of a Spanish court, but that same old Spain, once so rich from the spoils of South America, which she Christianized in exchange for filthy lucre, has disappeared comparatively. It is now poor Spain, without money and almost without credit. Where has the money gone?

This is, indeed, a grave question. An opinion prevails that there are tons of coined gold lying in the bottom of wells, under heavy stones in the dark recesses of temples, churches and other sacred edifices and religiously protected structures, where no attempts at discovery would be permitted, even where tradition points to them as the safe deposits of fabulous wealth.

In the course of some necessary repairs of an antiquated church property at St. Germain, in France, a few years since, an urn was incidentally exposed which, on being broken open, yielded up 7,000 silver coins. There were no dates upon them, but Greek and Latin inscriptions led to the belief they were struck off before the Christian era, when Marseilles was the center of commerce and civilization. They were a state of excellent preservation, bearing the stamp Mosella on one side.

About twenty years ago, some laborers were digging in a graveyard at Sidon, that very ancient city, whose origin is referred to one of the voyages in Noah's ark, struck upon three earthen pots which were actually full of gold coins bearing the head of Philip, father of Alexander the Great. They were beautifully milled, but the edges or rims were rough, as though no pains were taken to finish that part of the piece. In a quarrel among themselves respecting a division of the spoils their wrangling was overheard and the surprising news of a discovery of so much gold was soon propagated to the ears of the Governor, who took prompt measures for securing the pots. The finders only saving one or two specimens. One of them was brought to New York by the late Hartford Smith, Esq., then Consul at Beyrout; another was purchased for a cabinet in France; and a third is said to be in the British Museum. What ultimately became of all the rest has never been ascertained, but it was conjectured that they were immediately melted by the Pasha as a prudent method of eluding the insatiable demands of a superior at Constantinople, who might hear of the circumstance. It was generally thought by intelligent gentlemen that the money belonged in all probability to the military chest of the Pasha, and hissing the magnificent commercial city of Tyre. How or why the money was buried, of course, is simply conjectural. The intrinsic value of each piece was a trifle more than an English sovereign.

Both here and in various places in Europe, plate and money, even within the present century, have often been concealed for safety till a temporary calamity should pass away.

A popular impression has been entertained through ages of Roman history that the bed of the Tiber must positively be rich in gold and precious specimens of art, which have been accumulating since the expansion of Tarquin's reign. An impression is quite extensively propagated, that the filled up artificial harbor of Tyre must abound with submerged treasure. Its construction when that city controlled the commerce of the world, sections of the city still in perfect condition, is an amazing exhibition of masonry, which has not been surpassed with all our advantages, skill, engineering tact, and superior tools, even in 1877. An inclosure of deep water, common to the harbor gates, which were opened for the entrance or exit of vessels, is now so nearly filled up with sand that there was hardly depth enough for a small schooner to ride at anchor when the writer visited it. St. Paul, for a brief moment, in the course of his travels, the archeologist, and unsuspected amounts of treasure are entombed in that bed of sand.

Repeated applications have been made to the United States Government for a grant of money to explore the harbor, but that would allow examinations to be safely conducted with diving bells, dredges, etc., but permission has been invariably denied.

Silver undergoes destructive alteration in contact with gold. On the other hand, it is unchanged by its action, however long exposed to its contact. This fact has been repeatedly substantiated in submarine enterprises. Silver dollars, when taken from ancient vessels presented the frailest skeletons of their original form, quite worthless, while gold remained unaltered. Silver is slowly soluble in the ocean.

Stories of piratical money burials are common in the annals of the New England; and Captain Kidd, more celebrated than any of that hazardous profession, has the reputation of hiding so many chests and lead-covered pots of gold, that an epidemic oedema of the brain has been attributed to the search for them.

Long Island, on the New Jersey coast, and up the Hudson as far as a salmon formerly ascended. Mysterious intimations are received from the sea, that body has finally found the certain track to that very romantic freebooter's buried gold.

When Titus took possession of Jerusalem at the termination of a terrible slaughter of human beings, the treasures which had been returned to him were not there. The golden candlestick of seven branches was the only portable golden trophy of magnitude mentioned in connection with the overthrown city, which had been returned to him in the ovation decreed in honor of the conqueror. From that moment it was never seen again. When the holy vessels used in the service of the temple, which had been returned to Jerusalem from Babylon, a specific catalogue of which is given in the Old Testament, were sought for by a greedy Roman soldier, they could not be found. There are legends of their distribution in foreign countries, but those accounts are not reliable. It is far more probable that they are somewhere in the base of the sacred Mount Moria. Officiating priests had ample opportunity while the siege was progressing to cut extensive tunnels in the limestone rock leading out from the subterranean vaults beneath the temple, where those treasures could be safely concealed from the prying eyes of the invaders. And the theory that at some interesting period in the future, when explorations can be carried on under the protection of a Christian power far more extensively than they have been conducted by excavating parties now in Palestine, those vessels will be recovered, to verify statements which have come down through centuries as traditions.

It was never known what became of the Ark of the Covenant, in which were the two stone tables of the law. The Ark was carefully guarded, but never was seen after the destruction of the first temple, nor was it ever mentioned in the sacred scriptures. What if that memorial of David's reign, with the law written on the mount which Moses received from the fountain of all law, should also be found in after ages, whole or complete?

That gold and silver and rare stones were valuable when Abraham journeyed with his flock into the hill country of Canaan will not be disputed, since in a negotiation for a piece of ground 400 shekels were paid, of a certain value by weight—"current money of the merchant"—plainly showing

there were counterfeiters then as in these demoralized days of trade.

Modern advances in chemical science furnish no solvent for gold that would be safe to take into the stomach. Most notably dissolved the golden calf, but he compelled the Israelites to swallow the strange mixture, from which no bad results appear to have followed. Concealing gold for many thousands years, much of which remains where its owning owners secreted it; the losses of unmeasured wealth in the sea; the immense amounts used in the arts; the fabrication of plate; the hoarding by misers, and the ship loads kept by banking and other institutions, the possession of which is to meet pecuniary emergencies and sustain credit, will account for the disappearance of gold from circulation. There is another outlet for gold, a phenomenon worth mentioning—namely, the quantity made use of in dentistry.

There are probably ten thousand practicing dentists in the United States. One of the great stocks of the many hundreds of pounds of gold required for filling decayed teeth—a department of sanitary industry hardly known at the commencement of the present century—is now conducted. He says that plates of gold scarcely recognized, but which is a phenomenon worth mentioning—namely, the quantity made use of in dentistry.

With all the combined activity and enterprise of money-loving and money-making people, including mining energy, gold and silver are not the only means of sustaining the industries of the world. Were it not for the perpetual outlet through various channels adverted to in the foregoing observations, there would have been a glut, and depreciation to less than the value of iron or lead would have occurred in the days of Croesus, of Solomon, of Ptolemy, of Lucullus, or some other of the distinguished money gatherers of antiquity. Gold still holds its own, and its value is so long as humanity remains the same and the necessities, cupidity, and ambition of man in his relations to his fellow man remain unchanged.

Another source of waste which is not to be considered as a gradual disappearance of gold and silver, scarcely recognized as of much importance in accounting for their diminution after having been coined, is by attrition. Gold and silver are not the only means of sustaining the industries of the world. Were it not for the perpetual outlet through various channels adverted to in the foregoing observations, there would have been a glut, and depreciation to less than the value of iron or lead would have occurred in the days of Croesus, of Solomon, of Ptolemy, of Lucullus, or some other of the distinguished money gatherers of antiquity. Gold still holds its own, and its value is so long as humanity remains the same and the necessities, cupidity, and ambition of man in his relations to his fellow man remain unchanged.

Cure for Baldness.

Dr. George H. Rhee, of Atlanta, says that he has cured himself and others of baldness. His remedy is a solution of French or German soft soap and alcohol, with which the head must be thoroughly shampooed every morning. The following is the prescription, "R. Saponis viridis (Germ.), alcoholis, two ounces each; solve, filtra, et adde oil. lavandule gtt. xx—xxx." The lavender is added to cover the odor of the soap. After the shampooing the hair must be dried with warm water and the hair dried with a soft towel. "The immediate effect," the doctor says, "is a disagreeable feeling of tension of the scalp, as if it were stretched too tightly over the skull. To obviate this effect and to keep the scalp from getting too dry and thus perhaps set up a true pyriasis, it is necessary to follow up the shampooing with some fatty application, which may consist of some mild stimulant, thus: Castor oil, one part to alcohol three or four parts, with a little oil of rosemary or cinnamon, or any good pomade may be used. But the patient must not be alarmed if his hair falls out faster than ever for a while. This is due to the fact that many hairs are dead and only retained in their follicles by the plugging of the sheath with the accumulated sebacous matter."

WUTTEMBERG, in Germany, is often visited by terrible hail storms. In some parts of the country whole districts seem to be exempted from the hail tax on account of the damage caused by the hail. And these hail storms are apparently becoming more destructive. As regards liability to be visited, it appears that pine woods enjoy comparative immunity, while beech woods and bare hillsides are particularly unfortunate. The parishes most frequently devastated lie on the outskirts of wooded hills, but it does not appear that clearing of a wood has any deleterious influence. The valleys of the Neckar and some other rivers are the least troubled by this annoyance.

The Russians are peculiar. When collars are covered with cloth, the color indicates the character of the deceased. If the body is a young person, crimson is used; if a widow, brown; if a father, yellow; but black is never used.

"You may rest assured"—as the life-insurance fiend remarked to his victim.

VARIETIES.

—A toothache is a grunderpest.—N. Y. Herald.

—People of settled convictions.—Prisoners.

—A dark inheritance.—An Ethiopian complexion.

—Some men are like brooks—they are always murmuring.

—Whatever good an umbrella performs, it is "put up" to it.

—Why is a boy like a magician? Because he works by spells.

—Gallows executions may be called suspensions of public judgment.

—Landed articles.—Pencils and revolvers.—Boston Commercial Advertiser.

—Late to bed and early to rise wears out the strongest constitution.—New Orleans Picayune.

—Cheering to owners of real estate.—The small boy's pantaloons are easily rent.—Boston Transcript.

—The Camden Post says: "There is more virtue in honesty acquired riches than in unnecessary poverty."

—Why is a merchant who does a strictly cash business never at rest? Because his work is never done.—Boston Traveller.

—When did the alphabet get into a row? When A bet, B fit, D eried, N raged, Q bit, and X pounded.—Turner's Falls Reporter.

—Electricity saved a Baptist clergyman in Waterbury from the assault of a goat. He climbed a telegraph pole.—Danbury News.

—You can't always estimate a man by the smile on his face. Some wear it because it won't bring enough to put in pawn.—Quebec Record.

—There are some men in this world so mean that, if possible, they would use the bark of a dog for medicinal purposes.—Hackensack Republican.

—No matter how tired a woman may be, she always has reserve power enough to walk up three flights of stairs to attend a spring opening.—N. Y. Express.

—"Is this Alder Creek?" asked a tourist, of an intelligent foreigner in Oneida County, N. Y. "Yah, dis vas all der creek. I know of round here," replied the man.

—"The latest design for a brooch," says the Baltimore News, "is a pine cone." In this part of the country the latest design for a bust is a pint bottle.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

—Reactor.—These pigs of years are in fine condition, Jarvis. "Jarvis—'Yes, sir, they be. Ah, sir, if we wos all on us only as fit to die as them wos, we'd do!'"—Montreal Herald.

—Let a man pull a straw out of a hay mow at Leadville, to pick his teeth with, and the first thing he hears is: "Say, you thief, did you know hay was worth $200 a ton around here?"

—Two men in North Carolina disputed about the length of a pig's tail and ended in a fight in which one man was killed. The saddest thing about this is that the length of the pig's tail is not determined.

—A company is being organized in Holland for the importation of American live meat. That is all right. You just want to remember there is an immense difference between live meat and live cheese.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

—Two dorkies were vaunting their courage. "I ain't feared o' nuthin'," said one. "Den, Sam, I reckon you ain't feared to lean me a dollar!"

"No, Julius, I ain't feared to lean you a dollar, but I does hate to part wid an ole fren' forebber."—Knoxville Tribune.

—A baby is just one of the sweetest, cutest things in the world, and we wouldn't think of doing without them for an instant; but then, really, a baby is ever so much better off at home in its little bed than it is at a concert, and we can find 300 people who think as we do.—Steuenville Herald.

—Scene, a South End horse car. Enter an elaborately dressed lady, diamond solitaires, eight-button kids, etc. Car crowded. At first no one moves. Soon a gentleman offers his seat.

"Thank you, you are the only gentleman here. The rest is hogs." Fact.—Boston Transcript.

—"Mamma, I don't think the people who make dolls are very pious people," said a little girl to her mother, one day. "Why not, my child?" "Because you can never make them kneel. I always have to lay my doll down on her stomach to say her prayers."—Your Companion.

—A raw German, who had been summoned for jury duty, desired to be relieved, giving this reason: "Schludge, I can nigh goot English onderstan." Looking over the crowded bar, the judge replied: "O, you can serve. You won't have to understand good English; you won't hear any such here."

—A member of the rhetorical class in a certain college had just finished his declamation when the professor said: "Mr. —, do you suppose a General would address his soldiers in the manner in which you spoke that piece?"

"Yes, sir, I do," was the reply, "if he wos half scared to death."

—A Nevada surgeon is in trouble through trying to improve a woman's nose. She had broken it when a child, and the mishap had left it in a slightly crooked condition. The surgeon bargained to straighten it, and attempted to do so by breaking it anew. The operation left the nose in a worse shape than it was before. The woman sues for $10,000 damages.

—Mrs. John Horein, who lives near Shiloh Church, in Anderson county, Ky., recently gave birth to five children. In her first confinement she gave birth to twins; in her second to twins; in her third to triplets; in her fourth to "fivelets." At last accounts all of the five little ones were living and doing well.

—In the Iowa Agricultural College every girl in the junior class is taught how to make good bread, biscuit, puddings, pies and cake; also how to cook steak, make coffee, and in fact do all that is required of a housekeeper. The girls are besides instructed in science, mathematics and English literature. Flirting is the only accomplishment not taught it comes of itself.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.—The elephant gambols over the green.—The funniest sight that ever was seen.

—The elephant gambols over the green.—

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

Baptist ministers are soliciting mission work in Kansas at $300 per annum.

The Jewish Times computes the number of Jews all over the world to be 6,503,000.

There are seventy-four female members of school committees in Massachusetts; they are said to be efficient in their work.

Twenty ladies were authorized to write M. D. after their names by the Women's Medical College in Philadelphia recently.

The English Bible and Prayer Union, established for the consecutive and simultaneous reading of the Word of God, begins its fourth year with over 61,000 members.

There are several religious papers in this country conducted by the colored people. The colored Baptists have five, the Methodists three, and the Presbyterians one.

The College of Bishops, the Book Committee, and the Board of Missions of the Southern Methodist Church will hold their annual meetings in Nashville, Tenn., in the second week in May.

The Sunday-school Assembly which is to be held in the Yosemite Valley the coming summer promises to be very successful; leading men of all denominations are interesting themselves in it.

At a recent meeting of the Cherokee Indian Baptist Association, eleven churches were represented, and 800 persons were present; addresses were made by the Revs. Jack Walkingsick, Poor Wolf, and Mr. Whirlwind.

The total number of city missionaries in New York is 295, who make 800,000 visits a year. There are 118 Protestant Missions in that city, where Sunday-schools, preaching and other religious services are regularly carried on.

The Protestant Churches of Ireland couldn't that they are constantly losing their best and brightest ministers. Presbyterian ministers go to Scotland and America, and Episcopal ministers go to England, receiving in both cases better appointments.

The Lutheran Synod of Iowa celebrates the twenty-fifth anniversary of its existence this year. At its first meeting there were but three Pastors and one lay delegate; now it has 143 ministers, 229 congregations, and 15,300 communicants. It has grown chiefly by German immigration.

It is proposed to make the ancient William and Mary College of Virginia a part of the University of the South, at Swannock. The plan provides for the reorganization of the college as one of the colleges of Swannock University, preserving its name and its separate faculty, subject only in general management to the trustees of the University.

The King of Siam has richly endowed a college for the children of his court and of the princes, and appointed the Rev. S. G. McFarland, a Presbyterian missionary, to manage it. The institution is to be a strictly Christian college, and President McFarland is empowered to offer liberal salaries to other missionaries to become professors.

That a doctor or a lawyer gets for an hour's work what a teacher receives for that of a week is the complaint of the Canada School Journal, and yet the teacher has had to spend nearly as much time in preparing for his profession as the doctor or the lawyer for theirs, and the capacities necessary in them are as necessary to him. "The cause of the difference in remuneration is this," says the Journal: "The teacher is the servant of the public, the doctor and the lawyer are his masters."

Connecticut, with a school population of 138,407, had, during the past year, 130,937 children in her schools. Of this number 11,119 attended private schools. The wages of the female teachers during the year were slightly increased, while those of the male teachers were reduced about six per cent. They are still stupidly unequal; the average salary of the male teachers is $61.03 per month, and of the female teachers, $35.50. The total expenses of the public schools last year were $1,509,477.05, and the receipts $1,509,158.85. Fifty-five per cent. of the pupils attend school daily in winter, and fifty per cent. in summer. There are 1,357 students in the colleges of the State; of this number Yale has 1,922. Connecticut contributes 465 students to her colleges.

Superstitions Cures.

Throughout England great faith is put in the curative virtues of "Good Friday Bread." In all parts of the country bread or biscuits are still baked and kept for medicinal purposes. Bread thus made never gets moldy, and is considered very useful, gruel in brandy, as a medicine, it is often kept for years, sometimes as many as twenty. A hot-cross bun is frequently preserved in a Northamptonshire as an amulet.

There are persons still living who have been "stroked" by a hanged man's hand for the dispelling of tumors; a dead man's hand being supposed to possess such virtues, by being passed time after time over the part affected. In Devonshire, England, there is a superstition, that if a person suffering from any disease throw a handkerchief on the coffin of a suicide, the disease will be cured as the handkerchief flies away. So, touching a dead body prevents the person so doing from dreaming of it.

Chamans are still worn. The "locky home," for instance, is calculated to protect against all sorts of adverse influence. It is a bone taken from the head of a sheep; and its form, which is that of the T cross, may, perhaps, have had something to do with the talismanic virtue with which it is endowed. This form of sacred symbol is frequently found on Druidical monuments. In Northamptonshire, and also in Yorkshire, the forehead of a hare, worn constantly in the pocket, is considered a life charm against the "rheumatiz."

Scott, in his discovery of Witchcraft, mentions the bone of a hare's foot, which, he says, "mitigateth the cramp." Another charm for rheumatism, which, however, the writer has only met with in one part, that is, in Birmingham, is a potato. So long as it is carried in the pocket, the bearer will never suffer from that malady.

The Bible Revision.

The fact that a revision of the authorized version of the Bible has been undertaken is well known, and the public has from time to time been informed of the general character and progress of the work. But a more particular statement may be of interest to many readers.

The fact that the version in common use is not regarded by scholars as a perfect translation of the original Hebrew and Greek Scriptures has been familiar to the masses, not only by the frequent corrections made by preachers in their pulpits, but by many independent translations which have been put out during the last twenty-five years. These translations have, indeed, met with no general favor, and have sometimes, by their imperfections and their ill-considered deviations from the old version, seemed to endear the latter more than ever to the popular heart; but they have, nevertheless, had the effect of disturbing the almost unquestioned confidence which men have begun to put in the authorized version. There are certain errors in it which almost every one has learned about. There are obsolete words which have to be explained, as to every child. There are inaccuracies which unnecessarily obscure what might easily be made clear. The progress of biblical and philological knowledge and the discovery of manuscripts of the New Testament for older and more accurate than those from which the authorized version was made, have rendered it possible to reproduce for common use the meaning of the Scriptures, and on the other to issue such a version as by the very method of its production would inspire confidence in its accuracy and would forestall other one-sided attempts to improve the common version.

Accordingly, in the spring of 1870, the convocation of Canterbury, representing the larger portion of the Anglican church, resolved to inaugurate a revision of the authorized version. Certain members of the convocation were designated to serve in the work, and other scholars, members both of the established church and of the non-conformist bodies, were added to the number, there being about fifty in all, of which one-half constitute the Old Testament company, and the other half the New Testament company. The most noteworthy facts respecting the work are as follows: (1) The revision is to be a revision of the old one, not a new translation. The purpose is "to introduce as few alterations as possible in the text of the authorized version, consistently with faithfulness." (2) The changes are, further, to be so limited as not to effect the general style of the old version. Archaic expressions are not to be changed when they cause no obscurity. When changes are made, the principal adopted is "to limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the authorized and earlier English versions." That is, if words not now found in the Bible must be introduced for the sake of faithfulness, they shall, if possible, be taken from the authorized version. (3) Every part of each of the Testaments is to be revised by the whole company charged with its revision. (4) Every book of the Bible is to be revised by two, and at the second revision a vote of two-thirds is necessary in order to change any reading of the authorized version.

In the autumn of 1872, at the request of the British committee, a revision commission was organized in the United States, consisting of about twenty-five members, divided into two companies, like the British committee. It consists of representative scholars of the leading Protestant denominations. The members of the commission, and this is carefully examined and compared with the authorized version and with the original text by each member for himself then in the monthly meetings of two days duration each, carried on by the members of the commission, and at the proposed changes. They resolve to retain the reading of the authorized version, or to make changes not proposed by the British committee, or to modify the changes proposed by the British. When this work is done twice, it is sent to England, where it is made use of by the British company in their second revision. The second revision is then transmitted to the American committee, who then again compare the differences, and decide whether they will adhere to their former proposals or acquiesce in the British revision. In this way, by successive comparisons, and sometimes by special discussions of the more important passages, the number of the divergencies is reduced as much as possible. The relations between the two committees are perfectly friendly, and the members of different denominations have on neither side of the ocean led to any friction.

The revision of the New Testament is now nearly complete. That of the Old Testament will not be ready for publication for about three years. In England the university presses have engaged to publish the revised Bible, and as they will have a copyright on it, they bear the expenses incurred by the British revisers in their work. In the United States there will be no copyright, and the American revisers not only devote their time and study to the work of the revision, but also assume the pecuniary expense of it, except in so far as interested friends voluntarily contribute money for this purpose. Up to the present time such contributions have been sufficient to meet the actual expenses incurred by the committee. It is to be hoped that this aid will be continued. Less than $2,000 a year will be needed for the short period during which the work is to continue. A finance committee has been organized,

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Harrowing winter grain is a practice now generally adopted, and there are many good harrows made especially for this purpose, with teeth that slope backwards, or that may be reversed for ordinary work. Harrowing after applying fertilizers or sowing grass or clover seed is doubly useful.

Cracked Wheat—Soak it the same as oatmeal, and as it is apt to burn, put it in a little tin pail, and set the pail in a kettle of boiling water; cover closely and let it boil half or three quarters of an hour. Stir this into boiling water, the same as oatmeal.

Oatmeal Soup.—Put a pint of oatmeal to soak in warm water a few hours before using. Put in just water enough to cover it, then pour this mixture into boiling water, a little at a time, with a good pinch of salt, and let it cook slowly the same as a cornmeal pudding, for half an hour or longer. A pudding can be made of it by using eggs, milk, sugar, raisins and cinnamon, the same as for other puddings.

Sweet Rusk.—One pint warm milk, half cup of butter, one cup of sugar, two eggs, one teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls of yeast make a sponge with milk and yeast; add flour for this batter; rise over night; in the morning add butter, eggs and sugar; beat well together; add salt and flour enough for soft dough; mold with the hands into balls; let them rise very light and bake; wash the tops with a soft cloth dipped in molasses and water.

Barley should not be considered as merely a material for brewing. There is no better grain for horses, and much better for cows and pigs. The two-rowed variety yields more than the six-rowed, but the six-rowed brings ten cents more from the masts. Two-rowed is the better for fodder purposes also, and a good yield of barley the soil must be rich and rich, otherwise oats should be sown.

Baked Apple Dumpling.—Make a paste with three parts flour, two parts butter, a pinch of salt and sufficient water to make a stiff dough. Roll out one-quarter of an inch to three-eighths of an inch thick, of sufficient size to enclose an apple. Place an apple, peeled and cored, on each sheet, fill the core with brown sugar or apricot jam, close up the paste well over it and bake in a moderate oven till a good color is obtained.

Experience with the Colorado beetle should prompt the early planting of potatoes; also about the middle of the season, a good preparation of the soil must be made, and rich, otherwise oats should be sown.

An early top-dressing of artificial manure upon fall grain and grass fields is often of the greatest advantage. The ground is now moist and mellow, and the soluble fertilizers are at once ready to be utilized. We have seen the effect in the changed color of the foliage in twelve hours after an application, when a gentle shower or fall rain immediately afterwards. If the fertilizer can be sown during a shower so much the better, otherwise we choose the afternoon for the work, so that the dew of the night may act as a rapid solvent.

Tapioea Pudding.—Three-quarters cup of tapioca, one quart of water, one quart of sugar, four eggs, butter the size of a walnut; put your tapioca into a pudding-dish, cover well with water, and let soak about an hour; then add the sugar, butter and eggs, and stir well together. Bake in a moderate oven until nearly thick enough to eat, stirring every fifteen or twenty minutes; whip the whites of the eggs and mix with the pudding, and serve with lemon juice and one teaspoonful of essence of lemon; pour over the pudding and brown.

The sale of Monticello. The old home of Thomas Jefferson has passed under the auctioneer's hammer and been bid off by Jefferson M. Levy, of the principal heir, for $150,000. The great country-seat of the third President stands upon a little mountain spur three miles from Charlottesville, and looks down upon the gap through which the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad now runs. The estate is a view of rare beauty and variety. In national repute, Monticello now stands next to Mount Vernon, though as the years go by, cooling political passions and giving fitting historical background to the great events of our life, the last resting place of the martyred Lincoln must take the second rank in universal veneration. It was here in Monticello where Jefferson practiced that unflinching hospitality which made his home known far and wide, but which finally involved him so deeply in debt that he asked the Virginia Legislature to permit him to dispose of the estate by lottery—a scheme which was never carried out. And here on this estate the great advocate of civil and religious liberty lies buried. The author of our magna charta of freedom gave his own directions for the placing of his mausoleum. "Choose," he wrote, "some unfrequented vale in the park, where no sound to break the stillness but a brook that bubbling winds among the woods,—no mark of human shape that has been there,—unless the skeleton of some poor wretch who sought this place for a refuge in his old age. Let it be among ancient and venerable oaks; intersperse some gloomy evergreens. Appropriate one-half to the use of my family; the other to strangers, servants, etc. Let the exit look upon a small and distant part of the Blue Mountains." These directions were followed, and his remains rest in very much such a spot as Jefferson indicated. There are thirty graves there now, and the sacred ground is partly inclosed by a high brick wall, but time and neglect have made sad havoc of a portion of it. The iron gates are locked with rust, while Virginia creepers, grass, and eglantine in their season drap the crumbling walls. The grave of Jefferson is marked by a granite obelisk, nine feet high, and resting on a base three feet square. The obelisk was made from a sketch found among his papers, and on it was placed this inscription: "DEATH OF JEFFERSON, BORN APRIL 2, O. S. 1743; DIED JULY 4, 1826."—Albany Evening Journal.

Poultry Information.

At a recent meeting of the Lancaster County (Pa.) Poultry Association one member said that he had found by experiments that chalk, pounded into small pieces, was eaten with a relish by the hens, which would eat it when they would not touch lime, and he thought it had the desired effect. From it his fowls laid all winter. Burnt corn and oyster-shells were also recommended as a good thing to put in their drinking water. In answering the question, "What is the best barn-yard fow?" another member said: "If the first requisite in the farm-yard is the production of eggs, he had no hesitation in recommending the Leghorn variety; that is, if the farmer takes care of his chickens. But on the other hand, as the production of eggs is not everything, the farmer wants a chicken that is worth something in the market. He thought the best chicken was the Plymouth Rock, good layers, good hatchers, etc., only one breed could be raised he would choose it."

Haze is a good cake without eggs. One and one-half cups of milk, three and two-thirds cups of prepared flour, one heaping cup of sugar, a little salt, and nutmeg (or cinnamon), and plenty of raisins, or currants if preferred. When you have stewed prunes, substitute the juice (sweetened to taste) for milk; it gives a delicious flavor.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly for April.

"But you know, pa," said the farmer's daughter, when he spoke to her about the addresses of his neighbors' sons—"you know, pa, that ma wants me to marry a man of culture."—"So do I, my dear—so do I; and there's no better culture in the country than agriculture."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Harrowing winter grain is a practice now generally adopted, and there are many good harrows made especially for this purpose, with teeth that slope backwards, or that may be reversed for ordinary work. Harrowing after applying fertilizers or sowing grass or clover seed is doubly useful.

Cracked Wheat—Soak it the same as oatmeal, and as it is apt to burn, put it in a little tin pail, and set the pail in a kettle of boiling water; cover closely and let it boil half or three quarters of an hour. Stir this into boiling water, the same as oatmeal.

Oatmeal Soup.—Put a pint of oatmeal to soak in warm water a few hours before using. Put in just water enough to cover it, then pour this mixture into boiling water, a little at a time, with a good pinch of salt, and let it cook slowly the same as a cornmeal pudding, for half an hour or longer. A pudding can be made of it by using eggs, milk, sugar, raisins and cinnamon, the same as for other puddings.

Sweet Rusk.—One pint warm milk, half cup of butter, one cup of sugar, two eggs, one teaspoonful salt, two tablespoonfuls of yeast make a sponge with milk and yeast; add flour for this batter; rise over night; in the morning add butter, eggs and sugar; beat well together; add salt and flour enough for soft dough; mold with the hands into balls; let them rise very light and bake; wash the tops with a soft cloth dipped in molasses and water.

Barley should not be considered as merely a material for brewing. There is no better grain for horses, and much better for cows and pigs. The two-rowed variety yields more than the six-rowed, but the six-rowed brings ten cents more from the masts. Two-rowed is the better for fodder purposes also, and a good yield of barley the soil must be rich and rich, otherwise oats should be sown.

Baked Apple Dumpling.—Make a paste with three parts flour, two parts butter, a pinch of salt and sufficient water to make a stiff dough. Roll out one-quarter of an inch to three-eighths of an inch thick, of sufficient size to enclose an apple. Place an apple, peeled and cored, on each sheet, fill the core with brown sugar or apricot jam, close up the paste well over it and bake in a moderate oven till a good color is obtained.

Experience with the Colorado beetle should prompt the early planting of potatoes; also about the middle of the season, a good preparation of the soil must be made, and rich, otherwise oats should be sown.

An early top-dressing of artificial manure upon fall grain and grass fields is often of the greatest advantage. The ground is now moist and mellow, and the soluble fertilizers are at once ready to be utilized. We have seen the effect in the changed color of the foliage in twelve hours after an application, when a gentle shower or fall rain immediately afterwards. If the fertilizer can be sown during a shower so much the better, otherwise we choose the afternoon for the work, so that the dew of the night may act as a rapid solvent.

Tapioea Pudding.—Three-quarters cup of tapioca, one quart of water, one quart of sugar, four eggs, butter the size of a walnut; put your tapioca into a pudding-dish, cover well with water, and let soak about an hour; then add the sugar, butter and eggs, and stir well together. Bake in a moderate oven until nearly thick enough to eat, stirring every fifteen or twenty minutes; whip the whites of the eggs and mix with the pudding, and serve with lemon juice and one teaspoonful of essence of lemon; pour over the pudding and brown.

The sale of Monticello. The old home of Thomas Jefferson has passed under the auctioneer's hammer and been bid off by Jefferson M. Levy, of the principal heir, for $150,000. The great country-seat of the third President stands upon a little mountain spur three miles from Charlottesville, and looks down upon the gap through which the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad now runs. The estate is a view of rare beauty and variety. In national repute, Monticello now stands next to Mount Vernon, though as the years go by, cooling political passions and giving fitting historical background to the great events of our life, the last resting place of the martyred Lincoln must take the second rank in universal veneration. It was here in Monticello where Jefferson practiced that unflinching hospitality which made his home known far and wide, but which finally involved him so deeply in debt that he asked the Virginia Legislature to permit him to dispose of the estate by lottery—a scheme which was never carried out. And here on this estate the great advocate of civil and religious liberty lies buried. The author of our magna charta of freedom gave his own directions for the placing of his mausoleum. "Choose," he wrote, "some unfrequented vale in the park, where no sound to break the stillness but a brook that bubbling winds among the woods,—no mark of human shape that has been there,—unless the skeleton of some poor wretch who sought this place for a refuge in his old age. Let it be among ancient and venerable oaks; intersperse some gloomy evergreens. Appropriate one-half to the use of my family; the other to strangers, servants, etc. Let the exit look upon a small and distant part of the Blue Mountains." These directions were followed, and his remains rest in very much such a spot as Jefferson indicated. There are thirty graves there now, and the sacred ground is partly inclosed by a high brick wall, but time and neglect have made sad havoc of a portion of it. The iron gates are locked with rust, while Virginia creepers, grass, and eglantine in their season drap the crumbling walls. The grave of Jefferson is marked by a granite obelisk, nine feet high, and resting on a base three feet square. The obelisk was made from a sketch found among his papers, and on it was placed this inscription: "DEATH OF JEFFERSON, BORN APRIL 2, O. S. 1743; DIED JULY 4, 1826."—Albany Evening Journal.

A Woman Burnt Alive as a Witch.

Early last month a woman named Agafina Ignatieva was burned as a witch by the peasants in the village of Vratshewo, in the Government of Novgorod. It seems that the wretched woman, who was the widow of a soldier, had the reputation of being a sorceress and witch, and strove to promote this delusion by every means in her power. The peasants of the whole neighboring district had such a dread of her powers of mischief that they endeavored even to anticipate her wishes, and, although an absolute pauper, she lived very comfortably on the contributions spontaneously made to her. There were many persons in the district suffering from epilepsy, and it was popularly believed that the witch had thus punished them for offending her in some way.

One of these epileptic sufferers, a girl from a distant village, besought some peasants to burn the witch, and so release her from her sufferings. At an assembly of headmen and seniors of the village it was resolved to extinguish the source of mischief. They proceeded to her hut, which they found fastened up. They broke it open, discovered the wretched woman, charged her with the crime, and then nailed up the window and door to prevent her escape. By this time over 200 men had assembled around the hut, and amid their jeers and shouts of exultation it was set on fire, and the crowd remained until it was quite consumed. The sum of twenty-one roubles and ninety copecks (nearly $16.50) was collected and offered to the rural policeman as a bribe to secure his silence. But he rejected it, and so the terrible tragedy came to light.—St. Petersburg Government Messenger.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Willie's Davis gets a pension for his services in the Mexican war. It is not so much importance to the people of the United States, as that every one making butter should procure from their milk-keeper, look called "Hire to Infer." Makers, and read it carefully. It contains needed aids and hints, which, if followed, will always produce better of the very best quality. The book is distributed free by the Allan Manufacturing Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

A Wise Deacon.

"Deacon Wilber, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to and fro."

"Yes, Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used two bottles in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. These doctors worth of it kept me all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors only two hundred dollars to keep you the same time. I guess you will take my medicine hereafter."—See other column.

A Word to Doubtfuls. There is a good old English maxim that teaches us to "believe every man honest until we know him to be a villain." American custom seems to have reversed this law and appears to make every man a villain until he has proved himself an honest man. As with people, so with things. Every article placed in our markets can lay claim to popular favor upon intrinsic merit and value alone. Continued popularity, therefore, is proof positive of intrinsic excellence. Dr. Pierce's Family Remedies are far more popular to-day than ever before. The people have tested them and know them to be genuine remedies for the diseases they are recommended to cure. The Golden Medical Discovery and Peppermint Cure are the best alternative, tonic, and cathartic remedies that can be used in chronic diseases. And Dr. Pierce's Family Remedies, as a never-failing remedy for Female Diseases, would have alone secured to its discoverer the fame he has so richly won. Dr. Saxe's Catarrh Remedy, of which Dr. Pierce is also proprietor, is recommended by those who have tested its virtues as a safe and reliable remedy for catarrh in its worst form.

Chew Jackson's Best Sweet Navy Tobacco.

Graefenberg Vegetable Pills. Are the mildest ever known, they cure HEADACHE, BILIOUSNESS, LIVER COMPLAINT, INDIGESTION, No griping or nausea. These Tone up the system and restore vigor to the suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

Read This! Centa is a new and powerful People's Combination Box, containing the

Chicago Eighteen Dollar PHOSPHATE

Speaks for Itself.

AGENTS WANTED FOR THE PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WORLD

IF YOU WANT THE BEST THING IN THE WEST LANDS IN KANSAS

AGENTS, READ THIS.

TEACHERS WANTED

THE "Little Detective"

GANCER

INSTITUTE.

MANY THINK

PIANOS

ORANGE COUNTY BUTTER POWDER

Increases the Quantity 6 per cent. Improves the Quality 20 per cent. Gives a rich golden color. The market value of your Butter enhanced 5 cents per pound. The labor of hours reduced to minutes. Keeps the Butter fresh the year round.

Time, 45 minutes; result, 45 lbs. butter; color good, and quality at least five cents per pound better.

Sold by all Grocers, Druggists and General Storekeepers. Price $5.00 per box. Butter 30 cents, or send for book. P. O. Box 10, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE "Little Detective"

TEACHERS WANTED

THE "Little Detective"

GANCER

INSTITUTE.

MANY THINK

PIANOS

ORANGE COUNTY BUTTER POWDER

Increases the Quantity 6 per cent. Improves the Quality 20 per cent. Gives a rich golden color. The market value of your Butter enhanced 5 cents per pound. The labor of hours reduced to minutes. Keeps the Butter fresh the year round.

Time, 45 minutes; result, 45 lbs. butter; color good, and quality at least five cents per pound better.

Sold by all Grocers, Druggists and General Storekeepers. Price $5.00 per box. Butter 30 cents, or send for book. P. O. Box 10, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE "Little Detective"

TEACHERS WANTED

THE "Little Detective"

GANCER

INSTITUTE.

KANSAS FARMS FREE HOMES

HOW TO GET THEM

WE desire to make it known, far and wide, that our

WE send 100 Labels, stamped with your name and

ADVERTISERS

DESIRING TO REACH THE READERS OF THIS STATE

CAN DO SO IN THE Cheapest and Best Manner

BY ADDRESSING

Road-Master's Assistant

Section-Master's Guide.

DEMOREST'S Illustrated Monthly Magazine.

What to Wear, semi-annual.

THE HOP BITTERS

AGENTS WANTED FOR THE PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WORLD

IF YOU WANT THE BEST THING IN THE WEST LANDS IN KANSAS

AGENTS, READ THIS.

TEACHERS WANTED

THE "Little Detective"

GANCER

INSTITUTE.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
SHERIFF'S LICENSE.
NOTICE.
TO MERCHANTS, TRADERS, AND OTHERS.

All persons and bodies corporate or politic in Garrett county, who are, or shall be, exercising or pursuing any business, or shall be doing any act or thing, or shall be in the occupation of any house or place for any purpose for which a license is made necessary by the laws of Maryland, are HEREBY WARNED TO OBTAIN A LICENSE OR RENEW THE SAME ON OR BEFORE THE

FIRST DAY OF MAY, 1879, under the penalties prescribed by said law, for the infraction thereof.

These interested are notified of the following requirements of the License Laws:

TRADERS' LICENSES.
The amount to be paid by Traders for a license (the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath) is as follows:
If the applicant's stock in trade does not exceed $1,000 $12.00
Over $1,000 and not over $2,000 18.00
Over $2,000 and not over $3,000 24.00
Over $3,000 and not over $4,000 30.00
Over $4,000 and not over $5,000 36.00
Over $5,000 and not over $6,000 42.00
Over $6,000 and not over $7,000 48.00
Over $7,000 and not over $8,000 54.00
Over $8,000 and not over $9,000 60.00
Over $9,000 and not over $10,000 66.00
Over $10,000 and not over $12,000 72.00
Over $12,000 and not over $14,000 78.00
Over $14,000 and not over $16,000 84.00
Over $16,000 and not over $18,000 90.00
Over $18,000 and not over $20,000 96.00
Over $20,000 and not over $25,000 120.00
Over $25,000 and not over $30,000 144.00
Over $30,000 and not over $35,000 168.00
Over $35,000 and not over $40,000 192.00
Over $40,000 and not over $45,000 216.00
Over $45,000 and not over $50,000 240.00
Over $50,000 and not over $55,000 264.00
Over $55,000 and not over $60,000 288.00
Over $60,000 and not over $65,000 312.00
Over $65,000 and not over $70,000 336.00
Over $70,000 and not over $75,000 360.00
Over $75,000 and not over $80,000 384.00
Over $80,000 and not over $85,000 408.00
Over $85,000 and not over $90,000 432.00
Over $90,000 and not over $95,000 456.00
Over $95,000 and not over $100,000 480.00

The applicant must either make oath, as heretofore, before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the county where he is engaged in business, of the amount of goods kept on hand at the principal season of sale, or the oath may be administered by a Justice of the Peace, when the person wanting a license applies through an agent.

Persons may sell salt to cure fish in March, April and May without license.

Vendors of Cakes, and vendors of Beer and Cider, who are makers of such beer and cider (lager beer excepted) are not required to pay license.

LICENSES TO ORDINARIES OR TAVERN KEEPERS.

The licensees to Ordinaries and Tavern Keepers to sell spirituous or fermented liquor, or lager beer in quantities less than a pint any one time are as follows:

If the license is to be paid by the keeper of the house, the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath is as follows:
Over $100 and not over $200 $25.00
Over $200 and not over $300 30.00
Over $300 and not over $400 35.00
Over $400 and not over $500 40.00
Over $500 and not over $600 45.00
Over $600 and not over $700 50.00
Over $700 and not over $800 55.00
Over $800 and not over $900 60.00
Over $900 and not over $1,000 65.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,200 70.00
Over $1,200 and not over $1,400 75.00
Over $1,400 and not over $1,600 80.00
Over $1,600 and not over $1,800 85.00
Over $1,800 and not over $2,000 90.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 100.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 110.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 120.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 130.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 140.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 150.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 160.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 170.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 180.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 190.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 200.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 210.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 220.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 230.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 240.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 250.00

LICENSES TO RETAILERS OF SPIRITUOUS OR FERMENTED LIQUORS OR LAGER BEER.

The amount of license to be paid by retailers of spirituous and fermented liquors or lager beer are as follows:

If the value of the stock in trade be $500 or less $18.00
Over $500 and not over $1,000 24.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,500 30.00
Over $1,500 and not over $2,000 36.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 42.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 48.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 54.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 60.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 66.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 72.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 78.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 84.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 90.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 96.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 102.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 108.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 114.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 120.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 126.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 132.00

OYSTER AND EATING HOUSES.

The license to be paid by the keepers of oyster and eating houses is $50.00 throughout the State.

Persons vending Milinery and other small articles, whose stock is not over $500, to pay a license of $50.00 annually, but if over that amount they are required to pay the same license as other persons, and to be made as the amount of stock at the principal season of the year.

LICENSES TO OWNERS AND KEEPERS OF STALLIONS OR JACKS.

The owner or keeper of every Stallion or Jack shall, before being permitted to stand or station such animal, pay to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of some one of the counties in this State, the license fee, which he intends to ask or receive for the season of one mare; and the receipt of the said Clerk, with the seal of his Court attached thereto for said sum shall be the license for stationing or standing such Stallion or Jack, for one year from the date thereof; provided, that in no case shall the sum directed to be paid by this section, for such license, be less than ten dollars; and that every Stallion or Jack upon which the said tax is paid shall be exempt from all other tax.

HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS.

AN ACT to amend the twenty-first and twenty-second Sections of the fifty-sixth Article of the Code of Public General Laws relating to the Licenses of Hawkers and Peddlers.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the twenty-first and twenty-second Sections of the fifty-sixth Article of the Code of Public General Laws, relating to the Licenses of Hawkers and Peddlers, be and the same is hereby repeated, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof:

"Twenty-one. For every such license, not to extend beyond the county in which the same may be issued, there shall be paid the following rates, to-wit:

For every license to travel on foot, the sum of $4.00
To travel with a horse or other beast of burden and wagon and other vehicle, the sum of $5.00
With two horses or other beasts of burden and wagon and other vehicles, the sum of $7.00
For every such license extended over the whole Eastern Shore, or the whole Western Shore, there shall be paid the following rates, to-wit:

For license to travel on foot $10.00
To travel with a horse or other beast of burden and wagon or other vehicle, the sum of $12.00
With two horses or other beasts of burden and wagon or other vehicle, the sum of $15.00

"Twenty-two. No such license shall be granted to any other than a white person, or to any Hawker or Peddler in the name or style of a partnership or company, and but one person shall act under any such license.

AMENDMENT TO THE LICENSE LAW.

Passed by the General Assembly of Maryland at the Regular Session, commencing Jan. 1st, 1872, relating to License Chap. 15, page 32.

AN ACT to amend the forty-second section relating to the granting of licenses to traders Article fifty-six of the Code of Public General Laws.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the forty-second section of Article fifty-six of the Code of Public General Laws, relating to the granting of Licenses to Traders, be and the same is hereby repeated, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof:

From one to ten full sets of stock, the sum of $10.00
From ten to twenty full sets of stock, the sum of $15.00
From twenty to thirty full sets of stock, the sum of $20.00
From thirty to forty full sets of stock, the sum of $25.00
From forty to fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $30.00
From fifty to sixty full sets of stock, the sum of $35.00
From sixty to seventy full sets of stock, the sum of $40.00
From seventy to eighty full sets of stock, the sum of $45.00
From eighty to ninety full sets of stock, the sum of $50.00
From ninety to one hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $55.00
From one hundred to one hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $60.00
From one hundred and fifty to two hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $65.00
From two hundred to two hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $70.00
From two hundred and fifty to three hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $75.00
From three hundred to three hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $80.00
From three hundred and fifty to four hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $85.00
From four hundred to four hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $90.00
From four hundred and fifty to five hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $95.00
From five hundred to five hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $100.00
From five hundred and fifty to six hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $105.00
From six hundred to six hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $110.00
From six hundred and fifty to seven hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $115.00
From seven hundred to seven hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $120.00
From seven hundred and fifty to eight hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $125.00
From eight hundred to eight hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $130.00
From eight hundred and fifty to nine hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $135.00
From nine hundred to nine hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $140.00
From nine hundred and fifty to one thousand full sets of stock, the sum of $145.00

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

When any person, body politic, or corporate, shall propose to sell or transfer any real estate, or any interest therein, or any right or claim, or any other thing, or shall be in the occupation of any house or place for any purpose for which a license is made necessary by the laws of Maryland, are HEREBY WARNED TO OBTAIN A LICENSE OR RENEW THE SAME ON OR BEFORE THE

FIRST DAY OF MAY, 1879, under the penalties prescribed by said law, for the infraction thereof.

These interested are notified of the following requirements of the License Laws:

TRADERS' LICENSES.
The amount to be paid by Traders for a license (the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath) is as follows:
If the applicant's stock in trade does not exceed $1,000 $12.00
Over $1,000 and not over $2,000 18.00
Over $2,000 and not over $3,000 24.00
Over $3,000 and not over $4,000 30.00
Over $4,000 and not over $5,000 36.00
Over $5,000 and not over $6,000 42.00
Over $6,000 and not over $7,000 48.00
Over $7,000 and not over $8,000 54.00
Over $8,000 and not over $9,000 60.00
Over $9,000 and not over $10,000 66.00
Over $10,000 and not over $12,000 72.00
Over $12,000 and not over $14,000 78.00
Over $14,000 and not over $16,000 84.00
Over $16,000 and not over $18,000 90.00
Over $18,000 and not over $20,000 96.00
Over $20,000 and not over $25,000 120.00
Over $25,000 and not over $30,000 144.00
Over $30,000 and not over $35,000 168.00
Over $35,000 and not over $40,000 192.00
Over $40,000 and not over $45,000 216.00
Over $45,000 and not over $50,000 240.00
Over $50,000 and not over $55,000 264.00
Over $55,000 and not over $60,000 288.00
Over $60,000 and not over $65,000 312.00
Over $65,000 and not over $70,000 336.00
Over $70,000 and not over $75,000 360.00
Over $75,000 and not over $80,000 384.00
Over $80,000 and not over $85,000 408.00
Over $85,000 and not over $90,000 432.00
Over $90,000 and not over $95,000 456.00
Over $95,000 and not over $100,000 480.00

The applicant must either make oath, as heretofore, before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the county where he is engaged in business, of the amount of goods kept on hand at the principal season of sale, or the oath may be administered by a Justice of the Peace, when the person wanting a license applies through an agent.

Persons may sell salt to cure fish in March, April and May without license.

Vendors of Cakes, and vendors of Beer and Cider, who are makers of such beer and cider (lager beer excepted) are not required to pay license.

LICENSES TO ORDINARIES OR TAVERN KEEPERS.

The licensees to Ordinaries and Tavern Keepers to sell spirituous or fermented liquor, or lager beer in quantities less than a pint any one time are as follows:

If the license is to be paid by the keeper of the house, the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath is as follows:
Over $100 and not over $200 $25.00
Over $200 and not over $300 30.00
Over $300 and not over $400 35.00
Over $400 and not over $500 40.00
Over $500 and not over $600 45.00
Over $600 and not over $700 50.00
Over $700 and not over $800 55.00
Over $800 and not over $900 60.00
Over $900 and not over $1,000 65.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,200 70.00
Over $1,200 and not over $1,400 75.00
Over $1,400 and not over $1,600 80.00
Over $1,600 and not over $1,800 85.00
Over $1,800 and not over $2,000 90.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 100.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 110.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 120.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 130.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 140.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 150.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 160.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 170.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 180.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 190.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 200.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 210.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 220.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 230.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 240.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 250.00

LICENSES TO RETAILERS OF SPIRITUOUS OR FERMENTED LIQUORS OR LAGER BEER.

The amount of license to be paid by retailers of spirituous and fermented liquors or lager beer are as follows:

If the value of the stock in trade be $500 or less $18.00
Over $500 and not over $1,000 24.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,500 30.00
Over $1,500 and not over $2,000 36.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 42.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 48.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 54.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 60.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 66.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 72.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 78.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 84.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 90.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 96.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 102.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 108.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 114.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 120.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 126.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 132.00

OYSTER AND EATING HOUSES.

The license to be paid by the keepers of oyster and eating houses is $50.00 throughout the State.

Persons vending Milinery and other small articles, whose stock is not over $500, to pay a license of $50.00 annually, but if over that amount they are required to pay the same license as other persons, and to be made as the amount of stock at the principal season of the year.

LICENSES TO OWNERS AND KEEPERS OF STALLIONS OR JACKS.

The owner or keeper of every Stallion or Jack shall, before being permitted to stand or station such animal, pay to the Clerk of the Circuit Court of some one of the counties in this State, the license fee, which he intends to ask or receive for the season of one mare; and the receipt of the said Clerk, with the seal of his Court attached thereto for said sum shall be the license for stationing or standing such Stallion or Jack, for one year from the date thereof; provided, that in no case shall the sum directed to be paid by this section, for such license, be less than ten dollars; and that every Stallion or Jack upon which the said tax is paid shall be exempt from all other tax.

HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS.

AN ACT to amend the twenty-first and twenty-second Sections of the fifty-sixth Article of the Code of Public General Laws relating to the Licenses of Hawkers and Peddlers.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the twenty-first and twenty-second Sections of the fifty-sixth Article of the Code of Public General Laws, relating to the Licenses of Hawkers and Peddlers, be and the same is hereby repeated, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof:

"Twenty-one. For every such license, not to extend beyond the county in which the same may be issued, there shall be paid the following rates, to-wit:

For every license to travel on foot, the sum of $4.00
To travel with a horse or other beast of burden and wagon and other vehicle, the sum of $5.00
With two horses or other beasts of burden and wagon and other vehicles, the sum of $7.00
For every such license extended over the whole Eastern Shore, or the whole Western Shore, there shall be paid the following rates, to-wit:

For license to travel on foot $10.00
To travel with a horse or other beast of burden and wagon or other vehicle, the sum of $12.00
With two horses or other beasts of burden and wagon or other vehicle, the sum of $15.00

"Twenty-two. No such license shall be granted to any other than a white person, or to any Hawker or Peddler in the name or style of a partnership or company, and but one person shall act under any such license.

AMENDMENT TO THE LICENSE LAW.

Passed by the General Assembly of Maryland at the Regular Session, commencing Jan. 1st, 1872, relating to License Chap. 15, page 32.

AN ACT to amend the forty-second section relating to the granting of licenses to traders Article fifty-six of the Code of Public General Laws.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the forty-second section of Article fifty-six of the Code of Public General Laws, relating to the granting of Licenses to Traders, be and the same is hereby repeated, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof:

From one to ten full sets of stock, the sum of $10.00
From ten to twenty full sets of stock, the sum of $15.00
From twenty to thirty full sets of stock, the sum of $20.00
From thirty to forty full sets of stock, the sum of $25.00
From forty to fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $30.00
From fifty to sixty full sets of stock, the sum of $35.00
From sixty to seventy full sets of stock, the sum of $40.00
From seventy to eighty full sets of stock, the sum of $45.00
From eighty to ninety full sets of stock, the sum of $50.00
From ninety to one hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $55.00
From one hundred to one hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $60.00
From one hundred and fifty to two hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $65.00
From two hundred to two hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $70.00
From two hundred and fifty to three hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $75.00
From three hundred to three hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $80.00
From three hundred and fifty to four hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $85.00
From four hundred to four hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $90.00
From four hundred and fifty to five hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $95.00
From five hundred to five hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $100.00
From five hundred and fifty to six hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $105.00
From six hundred to six hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $110.00
From six hundred and fifty to seven hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $115.00
From seven hundred to seven hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $120.00
From seven hundred and fifty to eight hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $125.00
From eight hundred to eight hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $130.00
From eight hundred and fifty to nine hundred full sets of stock, the sum of $135.00
From nine hundred to nine hundred and fifty full sets of stock, the sum of $140.00
From nine hundred and fifty to one thousand full sets of stock, the sum of $145.00

MISCELLANEOUS.

When any person, body politic, or corporate, shall propose to sell or transfer any real estate, or any interest therein, or any right or claim, or any other thing, or shall be in the occupation of any house or place for any purpose for which a license is made necessary by the laws of Maryland, are HEREBY WARNED TO OBTAIN A LICENSE OR RENEW THE SAME ON OR BEFORE THE

FIRST DAY OF MAY, 1879, under the penalties prescribed by said law, for the infraction thereof.

These interested are notified of the following requirements of the License Laws:

TRADERS' LICENSES.
The amount to be paid by Traders for a license (the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath) is as follows:
If the applicant's stock in trade does not exceed $1,000 $12.00
Over $1,000 and not over $2,000 18.00
Over $2,000 and not over $3,000 24.00
Over $3,000 and not over $4,000 30.00
Over $4,000 and not over $5,000 36.00
Over $5,000 and not over $6,000 42.00
Over $6,000 and not over $7,000 48.00
Over $7,000 and not over $8,000 54.00
Over $8,000 and not over $9,000 60.00
Over $9,000 and not over $10,000 66.00
Over $10,000 and not over $12,000 72.00
Over $12,000 and not over $14,000 78.00
Over $14,000 and not over $16,000 84.00
Over $16,000 and not over $18,000 90.00
Over $18,000 and not over $20,000 96.00
Over $20,000 and not over $25,000 120.00
Over $25,000 and not over $30,000 144.00
Over $30,000 and not over $35,000 168.00
Over $35,000 and not over $40,000 192.00
Over $40,000 and not over $45,000 216.00
Over $45,000 and not over $50,000 240.00
Over $50,000 and not over $55,000 264.00
Over $55,000 and not over $60,000 288.00
Over $60,000 and not over $65,000 312.00
Over $65,000 and not over $70,000 336.00
Over $70,000 and not over $75,000 360.00
Over $75,000 and not over $80,000 384.00
Over $80,000 and not over $85,000 408.00
Over $85,000 and not over $90,000 432.00
Over $90,000 and not over $95,000 456.00
Over $95,000 and not over $100,000 480.00

The applicant must either make oath, as heretofore, before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the county where he is engaged in business, of the amount of goods kept on hand at the principal season of sale, or the oath may be administered by a Justice of the Peace, when the person wanting a license applies through an agent.

Persons may sell salt to cure fish in March, April and May without license.

Vendors of Cakes, and vendors of Beer and Cider, who are makers of such beer and cider (lager beer excepted) are not required to pay license.

LICENSES TO ORDINARIES OR TAVERN KEEPERS.

The licensees to Ordinaries and Tavern Keepers to sell spirituous or fermented liquor, or lager beer in quantities less than a pint any one time are as follows:

If the license is to be paid by the keeper of the house, the amount of stock at the principal season of sale to be given under oath is as follows:
Over $100 and not over $200 $25.00
Over $200 and not over $300 30.00
Over $300 and not over $400 35.00
Over $400 and not over $500 40.00
Over $500 and not over $600 45.00
Over $600 and not over $700 50.00
Over $700 and not over $800 55.00
Over $800 and not over $900 60.00
Over $900 and not over $1,000 65.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,200 70.00
Over $1,200 and not over $1,400 75.00
Over $1,400 and not over $1,600 80.00
Over $1,600 and not over $1,800 85.00
Over $1,800 and not over $2,000 90.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 100.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 110.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 120.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 130.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 140.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 150.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 160.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 170.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 180.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 190.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 200.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 210.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 220.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 230.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 240.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 250.00

LICENSES TO RETAILERS OF SPIRITUOUS OR FERMENTED LIQUORS OR LAGER BEER.

The amount of license to be paid by retailers of spirituous and fermented liquors or lager beer are as follows:

If the value of the stock in trade be $500 or less $18.00
Over $500 and not over $1,000 24.00
Over $1,000 and not over $1,500 30.00
Over $1,500 and not over $2,000 36.00
Over $2,000 and not over $2,500 42.00
Over $2,500 and not over $3,000 48.00
Over $3,000 and not over $3,500 54.00
Over $3,500 and not over $4,000 60.00
Over $4,000 and not over $4,500 66.00
Over $4,500 and not over $5,000 72.00
Over $5,000 and not over $5,500 78.00
Over $5,500 and not over $6,000 84.00
Over $6,000 and not over $6,500 90.00
Over $6,500 and not over $7,000 96.00
Over $7,000 and not over $7,500 102.00
Over $7,500 and not over $8,000 108.00
Over $8,000 and not over $8,500 114.00
Over $8,500 and not over $9,000 120.00
Over $9,000 and not over $9,500 126.00
Over $9,500 and not over $10,000 132.00

OYSTER AND EATING HOUSES.

The license to be paid by the keepers of oyster and eating houses is $50.00 throughout the State.

Persons vending Milinery and other small articles, whose stock is not over $500, to pay a license of $50.00 annually, but if over that amount they are required to pay the same license as other persons, and to be made as the amount of stock at the principal season of the year.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1879.

NUMBER 9.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

GROCERIES, etc.
D. E. OFFUTT,
General Merchandise,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.
G. W. LEGG,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.
D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.
I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.
L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.
J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.
N. B. WAYMAN,
General Merchandise,
Cor. Third & Main Sts.
DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.
C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Collingwood's Hotel.
RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.
HOTELS.
COLLINGWOOD'S HOTEL,
W. M. COLLINGWOOD, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.
BOARDING HOUSES.
MRS. RALPH THAYER,
Oak and Third Streets.
DAVIS HOUSE,
Mrs. M. E. Davis, Proprietress,
Cor. Oak & Second Streets.
GEORGE BOSLEY'S,
Oak Street.
LIVERY STABLE.
THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.
STORES AND TINWARE.
G. A. SHIRER,
Oak street, near Second.
A general line of Stores and Tinware.
PHYSICIANS.
DR. J. LEE MCCOMBS,
Office on Main Street.
DR. E. H. BARTLETT,
Office Main St., opp. Bailey's Park.
MILLS.
GRIST AND SHINGLE MILLS,
PETER MARTIN, Proprietor,
Water Street.
OAKLAND WOOLEN MILLS,
SAM'L LAWTON, Proprietor.
PLASTERER.
JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.
BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.
GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.
SURVEYORS.
J. B. BRANT,
Office in Offutt's Building.
JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.
JEWELER.
A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Stumpe's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.
MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.
MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.
M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCombs' office.
MASON.
JAS. S. JOHNSON,
Residence on First street.
LOYD CHAMBERS,
Residence on Third street.
DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Cigars and Cigars.
G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,
Palm, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.
PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.
E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.
V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.
BLACKSMITHS.
CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.
P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.
Residence on Centre street.
GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.
JOSEPH M. CHIM,
Residence on Alder Street.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.
CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.
JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Fourth Street.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
Collections promptly attended to. d2s-y
GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,
Lower Floor.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
negotiation of land titles and collection of debts. Terms negotiated. d2s-y
J. W. VETTEL,
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 29-31.
THO. J. PEDDICORD, A. B. GOSDER, PEDDICORD & GOSDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of
West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-31.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG.

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary,
HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY IN THE
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-
CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and
Throat.
Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
April 21

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR.
OAKLAND, MD.
Respectfully announces to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity, that he has laid in his
usual large stock of
Spring and Summer Cloths,
Cassimeres, Vestings, etc.,
which he is prepared to make to order upon
the shortest notice and in the most
Neat and Fashionable Manner.
He invites all to call and examine his goods,
and leave their measure for a suit. He has
reduced the price for making clothes, but
Guarantees a Perfect Fit.
All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction. d2s-y
850 ACRES
OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Homopolis
Road, about six miles north east
from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and is
generally covered with good timber.
Would make several good farms.
Will be sold in bulk or in small
lots. Title good.
For particulars and terms apply to
this office or to the postoffice, Oak-
land, Garrett Co., Md.

INSOLVENT'S NOTICE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR GARRETT
COUNTY, MD., J. L. STALNAKER vs. L. C.
STALNAKER and his CREDITORS.
Ordered, this 21st day of December, 1878,
that L. C. Stalnaker give notice to his creditors, creditors and creditors, that the FIRST
MONDAY OF MAY, 1879, is fixed for the said
L. C. Stalnaker to appear in the Circuit Court
for Garrett County, to answer such claims
or allegations as his creditors, creditors
or creditors may present or allege against him;
and that a copy of this order be published in
some newspaper printed in the town of Oak-
land for three months prior to the said first Monday of May next, each notice.
W. H. TOWER,
Clerk Circuit Court for Garrett County.
True Copy—
J. H. TOWER, Clerk.

SELLERS' LIVER PILLS.

For sale at
J. H. TOWER, Clerk.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 27, 1879.

THE COMING SAVIOR.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The Prophet Isaiah lived in the eighth century before Christ, from the reign of Uzziah to that of Manasseh. Notwithstanding the reformation under Hezekiah, it was a period of general decay in the history of Judah, both as regards the character of the people and the power of the kingdom. The worship of God was neglected, idolatry increased, and public and private morals were greatly corrupted, and the Kingdom of Judah
was rapidly hastening toward the destruction
that had overtaken the Kingdom of Israel.
In those dark days stood forth, basely, with his wonderful insight into the future, a seer
and more penetrating than that of any other prophet. He beholds down the centuries the coming of the Messiah, and cheers the dis-hearted hearts of the people with the glorious promises of his person and kingdom.

Isa. 42, 1-10.

MEMORY VERSE, 1-4.

1 Behold my servant, whom I uphold;
mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my Spirit upon him, and he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.
2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.
3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.
4 He shall not fail, nor be discouraged, till he have judged the Gentiles: for he shall stand in the light of the Lord.
5 Thus saith God the Lord, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spreadeth the earth, and that which cometh
out of it: he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:
6 I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles:
7 To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.
8 I am the Lord; that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither shall I give my praise to any hand.
9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.
10 Since our fathers sinned, and have made themselves an idol, and have said, Peace shall be down upon us, and all shall be well: therefore shall we be as the heathen, and as the idolaters of the world.

HOME READINGS.

M. The coming savior, Isa. 42, 1-10.
Th. His purpose, John 3, 14-21.
F. His power, Isa. 42, 1-10.
Sa. The power, Matt. 28, 1-8.
S. His glory, Rev. 1, 4-20.
K. His baptism, Luke 2, 15-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.

This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Matt. 3, 17.

LESSON HYMN, 65.

Thy kingdom come, O God,
Thy reign, O Christ, begin;
Break with thine iron rod
The tyrannies of sin.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

Under whose reign in the Kingdom of Judah did Isaiah prophesy? Study a little of his life, and the circumstances of his prophesy.
Imagine him looking into the future, and seeing, as only one whom God inspires could see, the coming savior, the Lord's anointed.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. His name? v. 1; Isa. 42, 1-10.
2. How does he endow him? Matt. 3, 17.
3. For what purpose? Matt. 28, 1-8.
4. How is his endowment described? v. 2.
5. What shall he do for the Gentiles? v. 3.
6. How does he treat the weak and faint? v. 4.
7. What shall be the result of judgment in his hand? Psal. 36, 10.
8. How will he give up before his work is done?
How can we feel this spirit? 1 Pet. 1, 23-25.
9. His work, v. 5-7; Luke 4, 18-19.
10. Who is God? Gen. 1, 1.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. Of God's greatness? v. 1.
2. Of Christ's tenderness and pity? v. 2.
3. Of the whole world's opportunity of salvation? v. 3.

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Think of the gentle spirit and the mighty power of Jesus.
2. Remember that you may be meek and kind, and yet strong and successful.
3. A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. Luke 2, 32.
DOCTRINAL SIGNIFICANCE: The Divine message.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. Christ came as a servant, to save those that are enslaved. v. 1.
2. Christ was the chosen of God, as being the only one who could bear the burden of
sin. v. 1.
3. Christ was given to the world as God's highest token of love, his dearly beloved Son.
v. 1.
4. Christ was endowed with the Holy Ghost for his great work. v. 1.
5. Christ showed meekness, humility, and patience in all his ministry. v. 2.
6. Christ came to comfort troubled souls,
and condemn them. v. 3.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

7. Christ's cause has thus to wait for its fulfillment and complete triumph. v. 4.
8. Christ's work is to lead souls on from darkness to light and liberty. v. 7.
9. Christ came to save not one nation, but all nations. v. 6.

The Natural Result.

HIS STORY.

God knows I had no intention of killing Harry Smith, and yet I did.
It was not I, but the liquor. And here I am in jail, under sentence of death, and I die to-morrow. Oh!
but this is a fearful state to which I have come! Once I was as happy, joyous and light hearted a man as there was on earth, and to-night I am wretched, and in despair.
To-morrow I die, and before the sun sets again Frank Myers will be no more. But it is getting late and I must write this while I have time so that I may be a warning to others
not to follow in my footsteps.

I can hardly write it, now that I have begun, for it is so terrible to me
when I think of it that I can hardly believe that it is true; and I yet this small cell, the iron and grated door,
and the guard pacing back and forth,
ever and anon looking in, confirm
the fact that it is a reality.

Harry was the best friend I had.
At school we were always together,
and at college we were never separated, so that it grew to a saying that where one was the other was always to be found. Harry and I never quarreled, and yet—I killed him; and now I am to pay the penalty for it.
How was it? Oh, yes, I remember
now. We had taken a walk one evening and called on a young lady;
soon after we went again, and one night she brought in some wine. We both declined, but I wanted to take it, though to please Harry, who so sternly asked me not to touch it, I declined. Harry, on our way home, spoke in bitter terms of the custom of young ladies offering wine to gentlemen. I at first wondered, but after he had told me his story I did not for he had a brother who came to his death by rum, and who took his first glass of wine from a lady. We called again, but no wine was offered. I had been warned time and again, never
to touch a drop of any kind of liquor,
for I was of a temperment that could not control itself when once excited. Doctors had often told me that if I tasted liquor, no one could tell what the consequences might be.
Well, I did keep myself from it, tho'
it was very hard work to always refuse, and once I would have taken a glass of wine, but Harry spoke to me just as I was about to drink and brought me to myself. I used to call him my "guardian angel," for he was always looking after me. And if I had taken his advice on that fatal night he would now be alive, and I would be a free man.

There was to be a grand masquerade ball, and we were both invited.
Harry, knowing the management
who had the affair in charge, was certain that wine would be offered, and would be in abundance, and at once decided not to go; and at the same time urged and begged me not to go either. I did not make any promise. The ball was to be in a week's time, and I spent the most of my time trying to decide which I would do. I went over both sides of the question day after day and the evening of the ball came and I was still undecided. I had seen Harry every day, and argued the case so as to persuade him to go but all to no purpose. He was firm in his resolve not to attend and tried hard to persuade me not to go. He said he was afraid
I would yield to the temptation;
afraid of evil consequences; knew how hard a man's courage would be tried; knew my temperment; knew how I would be exposed to the danger, and was the more fearful from the fact that he would not be there to watch over me. Then I tried to get him to go for my sake, so that, if need be, he could look after me. But he quietly said he would not go, and I knew he could not be changed. I walked up and down, reasoning and trying to justify my course if I went,
until within an hour of the time.
Soon a crowd of fellows came in and asked if I were going. I had almost decided not to go, but when they came I thought I would, but could not fully make up my mind.
I again urged Harry, but he was unmovable, as I might have known
he would be, and so, in a pique, I consented to go, and we went out to prepare for the occasion, leaving Harry alone. The last sight I had of him he was sitting at the table, with his head bowed in his hands.

I went to the ball. The room was full of ladies and gentlemen, all in mask. The evening passed swiftly and pleasantly. I forgot Harry in my enjoyment. Wine had been passed and repassed, but I had resisted thus far. A young lady who had been my partner, and with whom I was conversing, asked if I would get her a glass of wine. I complied, and when I brought it to her she insisted upon my drinking, but I refused. She then went and got one, and urged it upon me. I tried to excuse myself, but she insisted, saying that it would be rude not to take it after she had gotten it for me. In a moment of weakness I drank it, and felt no worse for it. Soon I wished for another and drank it. This made my blood run faster and excited me very much. I had just drunk a third and was about to take a fourth when when I felt my hand grasped and the glass was thrown to the floor by, to me, an unknown person. I was already heated and excited, and quickly demanded who had so insulted me, but could not tell who it was on account of the mask. I tried to pull it off but could not. This enraged me the more, and I persisted in my efforts till it fell off, and there stood Harry. He tried to lead me away, but in my madness I called him a spy, a cheat, a false friend, and all that I could think of, and at last struck at him, the truest friend I ever had. Even this did not turn him against me, for he tried to quiet me and take me home. But I would not go; and before any one could prevent it, and before I was conscious of what I was doing, I drew a pistol

and shot him dead.

I remembered no more until I found myself in this cell. When I became sober I knew what I had done. I had killed my best friend;
the one who had borne with me so long, and who at the time was trying to do me a service. In due course my trial came off. The best of counsel was retained on my side. All the extenuating circumstances were taken into consideration, but to no avail. The judge charged the jury, and they left the box, but were soon back, and when the judge asked their verdict it was "guilty of murder and sentenced to be hanged." Then the judge passed sentence upon me, fixing the date of my execution six months distant. Then the Governor of the State was appealed to. Petitions were sent up, signed by many persons, but they did no good. The time drew nearer, nearer, nearer, and there was no hope of my being released. I ought not to be; I ought to pay the penalty. But oh, my poor mother and father; how can they stand it? That their only son should die a felon's death. It is just to me, but they have to suffer too. God in Heaven can I be forgiven for bringing such woe and sorrow upon my father and mother?

And now this is the last night.
I have seen the sun set for the last time. I shall soon see it rise for the last time, for it is nearly morning. I cannot sleep, and I cannot write any more. Let my sad fate be a warning to others never to taste a drop of the drink, for it ruins men here and will ruin them hereafter. But for it I should be as you are—free, and with no sin upon me. This is no time for trifling for my end is at hand. Do not, I pray young man, touch it in any form.

My lamp is out, and the sun is just rising; the sun of my life will ere long "go down while it is yet
day." A long farewell!

THE JAILOR'S STORY.

To-day we have had another instance of the effects of rum. This morning a fine, promising young man was hanged for the murder of a friend while under the influence of liquor. It did seem a pity that one so young, so handsome and so intelligent should die in this way; and yet it is but just. He took the life of a fellow creature. His friends tried every means in their power to save him, but it was of no avail. Petitions failed; lawyers failed; his father and mother failed, and to-day
he died. He made a short speech on the gallows in which he said that it was right that he should suffer, but bade his death to the wine glass.
And yet nothing is done to the man that sold the liquor. He can sell and kill and he is not tried, Frank Myers is not the only one I have seen die on the gallows from liquor. Since I have been jailer I have seen five, all of whom were driven to the commission of the crime by liquor. And yet the young men do not seem to take warning
by these terrible examples, another of which we have had to-day. Oh,
that they would be warned in time,
ere it is too late!

THE JAILOR'S STORY.

Three applications cured me of severe Rheumatic pain, and I cheerfully recommend Keller's Roman Liniment. CORNELIUS NORMAN, Lieutenant Metropolitan Police,
Washington, D. C.

Song of Confederate Brigadiers.

TO UNCLE SAM:

Southern votes shall rule the Nation
Somewhat as they did of old, Uncle Sam;
Rifle-shots of the plantation
Shall provide where votes are polled, Uncle Sam;

We will eat the soldiers' ration,
And hear their sorrows told;
We'll starve 'em out,
We'll starve 'em out,
We've got the upper hold!

CHORUS:

We'll starve 'em out!
We'll starve 'em out!
We'll starve 'em out,
We'll starve 'em out,
We've got the upper hold!

We'll humiliate the army,
And refuse to vote it bread, Uncle Sam;
If we shouldn't you may be no
And put fathers on my head, Uncle Sam;
O, those soldiers used to scare me,
But now they've turned and fled—
We'll starve 'em out,
We'll starve 'em out,
And give 'em not a red!

You've conquered in the battle
O, the day of strife so gory I
O, the horrid, horrid night, Uncle Sam!
When the Sovereign States in glory
Fought their battle for the right, Uncle Sam!
Let your soldiers tell the story
Now we've got the fellows tight;
We'll starve 'em out,
We'll starve 'em out,
It's cheaper than to fight!

The night after the attempt on General Drenten's life in St. Petersburg no less than forty-five persons,
male and female, were arrested,
many of them being of such high rank that special provision was made for their detention instead of sending them to the common prisons. Officers of the guard, court chamberlains
and concubines were among the number. Two unmarried daughters of one of the most prominent members of the present Ministry have been subjected to domiciliary arrest. As it cannot be supposed that the police are trying to prove their activity by these wholesale arrests, it is natural to conclude that there is some thing
more serious in the wind than a purely Socialistic conspiracy. Of two revolutionary printing offices just discovered at St. Petersburg, one was detected in an imperial cartridge manufactory, and the other in an imperial custom-house station. And what can be more significant than the following statement: "No furnishing apartments can henceforth be had at St. Petersburg, unless maps showing the situation of the rooms and the doors of entrance have been previously handed to the police." This measure is intended to facilitate arrests.

Secretary Sherman thinks the only error in Barnum's alleged prophecy,
that the Democrats would lose a million votes, was in placing the number of the lost at so small a figure.
He tells a correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial that what he saw and heard in New York confirmed
him in the belief that the Democrats would not escape with the loss of a million only. A prominent Democratic Congressman from the Middle States told him that unless there was a speedy change in the Democratic attitude the party could not carry half a dozen districts in all the Northern States. The size of the blunder begins to loom, but it is not yet apparent to the average Democratic Congressman.

The Southern idea of state rights is the latest canard. The general government is all right in appropriating money to fight the yellow fever
or to stamp out the cattle disease,
while the Northern states never ask help in these matters. The South used to demand United States troops to catch their runaway slaves, and it would be all right to enact a law prohibiting steamboat captains from transporting freedom to Kansas. But it is all wrong to protect the purity of the ballot-box or to see that the constitutional rights of the enfranchised slaves are not infringed by white leaguers and their votes for representatives in Congress nullified
by tissue ballots.

If General Hancock could manage to have the information promulgated that he owns a full-sized barrel and is eager to tap it in the interest of Reform, he would loom at once and rapidly as a Presidential candidate.

"If I had to walk from here to Baltimore for it, I would not be without Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in my family," is what we heard a lady say yesterday. Price 25 cents a bottle.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1.00 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, and necessarily for publication, but a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1879.

To Our Patrons.

THE REPUBLICAN has now been in existence over two years, and we believe that we cannot be accused of egotism when we say that it is the best paper ever published in the county. Such is the universal verdict. We feel that we have done our duty in the premises. How is it with our readers? Have you done all in your power to make it a success? Have you paid promptly for your subscription, advertising, and job work? It is clearly your duty to do so. It is true a great many of our patrons have been prompt in the discharge of their obligations, and we sincerely thank them for it, and shall improve every opportunity to further their interests; but a great many of our subscribers have paid us nothing, and are really a dead weight.

It is a disagreeable duty for us to be continually dunning our subscribers, but we must have money in order to carry on our business, which requires at least forty dollars a week. Court will be in session week after next, and we request and expect every person knowing himself indebted to us either call and settle or send the money by their neighbors who will be in attendance at Court. We wish to publish a lively paper during the campaign, and in order to do so we must have something with which to "grease" the machinery.

Gen. John A. Dix died in New York Monday night, aged 81 years.

Secretary Sherman's refunding operations have saved the country $15,000,000 yearly, but the debating societies at the Capital are spending $12,000 daily.

